THE GROCER opens its Seventh Volume with its best wishes to all its subscribers for a Happy New Year. We are now on the threshold of 1893, when its fruits are more largely under our control than they will ever be again. We should shape its beginning to correspond with the way we desire to end it. The trader will find the present a good time to renounce some of the habits and methods that he has found inimical to his prosperity. We do not recommend him to fetter the free play of his discretion by the adoption of unalterable rules. The breaking of a rule intended to be of cast iron inflexibility is demoralizing, and the steady observance of one that is adopted on what turns out to be mistaken grounds or incomplete knowledge prevents development. Begin the year with an open mind, that you may extend your knowledge and correct misapprehensions, and commit yourself to nothing more than general principles. If you have given too much credit in the past, make up your mind to give less this year, but do not rashly resolve that you will credit no man. If you have sold at too low a profit, keep constantly in the determination to realize a fuller margin, but do not take a vow that you will never meet a cut. You are enlightened by the lessons of last year, but there is no reason why you should become the slave of last year's experience. One year is not all your lifetime; much less is it all time; none of the knowledge you have derived from it or from any other year is infinite; you have therefore no warrant for adopting any inflexible rule, as by so doing you shut up the avenues of further knowledge, and you need to keep all of them open. The man who succeeds these days is the man of resources, who can promptly perceive and choose the course of action that suits the spur of the moment. No resolutions, cut and dried at the beginning of the year, will provide him with the wisdom necessary for all the exigencies he has to face. The most the trader can do now is to securely attach himself to the moorings of sound general principle.

THE GROCER undertakes to do its best to further the prosperity it wishes to its readers in its New Year salutation to them. But it also takes occasion to remind some of its advertisers that it offers them a resource whose potential wealth they do not fully extract. An advertisement is not a charm. It is a business medium, and its effectiveness depends upon the business attention it receives. It must always show that it is connected with a living original, and like every other live thing, it must change. The same old familiar card appearing every week for a year has all the vitality crushed out of it by its oppressive sameness. The advertisement needs to be renewed from the well-spring of its source in short periods. Those who change oftenest reap the most benefit. The spontaneous effects of an advertisement are not its full or even its best effects. The advertiser's space needs incess-sant cultivation, otherwise it will grow wild and barren. This is particularly true of a trade paper, whose readers look upon the advertisements as news, and read them with interest or with languor, according as they are fresh or stale. The merchant's advertising is a department of too much moment to be neglected. He looks after his travellers, keeps them informed by weekly advices of changes, of bargains, of special drives, of new arrivals, etc., and finds it is necessary to do so in order to get full returns from his outlay on travellers' account. He looks after his collections, is cautious about his buying, has the best care taken of his books, is careful about the selection of his accounts, and gives himself a great deal of worry about many other interests. But his advertising he too commonly neglects. Why? The reason appears to be that many advertisers have not a due appreciation of the value of advertising. They have not taken note of its growth as a modern business force. Its importance entitles it to an equal division of the merchant's administrative care with any of the interests mentioned above—travellers, buying, book-keeping, or any of the tactics of trade. In fact it is the best medium for the exercise of business tactics. Therefore, we advise our patrons to change their advertisements often, and study style, effect, and originality. The returns will warrant the extra thought and labor. The Market Notes are a strong supplementary feature to our advertising columns, and advertisers should make it a point to have something new every week in those Notes. Readers always scan them with the expectation of finding something of special interest to them.

The price of sugar, though so far unchanged at the refineries or wholesalers, shows symptoms of latent strength that may culminate in an advance before spring is here. Wholesale grocers who have tendered offers for future delivery are unable to place their contracts at present prices. The readiness of wholesalers to buy now on March account and the refusal of the refiners to take such business are evidences that the fundamental conditions of the market are beginning to be felt in the prospect for the Canadian trade. The raw market is very firm and would have had its way in affecting the price of refined before this but for the influence of the Sugar Trust in the United States, which keeps the price of refined down that it may depress raw, which it is yet buying.

Hamilton merchants are dissatisfied with the train service of the G.T.R. from Toronto. The cutting off of one forenoon train, which the railway company claims was not paying, brought the matter before the Board of Trade. Hamilton has been rather unfortunate in its relations with the G. T. R. people for some time. Toronto wholesalers have likewise complained of the limited train accommodation from this city to Hamilton. Our merchants found the long interval between trains a great inconvenience for the holiday trade, when early delivery was of paramount importance to retailers along that line. The Hamilton Board of Trade passed the following resolution: Resolved, after discussion, that in the interests of the business of Hamilton Mr. Seargeant be respectfully requested to have a passenger train put on to run between Toronto and Hamilton at some time between 8 a. m. and 10.30 a. m. each day, to be a local train between Oakville and Hamilton, stopping at intermediate stations.

The power conferred on the Governor in Council by certain clauses in various amendments to our Tariff Act, authorizing him to suspend the duty on sugar and molasses indirectly imported, has been exercised. The last issue of the Canada Gazette contains the proclamations of the Governor-General declaring the tariff on indirect importations of sugar and molasses to be suspended. We can now bring in from the United States, on the same footing as from the country of production, either sugar or molasses that has been imported into that country. Formerly the duty on indirect imports of this kind debarred such trade. The addition of one cent per gallon to the price of molasses imported into this country at second hand of course discriminated in favor of direct importation from the country of production. The same effect resulted from the levying of 5 per cent. additional upon the price of sugar indirectly imported. This duty is suspended for two years. It is supposed that this step is taken by the Government to remove any cause of irritation that might arise from it on the other side of the border, where a good deal of ill nature has been recently expressed, notably in President Harrison's message, on account of duties that appeared to be imposed for the securing of our carrying trade for our own railway and vessel companies. United States importers of sugar and molasses are therefore as free to sell on this market as the producer in the West Indies. This will not affect the price of sugar or molasses to the consumer. It will increase the convenience of our own refiners and wholesalers and remove a cause of ill feeling between Canada and the United States.

For the last six months and more the merchants of this city have had to contend with great difficulties in the way of doing business by telephone. The trolley system many a time and oft played havoc with satisfactory communication by telephone. Until the change from horse cars to electric cars is completely effected and all contact between trolley and telephone wires is rendered virtually impossible there will continue to be disturbances in the conversations between trader and customer. The other day the meeting of a telephone and a trolley wire destroyed the telephone in a Gerrard street grocer's shop. Occasionally grocers have been distracted by the incessant ringing of their instruments. One grocer informed us that his telephone rang in short intermissions all day, and as each ring might herald an order, an attendant had to answer. It happened that business was light that day, and attention to the telephone was almost needless except to satisfy a feeling of uncertainty. Another grocer had danced attendance on his telephone so long and had proved so many alarms to be false that he made up his mind not to go near the instrument when it rang, but calmly listen to the din until the wavering trolley line should be drawn taut and get off his wire. The next day he was pretty badly overhauled by an irate customer for not attending to the telephone.

If the merchants in the vicinity of the St. Lawrence Market in this city adhere to the idea they are reported to entertain, namely, to form a company and buy the market fees for the current year and then exempt the farmers from the payment of fees, they will show a rare example of courage and of commercial spirit that is deserving of admiration. The few cents that each farmer has to pay with each entry he makes to the market amounts to but little to the individual outsiders upon whom it falls, but they feel it more, and probably pay it more grudgingly than these few merchants among whom it would be divided, according to the rumoured purpose.

PUBLICATIONS NOTICED.

Among the many Christmas numbers issued this year, that of the Canadian Miller is worthy of selection for special mention. It is a very prosperous looking production, and the attractiveness of its appearance is fully equalled by its merit.

The Fruit Trade Journal, New York, brings its volume for 1892 to a close in a fine Christmas number, of which a copy has been received at this office. The outward appearance of the number is tasteful, and its contents are excellent. The Journal is a most useful auxiliary to the fruit trade.

MY LITTLE STORY is the title of a handsomely covered, well printed, finely illustrated pamphlet, and the tale which fills it up is an interesting one for traders to read. It is the story of how Theodore Heinrichs, retail druggist, Baltimore, Md., systematized his business. The means by which this end was accomplished was a National Cash Register, and how great a part this guardian of a trader's cash capital can play in his prosperity may be learned from a perusal of this story. It is pretty sure to set the reader thinking, and to give him an insight into the principle of this mechanism of economy that will lead to its adoption, if it is not already in the trader's service.

The Toronto Biscuit and Confectionery Co. are distributing copies of their Cabinet Calendar for the current year. This Calendar contains a very catchy feature in the group of Ontario's cabinet Ministers it presents. The interest of observers is certain to be drawn to this picture, as all the portraits in it are true to life and well brought out. The large number of people who never saw the members of Sir Oliver Mowat's Government will be sure to scan this Calendar, which therefore is a good one to have hanging up in one's store.

We have received a copy of the programme which is to be the framework of the proceedings of the annual convention of the Creameries Association to be held at Harrison, Ont., on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday of next week. Among those who will furnish papers for discussion are Prof. Robertson, Ottawa, Prof. Shutt, Guelph, Prof. Dean, Guelph, Ex. Gov. Hoard, Fort Atkinson, Wis., A. Wenger, Ayton, Ont., John S. Pearce, London, Ont., M. Moyer, Toronto, Hon. John Dryden.

The New York Daily Commercial Bulletin comes to hand at the beginning of the year with one column more to the page. The eight extra columns by which it is enlarged is equivalent to the addition of one of its present pages. The breadth of the paper is now nearly equal to its length. This is an improvement in the proportions of the paper, each page presenting a very compact appearance. We are glad to see that our eminent contemporary has to make more room to accommodate increasing business.

TWO PICTURES---CASH AND CREDIT.

CASH.

The night was dark and stormy, as I, wrapt up in my furs, walked briskly along through the cold blinding sleet up Yonge street. The street was almost entirely deserted; hardly a soul could be seen from the foot of it to the very top, that is as far as you could see. It was too miserable a night to be out, a night which no one who had a home would leave it unless it was impossible to help it, and I myself felt as if I did not care how soon I reached my destination. I was on my way to visit a friend of mine, by name Tom Lee. Tom was a friend of mine. He was a retail grocer, which business he had been in for the last eight years. He did a large business, but the bulk of it was done on credit, and at the end of five years he found, after taking stock and summing up everything, that he had spent that five years for the benefit of the customers and not himself. Thereupon he decided to sell for cash and cash only; if they did not pay the cash when they came for the goods, the goods would stay on the shelves; he was determined to see either the goods or the money. So for the past three years Tom had sold for cash. He was a genial fellow, whole-souled and whole-hearted, just the kind of a companion for a night like this. I don't care how low your temperature had gone down, his bright, warm smile and cheery voice would make you forget that it was cold outside. Yes, sir, he has sometimes actually made me forget that I had not had my dinner. So different now to what it used to be when he used to sell on credit. Then he would look thin and careworn and full of anxiety, and when I have asked him what is the matter he has told me that he had a large note to meet on the morrow and had sent his man out to collect, and he had only brought in about five dollars instead of about five hundred. When in sympathy I have clapped him on the back and told him to cheer up, the darkest cloud was a silvery lining still, he used to say, "You don't know anything about it. It drives me wild. I am distracted. If this thing lasts much longer it will drive me crazy; I can't stand it. Here the wholesale men will be after that note, and I can't pay it. If I had only had my own I would be all right and would go on swimming." Thinking over these things I at last reached the house in which he lived. Stepping up to the door I knocked, and almost immediately the door was opened and I don't think I will ever forget the warm flood of light which burst upon my bewildered eyes. If ever there was a sense of home comfort came over a man, it came over me then and there. The large hanging lamp burned brightly in the hall, reflecting a cheerful gleam all along the hall to the sitting room; indeed it was so bright that it dazzled my eyes so that it took me some little time before I could see the bright happy face of the little maiden who opened the door. It was Tom's child, Mabel. She had one of the sweetest faces I think I ever saw. It was beaming like a ray of sunshine. Looking up into my eyes she bade me welcome, and such a welcome! It was a downright sweet honest childlike welcome. Taking a hold of me by the hand with her soft velvety one, "Come in, Mr. C——," she said, and the bright happy voice sent a thrill of real pleasure and delight through me which I will not soon forget. The bright sweet sound of her voice sent harmony speeding through my veins like some sweet strain of heavenly music. No need to go any further to be able to tell that all were happy here. The beaming face of the child told the tale. It was a perfect index to the happiness, peace and comfort which reigned within. As soon as I could regain my voice I asked her if her father was in, and being answered in the affirmative she led me in her childlike way into the sitting room where he was. Memory will often recall that sight. Cosy was no name for it. The floor was covered with a fine thick Brussels carpet, and there in an easy rocker sat the man himself, Tom, toasting his toes before the ruddy fire, one of the grate fires. Indeed it was grateful on a night like this. There he sat like a king and monarch of all he surveyed, reading the evening papers, with his big black dog Hero lying at his feet, and his other little girl Lilly in his arms, with her head nestled cosily on his breast, perfectly at peace. In the centre of the room stood the table, over which a bright shade lamp shed its soft light, beside which sat his wife, darning little stockings for busy pattering feet. At her feet on the rug lay the purring cat. One look at the face of the wife confirmed the impression previously made by the face of the child. All was peace and happiness here. If ever there was a picture of home comfort, here was one. "Well, Tom," I could not help exclaiming, "if you are not the very picture of unalloyed happiness, I don't know where I will find one." "I guess you are right," he said. "That's what I'm living for, and that is what we are here for. It ain't our fault if we are not. I guess that the wife and me are just about as happy and comfortable as you can find them. Eh! what do you say, wife?" "Well," she said, "I don't think I could be much happier if I tried. You see, Mr. C——, Tom sells for cash now; and it is so different to what it used to be. Before he did twice the business, and had twice the worry and three times the anxiety, and then he did not get half his money in, and he never was sure of being able to meet his payments, because when he most expected it and most needed it, that was the time he would be disappointed, and he would come home at night and could not sleep, but now he comes home straight from business; he doesn't do half the work, but makes more money, has a clear and contented mind, comes home happy and amuses the children; he comes straight home at night after work, takes off his boots, puts on his slippers, squats himself in the rocker with Lilly or Mabel on his knee and Hero at his feet, reads the paper, tells us all the news, he gets well rested for morning, and we have all the necessities of life and all that heart could desire; and in case of sickness, why he has three thousand dollars laid away in the bank that we can fall back upon any time, a thing that he never would have had if he had continued selling on credit. Then again his life is insured, so if anything happens we are prepared for any emergency. If every grocer would do like Tom does, there would be few if any unhappy homes, and there would be fewer sick wives and children in the world. He don't drink, chew or smoke, and he is always at home and with his family when he is not at work. He lives a good clean life, inwardly and outwardly. Do you know, it is often a wonder to me how men can go and fill themselves up with rank poison and then expect their wives and children to be happy and healthy. It's a wonder to me that some of them live as long as they do. Yes, Mr. C——, Tom's happy, the children are happy, the cat and dog are happy, and I'm happy, and it's selling for cash has done the whole thing."

THE BROOM CORN COMBINE.

A marked advance in the price of broom corn, which seems certain to come almost immediately, affords a striking instance of the lengths to which a trust or combination will go in spite of the economic law of supply and demand, says the New York Times. The crop this year has been an immense one, larger by many hundred tons than that of last year, and yet the Chicago dealers, who practically control the market, have formed a combination and obtained a corner on the crop.

The dealers of Quincy street, Chicago, who handle nearly nine-tenths of the whole output of the United States, are at the bottom of the combination, and they intend to advance prices as much as they can. The proposed increase is 30 per cent on all grades, and notice of an advance to that extent has been served by an organization of broom manufacturers at Milwaukee.

The rise in prices will be felt immediately throughout the country, and will be a boon to many retail dealers of this city who have large stocks on hand.

No one acquainted with the trade doubts the ability of the Chicago combine to bring about a large advance in prices. They have large capital behind them, and a similar trust formed about two years ago managed to secure an increase in price of $2 per 100. The present prices range from $4.50 to $6. according to the quality. Combinations similar to the one now said to be organized have sometimes raised prices to $12 per 100. —N. Y. Grocer.

FRAUDS IN PEPPER AND GINGER.

As so-called ground black pepper is still being extensively sold, at prices which are simply impossible, except at a heavy loss, or unless the commodity is not what it professes to be, it is well for the grocers to be on their guard. The lowest market cost price of whole light Gusty Penang, which is the poorest quality that can be ground, is $2\frac{1}{2}$ d. per lb. The lowest cost of grinding with loss on warrant weights and putting into barrels, is $\frac{1}{2}$ d. per lb. The lowest ground pepper must thus actually cost the wholesale dealer $3\frac{1}{2}$ d. per lb. Allowing $\frac{1}{2}$ d. per lb. for the dealer's profits, this pepper could not be sold under $3\frac{1}{2}$ d. Such a quality is quite unfit for table use, and is only suitable for manufacturing purposes. In the same way, the lowest Penang white pepper now costs, after the recent fall, $3\frac{1}{2}$ d. per lb. The cost of grinding, loss of weight, and barrels, is $\frac{1}{2}$ d. per lb., the loss in weight being heavier than with black pepper. This would bring the first cost up to $4\frac{1}{2}$ d., or, allowing $\frac{1}{2}$ d. for the dealer's profit, to $4\frac{1}{2}$ d. per lb. Both in black and in white peppers it is notorious that far lower prices than the above are current. In some cases the opportunity for actual comparison is given by the quotation of the lowest pepper, whole, at a considerably higher price than the simultaneous offer for ground pepper. Everyone knows that ground pepper must inevitably cost more than whole. The question therefore arises of how the natural state of things can be reversed.

It is to be hoped at a time when there is so strong an agitation for the improvement of the Adulteration Acts, that the grocers will support the legitimate wholesale trade, and refuse to encourage such a disreputable system of trading. The case of ginger is even worse, now that its place is being so extensively taken by the refuse of ginger beer making. The grocers might, from the point of view of the law, just as well sell exhausted tea leaves for tea, as much of the so-called ground ginger that is now being offered. The worst of the matter is that price is not so direct a guide with spent ginger as it is in the case of the lowest pepper, for the operation with the former goes further. It is well known to the wholesale trade that spent ginger is not only fraudulently mixed with common qualities, but with the better qualities as well, in order to obtain an illegitimate profit. With the lower sorts, however, it must be clear to anyone that genuine ground ginger cannot be sold below the cost of the raw roots, inasmuch as the cost of grinding and barrels is 8s. per cwt. Nor can bogus guarantees of quality or warranties excuse a respectable trader in his own eyes from buying such commodities. With the higher-priced ginger the fraud is less easy to detect, though the palate at once shows any extensive adulteration.—Produce Markets' Review.

AFFABILITY OF STORE-KEEPERS.

The Commercial Inquirer in a rather lengthy article on the personality of the shopkeeper says :

The personality of the storekeeper has much to do with the results of his business ventures.

Men and women are creatures of impulse, of emotions, for the most part, and the wise man not only knows this but profits by his knowledge.

Every grocer knows the main object he has in view in conducting his business is the making of money, and to this object everything else should be made subservient so long as the principles of integrity are not violated. Hence, the chief question is—What pays best? There's big money in smiles. A big stock of them kept where they can be drawn upon for any and all occasions is the most profitable stock a merchant can possess.

To some they came cheap. Some men are "built" so good natured and agreeable that a merry twinkle of the eye, a cheery smile and pleasant manner are their natural characteristics. Such men have a stock in trade worth more to them than a money inheritance. Others must acquire a pleasant address, and although a difficult operation it pays large dividends. It's astonishing what a multitude of errors a smile will cover; how many rough places a pleasing manner can smooth over; how many offended customers a cheerful reception can make good humored.

Cultivate a jolly disposition, and you'll not only make it pay handsomely but you'll get lots of fun out of it. Think of an irate customer coming with a rush into your store with a grievance—real or fancied—and determined to give you a "roasting" and then to withdraw his trade. You've seen him no doubt. Now, how will you meet him? If you get mad, he's got the best of you, because he's been mad so much longer that his anger has got his mouth into good working shape for abusiveness. But keep cool, listen to his complaint, show him you are ready to correct any error even if he's the one that made it, and get him off on to some amusing "string," and you'll have him good natured in spite of himself, and he'll leave the store laughing and determined that all the groceries his family uses shall come from your store.

"I'll never go to that store again," has been the expression of many a woman who has met with a curt response to her inquiry. A lady entered a store and neglected to entirely close the door. On asking for the first article wanted—which in this case happened to be macaroni—the grocer replied: "The first thing is to shut the door." That was the last time she ever had occasion to either open or shut that store door, whereas courteous treatment would have made her a frequent purchaser.

NEW YEAR ADVICE.

The season goes by, the season comes back,
The strength of the earth to renew;
The Summer is past, the New Year's come 'round,
With music and laughter, and shuffle and sound—

But there's business, boy all the year through.

There is business for us in the stern demands
Demands that forever renew
In industry's calls from the asking lands,
Whose acres are waiting for toil's clever hands,
For more than they're willing to do.

Life's valleys are gleaming with rivers of sin—
Temptation's flowers charming to view—
The siren walks there, where charming she's been Since Eden went out and temptation came in;
Stand guard, boy, she's watching for you.

There's business for all in this world, my boy
Though some folks find nothing to do;
And misery will, misery forever enhance
With him who is satisfied fortune is chance,
And only may come to a few.

Who waiteth for fortune is waiting for grapes
In a desert where grapes never grew;
A beggar that sitteth where nobody goes,
An idler for gold where no gold ever flows—
There's no business there, boy for you.

Who boreth for water must not expect oil,
Nor for gold if for silver he sue;
If sleepeth the husbandman, sleepeth the soil,
And harvest refuseth the product of toil
Wake up, boy! there's business for you.

Be true to your manhood, work up in the line
To wisdom's line—close as you can—
With axe, plow and harrow, for hillside and plain;
And pen, ink and paper to plow for the brain,
Fulfill the grand purpose of man!

This brief of existence is business my boy,
For other more lasting in view;
Life can't be a shadow that struts, frets and dies,
Where heaven, great heaven, looks down thro' such eyes;
Look up, God is smiling on you!

Then work while 'tis day, ere cometh the night,
Be quick, boy, the moments are few;
Eschew ye the evil, defend ye the right,
Work out of the darkness up into the light,
Where the world has business for you!

TRAVELLERS' ANNUAL MEETING.

The annual meeting of the Commercial Travellers' Association of Canada was held in Toronto the 29th ult. The following are the officers for the new year: President, John Burns; first vice-president, Robert H. Gray; second vice-president, James Haywood; board of directors, Joseph Kilgour, W. B. Daek, M. C. Ellis, John Everett, C. C. Kyle, T. P. Hayes, George E. Hamilton, John A. Ross, John Orr. The total number of votes cast were 1,282.

The following resolution proposed by Mr. Fielding and seconded by Mr. Orlando Potter, was submitted: That the board of directors be asked to offer three prizes to members of this association for essays written on the subject of dating invoices forward beyond the season when the goods are required by the retail merchant, the first prize to be, say, $40, the second $20, the third $10, the writer to be a bona fide traveller at the time, engaged in selling goods on the road, and to make a declaration that he is the composer and author of said paper and the facts gathered from experience on the road. Mr. Fielding, speaking to his motion, said he was strongly of the opinion that the association should encourage the discussion of commercial questions at its meetings, rather than spending so much time in purely association work. He thought commercial travellers might do much towards improving the business of the houses they represent if they would discuss with and offer suggestions to their employers as to how the business of the house might be improved. The question of long credit was one of the most important in business and he was confident that all would agree with him that it was of paramount importance to endeavor to transact business as nearly as possible on a cash basis. They could not expect increase of salary if the profits of the year did not warrant it, and it was surely time that the travellers made some effort to discourage the practice of selling at long dates. Mr. Fielding's remarks gave rise to a short but spirited discussion. Mr. Hayes opposed the suggestion that the association should offer prizes for such essays, and protested against the odium of long credit being placed on the travellers. He was confident that the travellers did their best to discourage them. Mr. Fielding said that a friend of his had told him that if the association declined to take the matter up he would himself offer $100 for the best essay on the subject.

Mr. W. E. Ellis took strong objection to any such course. He was sure all of them were as anxious to reduce business transactions to as near a cash basis as the merchants were, but he thought the matter rested with them and not with their travellers.

Mr. Warring Kennedy supported Mr. Ellis, and remarked that the question was one of great difficulty. The Toronto houses were largely forced to these long credits by competition with Montreal and with English and Scotch firms, who all gave long dates. But he thought that whatever was done should be initiated by the merchants themselves. Mr. Fielding withdrew his motion.

MERCANTILE CREDITS.

The question of mercantile credits is one that should command the attention and thoughtful interest of all who are engaged in banking, commercial, manufacturing or other pursuits in which operations of a greater or less magnitude are largely based on confidence, and although there is no feature of any business more prominent as a factor in its success or failure, or more difficult or successful management, it is a fact that there exists less general knowledge upon the subject than upon other questions of equal importance, and upon no question of such daily and ever present contact is so little written.

The present system of mercantile credits as practically applied, has developed in recent years to a great extent, and there may now be found in the leading business concerns and manufacturing establishments of the country an organized and completely equipped credit department, upon which rests the responsibility of avoiding losses by bad debts—a source of serious danger that is a constant menace, and one that is not infrequently the "hidden rock" upon which some unfortunate commercial craft is hopelessly wrecked.

The successful credit man should be an apt student of human nature, possessed of natural tact, which, combined with the element of caution in a fair degree, and good judgment ripened by experience, enables him to "steer clear" and avoid more than a reasonable share of losses by bad debts. He must have the benefits of a training and experience that no other field affords; be well informed on general topics; and keep posted as to the success or failure of important interests in all sections in which his house is doing business. He must investigate and study the cause and movement of "booms," and their effect on the locality directly affected, always keeping a weather eye of watchful solicitude on accounts in such localities, opening no new accounts with dealers who are inclined to speculation, or whose interests are likely to be adversely affected by the changed conditions. Likewise, he must be alive to possible unfavorable changes in the condition of all customers of the house, and especially so in cases where sudden disaster or depression occurs, whether from strikes, epidemics, floods, poor crops or other causes, and can often show commendable ability by the prompt application of tact and judicious management in "getting out" safely from threatened and impending failures.

Another feature of equal importance with that of the credits is the proper management of the Collections, and in the leading houses this branch is under the charge and general direction of the Credit Department, which gives special attention to the slow and unsatisfactory accounts, in which field there are frequent daily opportunities for the exercise of tact and shrewdness, which are necessary to escape serious losses.

The duties devolving on the credit department are laborious and exacting, beginning with the opening of business, and in no department is there required a greater amount of close and intelligent application, or where the quick exercise of good judgment is oftener demanded, as well as the absolute necessity of a constant unflagging systematic vigilance.—J. S. C. in American Grocer.

THREE ESSENTIALS.

Too many grocerymen in small places fail to adopt city methods simply because they think it is not possible to do so in a small way. This is a mistake. Allow us to make three suggestions.

1. Keep your store room and stock in the most attractive form, clean and neat. If your stock is well and attractively displayed, your shelves, counters, windows and floor scrupulously clean, your trade will be increased.

2. Keep a "want" book of articles about to run out, and especially of those brands most in demand, so that you can order promptly when the traveling salesman comes in, or to mail to the wholesale dealer.

3. Keep a cheap or job lot counter on which to display such goods as have not sold readily; mark them down to cost and call attention to them through advertising, and also of customers when in your place of business. It does not pay to hold stock that is not salable.—Los Angeles Journal.

HOW TO CHOOSE ORANGES.

The expert orange buyer does not select the smooth, clean-skinned fruit invariably, nor does he object to a heavy percentage of rough, dirty skins. The latter are not always easy to sell, but they invariably give the greatest satisfaction. This is because in the case of oranges, as with almost any fruit, beauty is only skin deep, and the insects which infest orange groves and extract sweetness from the fruit much as bees draw honey from the finest flowers, only attack the sweetest and choicest to be found. The effect of their efforts is to roughen the skin by perforating it, and hence dust is retained, instead of either falling or being brushed off the untouched skins. The fruit within the latter having been rejected by the insects on account of the lack of sweetness is not so palatable as that in the rougher looking skins; and it is decidedly a good plan to follow in the foot-steps of the busy little creatures who can tap an orange and ascertain how sweet it is in a manner no man could attempt.—The American Analyst.

The annual concert of the Commercial Travellers' Circle was held in Association Hall, Toronto, on Thursday evening. A very superior class of entertainment was provided for by the programme and fully rendered by the participants.

THE MONTREAL TRAVELLERS' DINE.

The annual jollification of the Dominion Commercial Travellers' Association took place at the Windsor Hotel in Montreal on Thursday last, and as usual the knights of the gripsack had a regular old-fashioned good time. Two hundred sat down, there being seven tables besides the long guest table for the big guns which ran the full length of the south side of the big hall. The decorations were tasteful as usual, and an efficient orchestra discoursed a choice selection of melodies to aid the digestion of the good things.

The committee who had charge of the dinner may well be congratulated on its success, and all of them—Mr. G. W. L. Cains, the chairman, and Messrs. Fred Birks, W. H. Callahan, J. W. Clark, E. H. Copeland, F. S. Cote, M. E. Davis, J. T. Dwyer, Geo. Forbes, Wm. Galbraith, F. Gormley, E. E. Guilbault, Fred Hughes, E. D. Marceau, J. H. Morin, E. G. Painchaud, Wm. Percival, John Rogers, John Taylor, L. A. Wilson and H. W. Wadsworth, the secretary—deserved the congratulations they had received.

President elect Cains saw that matters did not drag, and his dazzling shirt front was the focus from which all things radiated for the nonce. Assisted by the soft glow of the electric lights and the other shirt fronts it cast a pleasing reflection over every visage, and as there were presumably no dyspeptics present the general effect was gratifying beyond description. The chairman was supported on his left by his worship the Mayor, and Solicitor-General Curran was on the right. The other guests were Lieut.-Col. Stevenson, United States Consul-General Knapp, Edgar Judge, Judge A. H. Chattain, corporation counsel of Chicago; N. J. Power, general passenger agent, Grand Trunk railway; Thomas W. Blair, Intercolonial railway; J. H. Copeland, Chas. Gurd, David Watson, James J. Carmody, T. Simmons, Wm. Buell, W. Percival, F. H. Dent, H. W. Wadsworth and J. E. Wright, many of the guests being at the vice-chairmen's tables, which were presided over by Messrs. John Rogers, L. A. Wilson, J. N. Morin, W. H. Callahan, E. D. Marceau, George Forbes, and De Grandpre.

Among the others who sent their regrets were His Excellency Lord Stanley, Governor-General; Sir John Thompson, Sir Donald A. Smith, Hon. J. A. Chapleau, Hon. Wilfrid Laurier, Mr. A. T. Lepine, M.P.; Hon. L. O. Taillon, Hon. J. S. Hall, Hon. A. W. Morris, M.L.A.; Mr. O. M. Auge, M.L.A.; the presidents of the Board of Trade and Chambre de Commerce; the Mayor of Portland, president Maine association, secretary Maine association, and Hon. W. H. Looney, Messrs. J. H. Dow and M. J. Pickering, of Portland, and presidents of sister associations in Canada.

After the usual loyal toast of the Queen had been drunk with full honors, telegrams of kindly greeting were read from the London association, the Toronto association, and from Mr. Fred Birks, their last secretary, and from twenty absent brothers, regretting they could not attend.

The toast of His Excellency followed, and then the President of the United States was not forgotten, although the present occupant is not the one Canadians just exactly like. But defeat is a galling thing, and the drummers were willing to receive him, and when Consul-General Knapp rose to respond amid the concluding strains of "The Star-Spangled Banner," his reception was too enthusiastic to leave any doubts in the minds of any American visitor as to the feelings of the boys towards their cousins across the border, no matter what disgruntled office-holders might do. The Consul-General, after returning thanks for the invitation, said that the commercial travellers of Montreal were an honor to their calling and to the Dominion. He was glad to be able to say also that since he was their guest two years ago they had increased in numbers from 2,100 to 2,400 and now had a surplus of $12,500. He was very grateful for the grand manner in which they had received the name of his honored chief, the President of the United States; it showed that there was the best of good will between the two countries, and it would always be hoped continue so. For evidence is advancing that commerce, more than ever before, is the means of bringing closer together the two countries, and the commercial traveller is one of the classes who is doing much towards this. Canada and the United States are kindred countries. The people of both are joined together to make two great nations and we can join in singing together "Hail Columbia" and "God Save the Queen."

Judge Chattain responded to the toast to "Our American Cousins," in a very able speech, which was greeted with cheers from time to time. In opening he said that this was an industrial age, and a complex one, but the voice of the serious people of the United States was not in favor of annexation, as we think there is plenty of room on this continent north of Mexico for two great nations. Fine economic questions may often come before us that may cause excitement for a while, but if these questions are kept away from political demagoguery and left to the commercial interests to settle there will be no trouble. The commercial spirit of England has made it the great nation that it is. It was that spirit that brought up the supremacy of its army and navy. It was that same spirit that has made Montreal the great city it is to-day. It was the same spirit that permitted Chicago to secure the World's Fair.

In proposing the toast of the commercial interests of Canada, Vice-President Morin remarked that although the past two years had not been all that they should be, he felt sure the year they were just entering would bring better things. He called on Mr. Judge to respond.

Mr. Judge did so in his usual eloquent manner. He said it was always customary at this dinner that an officer of the Board of Trade should reply, and he regretted that they had not called upon a more able speaker. As the vice-president had said, trade was not as bright just now as it should be, and bankers were not having big balances. In speaking of the commercial interests of Canada, Mr. Judge said he could look back to the time when the dinner did not exist, and in conclusion said he could heartily praise the travellers for being among the foremost to open up the country and thereby develop it.

Mr. L. A. Wilson in proposing the toast of the forwarding interests, dwelt upon the consideration with which the commercial travellers had been treated by them. Mr. Poirier responded in appropriate terms, expressing the sincere hope that a feeling of amity would always exist between commercial travellers and the forwarding companies.

The sister associations, by Mr. George Forbes, followed, calling for a few remarks in response by Mr. D. Morton, of New York, and Mr. John Rogers proposed "Our Guests." In referring to the railroad men he called upon them for that "little two cents," which hit the boys right where they lived, for it was greeted with prolonged cheers.

The first guest to rise in response was the Hon. J. J. Curran, who was greeted with hearty applause, and started in by saying that this was not the first time he had been their guest, but on this occasion he had a greater pleasure in being with them, especially on account of the way in which they had greeted his name and the honored chieftain who had seen fit to promote him. Mr. Curran made a very patriotic speech on Canada as a nation. As his chief had been referred to, he might say that even if Sir John Thompson had retired to the Supreme Bench he would have been able to show the commercial interests that his name was not unknown in acts to their benefit. The Banks and Banking Act, the Bills of Exchange and Promissory Notes Act, and last but not least, the Criminal Code of 1892, which protected not only the commercial interests, but the homes and families of Canadians, and was a perfect work of statesmanship from beginning to end, must be credited to him. Then the speaker referred to the United States, not in a derogatory way, but as a nation of whom we were proud to be friends, but at the same time were not afraid of. This was greeted with cheers.

The "Army and Navy and Volunteers," "The Ladies" and "The Press" followed, calling for speeches from Lieut.-Col. Stevenson, W. H. Callahan, and E. D. Marceau, and the gathering broke up in the wee sma' hours with "God Save the Queen."

BUSINESS FAILURES IN CANADA.

In the Dominion of Canada, including Newfoundland, the total number of failures reported for 1892 is 1,682, a decrease of 9 per cent. compared with the preceding year. The decline in volume of liabilities, however, is much heavier, from $14,884,000 to $11,603,000, or 22 per cent. Increases in number of failures are reported from Nova Scotia, Manitoba and British Columbia, where gross liabilities of those failing are likewise large as compared with 1891. Ontario and Quebec each show a gratifying reduction in the number of business failures, together with gross liabilities.

The report of failures in the Dominion to Bradstreet's this year and last in detail is as follows:

	No. of Failures.		Liabilities.

CO-OPERATION AND BUSINESS PROFITS.

Attempts at co-operation thus far have generally shown a strong if not fatal tendency to failure because of the difficulty of commanding the requisite skill and faithfulness in management. Co-operators are not willing to pay the price for service which their business needs in order to succeed. They always stand on the theory that the men who conduct great enterprises get too much for doing the business and operatives too little. In course of time, and usually not very long time, their scheme goes down. This is because in the nature of things no hired person on a salary of fixed amount will all the time keep his wits alive and study into the small hours of the night devising ways and means to make money for other people. They propose in their constitution to take from capital and skill a portion of the profit that has usually been accorded to them and give it to labor; but after thousands of experiments during forty or more years of good business in this country there is hardly a single case of such undoubted success as to warrant the assertion that demonstration of feasibility has been attained. The combined skill of all the co-operators in half a century has produced no concern of magnitude. The almost uniform failures seem to prove that great management must have great compensation, and in endeavoring to get the skill without the pay the co-operators' dream has come to naught.

Now, this is equivalent to saying that the world finds its business can be done at less cost than by co-operation. The latter fails because it is undersold and unable to compete with such skill as gets the better pay. Had Commodore Vanderbilt been content with the salary of a steamboat captain he would never have developed into a great business man and railroad manager. The prospect of great emolument brought into exercise great powers, so that he cheapened transportation to an astonishing degree and yet made money to an astonishing amount. The people who saved four or five dollars in a round trip between Boston and New York, and the people who got their barrel of flour twenty-five cents less because he ran a railway to Chicago, enjoyed the sensation at that time, but, when they saw his fortune, could not refrain from tears to think of the merciless robbery they suffered at his hands. The thing happened and succeeded, not because Vanderbilt was a robber, but by virtue of his giving better terms to people who had to travel and had to eat bread. His inducements were such that he got the business. Suppose he and some others of the same kind of enterprise had not come upon the stage, what would have been the result? Evidently the old ways of business would have continued. We would still be going to Buffalo on canal boats and creeping along the streets of our cities in dilapidated omnibuses, still be doing our journeying in stage coaches over dusty roads and tedious hills at a great sacrifice of time, money, comfort and strength.

The enterprise of the money makers has profited everybody else by exciting production and accumulation. The money makers have taken pay, not out of labor, but out of the increased production and savings which their efforts have secured. Individuals have sometimes suffered. The omnibuses were killed when the horse-car came, and A. T. Stewart did the business of a hundred small shopmen; but the people at large saved time in getting where they were compelled to go in one case, and got what they wanted at less cost in the other. The street railroad makes ten times the money that the stage did, and the people save money and time. The people can do better by buying of Stewart, and therefore they buy. They enriched him to the tune of thirty millions, clean cash. This is a great fact, but it does not show great robbery. It may show the very opposite.

Stewart was in business for about forty years, and for many years sold twenty millions of goods per year. Had he sold but fifteen millions per year at a profit of five per cent., and invested the profit with his usual sagacity, he would have been worth more than thirty millions at the end of his forty years. That he left but thirty millions proves that his profit was not over five per cent. on the average. The margin for labor to gain from is, therefore, in the neighborhood of five per cent., because Stewart has proved that the ordinary man can not part with more than that and continue business. In other words, business stops when the margin goes down much below that rate.

There are some lines of business in which the profit is at times more than five per cent. but, in the long run, the average can not amount to more than that. Competition increases from year to year, and profits tend downward all the time; consequently, it takes more talent and energy to make fortunes now than it did a few years ago. It is not so easy for a laborer to become a boss as it formerly was; and as the chances for rising to boss-hood grow less, the hatred of bosses increase. This is a symptom of discontent, and an evidence of the unreasonableness of the philosophy which is at the bottom of the schemes for relief. Capital must be paid, skill must be paid, and, if they are each paid but two per cent. of the accruing profits, one per cent. only remains for labor to get as its share; and this to the laborer whose wages are one dollar a day would amount to but three dollars per year. This is something, to be sure, but as a means of elevating the laboring classes is of no account.—Popular Science Monthly.

COMPETITION AMONG RETAIL GROCERS.

A story is told of a Minneapolis dealer who hired only good-looking clerks with slight mustaches and lovable eyes. One of the recommendations of a clerk must be that he is an accomplished "masher." A clerk that cannot mash, flirt and reach down in his boots with his lung and hoist up a love-sick sigh, stands no chance for a job. Well, why are all these accomplishments necessary? I will tell you: the clerks are compelled to flirt and fall desperately in love with the cooks of the various houses where they go for orders. The more mashes they make the more promises of marriage they can show, the greater the salary such a clerk can demand. It is a well known fact that a cook can find fault with the groceries and make it appear that they are of the poorest quality; she can make it appear so that her employers believe that they are being cheated, and induce them to trade elsewhere. Under the "masher system" introduced here all this is obviated, and the cock becomes a stand-by. Unless she learns that her grocery boy is a gay deceiver her trade can be held for a long time. The clerks have become so crammed full of experience that this seldom occurs now. I heard of one clerk who had six Swedes, four Irish, eight French, three German, and one coloured girl on the string. He has promised to marry nearly all of them, except the negress, and he is seriously contemplating a proposal to her, as recently she has turned cold and distant toward him. He said that his greatest contest was with a red-haired, freckle face, cross-eyed beauty of thirty-two. He had to sigh himself down nearly forty younds, and ogle his eyes almost like the cook's before he succeeded in making her solid. It's a great scheme, and surpasses the selling of 16 pounds of sugar for a dollar.—Ex.

THE CUTTER.

The Grocers' Criterion says: Many smart storekeepers think it is an enterprising piece of business to undersell their competitors, but we have an idea that more harm is done to the business of a town by this system of trading than profit is made out of it. The minute a merchant begins to cut prices it demoralizes the entire business of a town, for it compels the other merchants to fall in line and to also sell their goods at a reduction in order to hold the trade of their customers. In the aggregate they do not sell many more goods than they would otherwise have disposed of if price cutting had not prevailed, for as a rule customers do not buy more goods than they require for their wants and necessities. Price-cutting produces ill-feeling and leads to reckless rivalry and results in disaster.

Our advice to our readers is not to cut prices when it can possibly be avoided. If a rival in town inaugurates the system go and have a friendly talk with him and show him the folly of the course he is pursuing. There is neither sense nor reason in doing business without a profit, and the selling of goods below cost is frequently an act of downright dishonesty, for it not infrequently results in the defrauding of creditors and the closing out of an establishment at 10 and 20 cents on the dollar.

YOUR COFFEE TRADE.

This is the opportune time to stimulate the demand for fine coffee. There is scarcely a gathering of any moment where coffee is not served. Where guests are entertained, if at no other time, people are particular to have fine coffee. Opinions may vary as to which is the most enjoyable flavor, that of a strong or a mild coffee, but there is no difference of opinion about coffee having good body and flavor being preferable to one of thin or woody flavor and light body.

It is difficult to get high grade goods without paying a good price; hence the dealers who are bound to have a first-class coffee trade give attention to quality rather than price. Their standard of grade is high and that must be maintained regardless of cost. Such dealers insist on having fresh roasted coffee and urge customers to have it ground fresh and made fresh. They furnish their trade with recipes for making a perfect cup of coffee, including cafe noir, black coffee, creole coffee, the Turkish method, the Vienna style, and how to utilize coffee in other ways.

They see to it that customers are supplied with coffee of uniform grade, and therefore insist that clerks shall keep in mind the sort each customer uses. This is not an easy matter, but it can be done by giving it thought and attention, even if it involves keeping a record. It is surprising in our large city stores, to note how familiar the floor walkers and heads of departments and the clerks are with the names and habits of customers, and how well they remember the character of goods purchased. If this is done in mammoth concerns it can be done in the little stores.

It is one of the secrets of building up a lucrative business and one which is all-important in establishing a reputation for keeping fine coffee. One who keeps fine tea, fine coffee, good flour, and the best butter, can command patronage against all competitors.

SERVING.

In serving, have the cups and cream warm and pour the cream in the cup before pouring in the coffee.

PROPORTION.

One tablespoonful of coffee to each cup is the popular allowance. The tablespoonful may be scant, even, or heaped, according to the strength desired.

HOW COFFEE SHOULD BE GROUND.

For making coffee by the French or percolating method, the coffee should always be ground very fine or pulverized; otherwise the full strength will not be secured.

For making coffee by boiling, the coffee should always be ground coarse or granulated; otherwise the coffee will be muddy.

We have special mills for pulverizing and granulating, and grind the coffees fresh for each order.

The finest coffees cannot be sold at retail and return the seller a just margin below 30 to 40 cents per pound, as to kind. We find prices ranging from 25 to 40 cents. Some prominent retailers sell Padang Java, of fine grade, at 37 to 38 cents, others get 40 cents; for Maracaibo, 30 to 35 cents. The seller of fine coffee should have a good margin, for those who demand the best, as a rule, are willing to pay the price of the finest.—American Grocer.

INTELLIGIBLE PRICE MARKS.

Very few stores now adhere to the old plan of cipher marking. Experience has proved that a majority of customers prefer goods to be marked in plain figures, no one liking the idea of two sets of figures unless he is sure he is among the favored ones who get the benefit of the lower scale. It is said to be the practice with the medical fraternity of some towns to grade their charges to patients according to the style of house in which they live, and the same idea prevails so much as to retail stores that ladies have been known to send servants down to stores because they could get a larger discount. Other ladies are careful never to dress very well when shopping, and this shows how firmly the impression prevails that a genuine one-price store is a novelty. The easiest way to get over this impression is to have every article marked in plain figures, so that the customer may see that one price prevails for all. This is easier than arguing that the abuses feared are reminiscences of the old days when the evils of caste were much more rampant than now, for experience proves that the fear certainly exists, no matter how absolutely it may be without foundation. Ten years ago part of the education of a store clerk used to be the mastering of the cipher plan adopted in marking, but this is now quite a small matter. As already stated, most stores mark their goods in plain figures, and the few that do not adopt a very simple plan for denoting the price.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

THE HUSTLER.

The hustler, being unbeloved
By every Grace and Muse,
He eats at night in Boston and Next morn in Syracuse.
From the Adirondack Mountains
To the fair Pacific slopes
He plays with lines of latitude
Like little skipping ropes.

His home is in the sleeping car—
No vine or fig tree's shade—
His music is its clanking wheels,
His poetry is trade.
This missionary of the mart
He spreads the true faith's germ's—
The endless merits of his house
Above all other firms.

He button-holes the kings of trade,
His sample case unrolls
And talks until the love of life
Grows feeble in their souls.
The bolted door swings wide for him,
He needs no bolts or bars,
And fears not any face of man
Beneath the sun or stars.

The heroes of baronial times
Were armed from hair to heel,
With iron pots upon their heads
And pantaloons of steel.
The hustler hero of to-day
Is armorless and weak,
But for the vigor of his tongue
And blushless breadth of cheek.

He meets all men with fearless mein,
Nor knows to pause or swerve,
With Lilliputian bashfulness
And Broddnagian nerve.
No dim abstractions vex his soul,
His creed and happiness
Is just to make a sale and catch
The two o'clock express.
—Sam Walker Foss in the Yankee Blade.

CULTIVATE A MEMORY FOR NAMES

"As good a piece of advice as I could give a young man starting business," said an old and successful merchant, "would be to get his customers' names right. Of course, everybody means to do this, but I don't think everybody attaches to it its full importance. The fact is that almost every man is proud of his name, whatever it may be, and he dislikes to see it misspelled or incorrectly written. There are plenty of names which sound alike, but which vary in the spelling, perhaps by only a single letter; and, too, in taking a man's name it is not so difficult as one might imagine to make a mistake in the initials, for there are letters which sound very much alike. When you get a new customer get his name right to start with. No man likes to receive a package or a bill or a communication of any sort with his name misspelled however modest and good natured he may be, he is pretty sure to be annoyed by it."—Sun.

manifold business cares for the cultivation of the Muse. Contributions of his appear from time to time in various papers, the last one being in the Royal Templar.

There were 2,900,000,000 cigarettes of domestic make consumed in the U. S. during the year ending June 30. About 98 per cent. were of the brands controlled by the American Tobacco Company.

On Saturday evening of last week the factory and bonded warehouse of J. C. Harris, cigar manufacturer, St. Catharines, was broken into and about 800 cigars stolen from the warehouse. The entrance was effected through the front door, a window in it being smashed first.

A syndicate has been formed by the merchants in the vicinity of the St. Lawrence market, Toronto, with the object of purchasing the existing rights of the present lessee of the market. If there are no legal difficulties, it is proposed after the purchase to charge no market fees.

James Fernie, of Liverpool, England, had an interview with Mr. Johnson, Dominion statistician, last week. Mr. Fernie is engaged in the dead meat business and is anxious to open up an agency in Liverpool for the sale of Canadian beef to be carried over in refrigerator chambers on the ocean steamers.

The Christmas number of the CANADIAN GROCER is one of the most handsome holiday numbers that has come to our desk this season. A handsome cover, colored inks and beautiful engravings are combined with such a lot of interesting reading matter that it must find a welcome everywhere.—Pennsylvania Grocer.

The people of the Maritime provinces will save one million during the past year owing to the exceptional cheapness of flour and oatmeal, as compared with a year ago. Flour is now forty cents a barrel cheaper there than it has been at any time within the past forty years, and a dollar cheaper than in 1891.

W. H. Seyler, of Eby, Blain & Co., well known to our readers by his bright contributions to THE GROCER, has been laid up since Christmas with quinsy. He was at his post as usual on Tuesday, but he soon found that his return to duty was premature, and had to go home again. We hope he will soon be as well as ever.

D. Ritchie, who was for some time a resident of Brantford, having the position of book-keeper at the starch works, in which concern he had an interest, died in Scotland recently. Deceased visited there in the hope that the trip would benefit his health, but the seeds of consumption had fastened on him, and he passed away as stated.

The steamer Coquitlam recently discharged a quantity of northern salmon at Tacoma. It is to be frozen by the Crescent Creamery Company and shipped to St. Petersburg. It will go east over the Northern Pacific Railway, and at Philadelphia will make as direct connection as possible for the Baltic. This is probably the first shipment of the kind ever made, and the success or failure of it will be awaited with interest.

The last of this season's British Columbia salmon fleet has now been despatched, being rather later than last season. It is expected that the first vessel will arrive at just about when the old stocks have all been disposed of, and thus there will be a good demand for the new salmon. Latest reports from England state that the market there is strong and the outlook for next season is favorable.

The employes in George E. Tuckett & Sons' tobacco factory, Hamilton, received the Christmas boxes on Friday which it is the custom of their employers annually to distribute. Each piece hand received a turkey, the time hands were given an extra week's wages, and the stemmers were each presented with 50 cents. The presents were distributed by George T. Tuckett amid loud cheering, and the company separated loud in praise of the generosity and thoughtfulness of the firm.

Mr. Leslie McMann, one of Thorold's popular grocers, has purchased the Munro store on Front street, and will shortly remove his large stock of groceries, crockery, etc., as well as his pork-packing department, to the same. Mr. McMann's host of friends in that town hope he will be as successful in his new store as in the old one, where a few years ago he started in a small way, but by honest and fair dealing, coupled with integrity, push and energy, he has built up a most extensive grocery business in Thorold.

Shippers of hay to England from Kingston, Ont., have at last heard of the result of the venture. The accounts of the sales do not show satisfactory returns for the shippers, but they look well for the commission merchants. Mr. Mooers, grain forwarder, said that England would never be a suitable market for Canadian products. It was too far away, and business men were too wily. All they cared for was the making of their commission of five per cent. Since Mr.

David Blackley, Hamilton, is organizing a company to manufacture a barrel-making machine, invented by W. T. Vale, a Toronto man. Staves are fed into the machine, and it shapes them into barrels in as workman-like a style as could be done by an expert cooper, except that the ends and hoops are left to be put on by hand. The capacity of the machine is one barrel a minute. The invention has been patented in 11 countries, and a factory for the manufacture of the machines has been started in Newark, N. J.

A very pleasant affair took place on Thursday evening of last week at W. B. Maclean's residence, 198 Jarvis street, when the employees of Sloan & Crowther presented him with a beautiful onyx clock as a slight token of the high esteem in which he is held by them. W. B. Smith filled the chair very ably, and the presentation was made by Alex. Hill. Speeches, songs and recitations, banjo and harmonica selections were indulged in by the boys, after which a sumptuous repast was provided by the host. Mr. Maclean is about to assume the secretaryship of the Conger Lumber Co.

The British Columbia Gazette contains notice of the incorporation of three new canning companies. The first, the Pacific Coast Packing Co., of New Westminster, has a capital of $15,000, in shares of $150, and is represented by George I. Wilson, George Casady and N. H. Bain, the first trustees. The Federation Brand Salmon Canning Co., Walter Morris, S. M. Okell and A. J. McLellan, of Victoria, formed with a capital of $50,000 in 1,000 shares, to take over the business of "McLennan's Cannery" on the Naas, and deal in fish prepared for market in every known way, the head office being in Victoria. The Steveston Canning Co.—M. Costello, R. A. McMorran and Edward Hunt trustees—place their capital at $50,000 in $50 shares, and propose to can and deal in salmon and to manufacture fish oils and fish manures.

The Ontario government has appointed a preliminary commission to collect for the consideration of his honor in council and otherwise all such facts obtainable without an oral examination of witnesses, as bear on the several questions which have arisen with respect to direct taxation for municipal and other purposes, and its incidence, and all present and proposed exemptions from taxation, including in regard to all such particulars a comparison of the laws and practice of this province with the laws and practice of Great Britain, the other provinces of the empire, the United States and elsewhere. The commissioners are John R. Cartwright, chairman, Hon. T. W. Anglin and E. Saunders, secretary.

Mr. P. W. King, manager of the Oriental Traders' Co., limited, has returned from a six weeks' business trip, during which he visited Montreal, Toronto, London, Hamilton, Winnipeg, and other leading cities. Mr. King reports business as good in the East, and he succeeded in taking several orders for teas, silks and other Oriental merchandise. Everywhere Mr. King was asked numerous questions about Vancouver, and a great deal of interest is taken in the East in the progress of the Terminal City. As is well known here Mr. King is an ardent Imperial Federationist, and conversed on this subject with several leading business men in the East, and found that Imperial Federation is gaining ground there.—Vancouver News-Advertiser.

DRY GOODS.

During the past two weeks trade has been slow with the wholesale houses in general. But in spite of this the movement in repeats for woollens and other heavy winter goods has been sufficient to lighten stocks very materially. Heavy mits and gloves, heavy underwear, hosiery, overcoatings of all kinds and heavy suitings and dress goods have all moved out well. The fur dealers during the week ending December 24th did a huge trade, and were lifted out of the slough of despond into which they had gone a short distance. Travellers are again on the road with full lines of spring samples, and soon shipments of these will commence.

Brook's spools have dropped from $3.20 to $3.00. This makes this the lowest priced 200 yards, 6 cord spool in the market. This is due to the arrangement in the Central Agency which has been described often in these columns.

Belding, Paul & Co. and The Corticelli Silk Co., have come to an agreement regarding the prices of sewing silk and twists. We understand that there are no material changes in prices, but the old trade discount has been done away with. This change will do away with the old under bidding by means of discounts and make only one price whether goods are bought from the wholesalers or the manufacturers. Belding, Paul & Co. have issued a circular which reads as follows: Owing to the large advance in raw silk, we have reduced discounts to the trade. In consequence of this, we beg to notify you that from this date, you are requested to sell our silk threads, art silks, etc., at list prices, less 5 per cent. cash only. Any house not adhering to this contract will forfeit trade discount.

NOTES.

Gordon, Mackay & Co. are receiving their spring goods. In the staple department they are showing new lines in prints, teazle cloths, flannelettes, shaker flannels, American indigo prints, sateens and plushes. These lines include all the latest varieties and the best qualities from the leading manufacturers domestic and foreign. In the furnishing department they are carrying a long range of men's braces in domestic, American and English manufacture. They claim that they are selling these at prices which enable them to compete successfully with the so-called manufacturers who are drumming up the retail trade. In their dress goods department they are showing a new thing in skirtings. This is a marine shot effect which is of heavy quality and comes in 38-inch widths. It will be very popular on account of the neat effect it makes whenever lifted slightly or moved quickly, and also on account of the rich appearance secured for a very moderate price.

Wyld, Grasett & Darling have had a strong run on their men's winter gloves.

Their experience has been that buyers wait until the last minute to purchase these goods, and the consequence was that some were too late to secure some of their leading lines, as the big demand depleted the stock of the best lines during the latter half of December. Their trade in neckwear during the past three weeks has been of enormous volume, and surpasses anything in the history of the house. The stock is still well-assorted, and more shipments are expected next week.

Jno. Macdonald & Co. have just passed into stock two hundred and fifty bales of carpets, comprising new patterns in tapestries, Brussels and Wiltons. These are extremely nice goods, and considerable care and tact has been exercised to secure goods suitable for the various requirements of the trade. They have also passed into stock three hundred pieces of domestic wool carpets. The patterns are new and designs much superior to the domestic make of former seasons. This shipment comprises a strong selection from all the leading manufacturers, and is sufficiently well assorted to give any dealer a sufficient choice. They have also passed into stock a big range of domestic oilcloths, both floor and table, including the newest designs in each.

W. R. Brock & Co.'s warehouse was closed up on Tuesday on account of the funeral of the wife of one of their travellers. Her death cast a gloom over the holiday spirit of all the employees of the house, as they felt deeply for their fellow employee in his sad bereavement.

John Macdonald & Co. have laid in a large stock of buttons, consisting of pearl-lettas in all sizes and shapes, fancy metals, combinations of metal and ivorines, silk covered buttons, jets, gilts, silvers, and other leading novelties. Their staple lines of pearls are also in complete shape at present. They expect a strong demand for buttons this spring. They will be much used for trimmings. Buckles will also be in good demand, and they are prepared for this with a long range of oxidized gilts, silvers and pearls in new shapes and at moderate prices. The Empire dresses will be ornamented with these buckles. They have a line of black corsets which are in good demand just now. It is called the B. B.

TORONTO MARKETS.

TORONTO, Jan. 5, 1893.
GROCERIES.

Trade still moves at a snail's pace. The revival of demand is not looked for until the middle of the month. The only event of any importance to be noticed is an advance in the price of sugar, the refineries having moved up their quotations $\frac{1}{8}$ c. the wholesalers had to follow. The results of stock-taking are still a matter of speculation, the inventories being yet in process. There is no unusual expectation from the returns from stock and books, but the feeling appears to be general that 1892 will show a better net result than 1891 did, though the close work on sugar made an unnecessary discount that will bring the net figures closer to those of the former bad year than there was any need for. The winter's business yet to be done holds out no prospect that it will be above the usual common place movement until preparations begin to be made on spring account. The weather will of course be a factor on one side or other to modify the conditions of trade.

COFFEE.

The play of the market outside does not change the position of affairs materially, any easier feeling being but transient and always followed by firmness. The stocks on spot in this market are light, and are low in the finer grades. The trade at the moment does not, however, call for large supplies, and wholesale buyers are availing themselves of the slack spell to gain time in the placing of their orders for further supplies. The prices remains from 20c. upwards for Rios.

DRIED FRUIT.

Trade in dried fruits, as in all other things, is suspended for the time being. No holder of stock feels any misgiving as to prices, the belief being general that when the dull period is over the supply will be easily absorbed at current prices. The position of the New York market bears out this view. There Valencia raisins continue to be good property and are firmly held at unchanged prices. Here they remain on a basis of $\frac{5}{8}$ c., but, as before, there is off-stalk fruit offering at $\frac{4}{8}$ c., but it has little to recommend it to buyers. Layers are quoted from 7c. There is no change in Sultanais, which range from $\frac{6}{8}$ to $\frac{12}{8}$ c. Malaga raisins are easy at following prices: London layers \$2.20 to \$2.50, Blackbaskets in boxes \$4, in quarter flats \$1.30, blue baskets in boxes \$4.75, connoisseur clusters in boxes \$4, in quarter flats \$1.25, superior Dehesa layers in boxes \$5, in quarter flats \$1.75, Royal Buckingham \$6, Imperial cabinets \$2.20 to \$2.75, finest Vega \$7. Prunes are quiet at from $\frac{7}{8}$ c. Currants show an easier tendency in New York, where coming receipts are expected to further depress prices. Jobbers here continue to sell at from $\frac{5}{8}$ c. The stock of 10 lb. figs is still low, but prices do not go up, as buying is not an influence at present. Boxes of figs range from $\frac{10}{8}$ to $\frac{16}{8}$ c., according to size. Bags are $\frac{4}{8}$ to $\frac{5}{8}$ c. Dates are unchanged at $\frac{5}{8}$ to $\frac{5}{8}$ c. Prime Grenobles 16 to $\frac{16}{8}$ c., lower grades of Grenobles 15 to 16c., Marbots $\frac{13}{8}$ to 14c., Cahors 11 to $\frac{12}{8}$ c., Taragona almonds 15 to 16c., Sicily filberts $\frac{9}{8}$ to 11c. The prices of peels remain at 15 to 16c. for lemon, 10 to 18c. for orange, 28 to 30c. for citron.

SUGAR.

Since the writing of the paragraph on the price of sugar, which appears in our editorial columns, the advance therein anticipated has at least partially come to pass, for the refiners have moved up their prices $\frac{1}{8}$ c. on both granulated and yellow. The wholesalers of course had to respond, and their prices are now $\frac{1}{8}$ c. higher than they were last week. The quotations now made by jobbers are $\frac{3}{8}$ c. upwards on yellow and $\frac{4}{8}$ c. on granulated. The expectation of a stiffer price made wholesalers anxious to do buying on future account in advance of the rise, but this business the refiners would not accept at current prices. As the present price is firm there is reason to believe that values will be higher still. Retailers, except in a few instances have not shown themselves eager to forestall any further increase in the price. It is probable, however, that more interest will be shown by buyers, now that one fraction of the advance has been put on.

Willert & Gray's New York Statistical says: The week—Raws and refined unchanged. Total stock in all the principal countries, at latest uneven dates, is 731,726 tons, against 659,003 tons at the same dates last year. Havanna and Matanzas stock, none, against 23,000 tons last year.

Raws—The closing week of the year is quiet and steady. Business was fixed at the outports at full quotations, and New York, after a little hesitation, bought on the same basis. The purchases of beet sugars and Javas recently made to a large extent in Europe, possibly 50,000 tons, show a disposition to take supplies from Europe earlier in 1893 than in 1883, rather than to depend entirely on Cuba and other cane countries. The latest information by cable from Cuba repeats the estimates of 10 per cent, smaller crop than last year, but there is a disposition to wait before accepting such, in view of the fact that the early estimates last year were over 100,000 tons less than the final out-turn.

Refined.—A steady hand-to-mouth trade marks the closing week of the year. There is nothing in the present outlook of the raw market to anticipate any immediate change in refined.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES.

The syrup trade is of small dimensions. The advance in sugar has made the price appreciably firmer, and as the refineries are finding sale for all they turn out, the position of the market is not so much in favor of buyers as it was. The lowest price is $\frac{2}{8}$ c.

Molasses is at the moment neglected by buyers, but movement is expected to be comparatively brisk when general trade gets fairly started again. Some New Orleans stock has been brought in recently. The range for N. O. molasses is 26 to 52c. West India molasses is quoted at 32c. up.

TEA.

The position of all stocks of tea confirms the views all along entertained that prices will be under the influence of the seller more than of the buyer when trade gets going. Within the next two weeks it is expected that a good deal of tea will be sold. Good low grades and mediums will then be at a premium, and but a limited quantity, especially of Japans, can be forthcoming at any price. Congous are likewise firm and scarce in the saleable descriptions. In Indian and Ceylon teas there is no change since the advance noted some time ago.

MARKET NOTES.

[Importers, wholesale merchants and manufacturers should send any items intended for this department so that they may reach the head office not later than Wednesday morning. The editor will always welcome such information.]

Sloan & Crowther have received a shipment of very choice New Orleans molasses.

In reference to Lucas, Steele & Bristol's January prices for teas they will gladly furnish samples and figures on application.

W. T. Harris, Chatham, N. B., dealer in general merchandise, offers 200 cases canned lobsters, also dried cod of finest quality.

The E. S. Burnham Company, New York city, manufacture some very fine grocers' specialties, the sale on which is increasing very rapidly in Canada. Clam Bouillon is one of them.

The O & W. Thum Co., Grand Rapids, Mich., are getting out a new holder for their Tanglefoot Sticky Fly Paper which will be an artistic thing in the way of engraving and printing, and an ornament when in use. The folding arrangement has been simplified and will be easily understood and readily set up by anybody. These changes will make this really useful article still more popular.

Advices from Florida report that the crop this season will probably foot up to about 3-200,000 boxes of oranges, over 1,200,000 boxes of which have already been shipped. A prominent New York receiver who has been in Florida for some time writes that Boston, Philadelphia and Western markets are well represented, but there is an absence of New

CANNED GOODS.

TORONTO.

It is difficult to find anything to say about the canned goods trade, which retains without modification all the features that have distinguished it since the pack was completed. Vegetables are still selling only in a hand-to-mouth way, and at 80c. to $1, the finer brands being mainly in request. Fruits, which had a fairly good spell before the holidays have not been selling since. Salmon is still dull. The position of the salmon market continues to be essentially strong, but current trade locally is dull. The jobbers appear to be sincere in their efforts to obtain better prices than they got last year, as there is no report of any business below $1.45.

MARKETS.—Continued

York drummers. The future market seems very uncertain. There is a large quantity of fruit still in Florida, and advices from most points report that both growers and speculators have ceased shipping for the present and show a disposition to hold back their fruit for the February market. It is hoped that the market will not be overstocked then. —N. Y. Commercial Bulletin.

Professor James F. Babcock, the well-known chemical expert, for many years State Assayer for Massachusetts, recently purchased in open market a sample of Walter Baker & Co.'s Breakfast Cocoa, and after making a careful analysis, filed a certificate in which he says: "I find that Walter Baker & Co.'s Breakfast Cocoa is absolutely pure. It contains no trace of any substance foreign to the pure roasted cocoa-bean. The color is that of pure cocoa; the flavor is natural, and not artificial: and the product is in every particular such as must have been produced from the pure-cocoa bean without the addition of any chemical, alkali, acid or artificial flavoring substance, which are to be detected in cocoas prepared by the so-called "Dutch Process."

PETROLEUM.

Canadian refined is unchanged at 14 to 14½c., and all other prices remain at quotations in Prices Current.

The Petrolia Advertiser reports: Petrolia crude $1.18 per barrel; Oil Springs crude $1.19 per barrel. The past week having been devoted to the joys and pleasures extended to us by old Father Xmas, matters of business pertaining to oil have been given a rest. The price of crude is nominally $1.18, but there has been hardly any business doing and it is not much likely there will be until the commencement of the New Year, 1893.

BUTTER AND CHEESE.

Large rolls are in liberal supply and selling at 16 to 17c. Grades below the best are taken at 13 to 14c. Good dairy tub is still a scarce article and easily brings 18 to 19c., if it is really first-class. A cent more is possible. Bakers are paying good prices as well for grades suitable to their purposes, 14 to 15c. being the quotation current for such tub butter as is in request on baking account. The butter market continues to favor sellers, and could make room for a good supply of tubs without any effect upon the price.

Cheese is firm at 11 to 11½c. for fall stock.

DRIED APPLES—The price is steady at 4¾c at which the outward movement has been large lately.

EVAPORATED APPLES—Are quiet at from 6¾ to 7c.

EGGS—The price is now firm at 20 to 22c. for fresh eggs, while cold storage sell at 18 to 19c., and limed at 14½ to 15c.

HONEY—Trade is dull at 7 to 10c. for extracted and 13 to 16c. for sections.

HOPS—There is little trade, with the prices ranging from 17 to 19c.

ONIONS—Are dull at $2.50 per barrel. Cold weather affects delivery and makes the price firm.

POTATOES—The market is in a healthy state. Cold weather has reduced the offerings. Cars go at 70 to 75c. on spot. The price out of store is 80c.

DRESSED POULTRY—Turkeys are 10 to 10½c. per lb., geese 6½ to 7c., ducks are 60 to 80c. a pair, chickens 35 to 50c.

HOGS AND PROVISIONS.

Hogs are still high and hard to get. Packers have not pursued the stand-off policy to any extent, as it is noticeable that all stock offering is accepted. Select weights are $7.65 on spot, but sales have been made for delivery next week at $7.70. Long clear has made another big advance. Lard also is higher.

BACON—Long clear 9½ to 10c. Smoked backs are 12c., bellies 13c. to 13½c., rolls 10c.

HAMS—Are 12 to 12½c.

LARD—Pure Canadian is 11¼c. in tubs, and 11½c. in pails and 10½ to 11c. in tierces. Compound is 9c.

BARREL PORK—U.S. heavy mess is $17.50 to $18. Canadian short cut is $18.50 to $19.

DRESSED MEATS—Beef forees are 5 to 6c. hindquarters 7 to 8½c., veal 6½ to 8c., mutton 6½ to 7c., lamb 7c. to 8½c.

GREEN FRUIT.

The fruit trade is quiet. The demand was pretty well exhausted before the close of the year, and cold weather prevents free shipping. Jamaica oranges are $4.50 to $5. Jamaicas are $5 to $5.50 in barrels and $3 to $3.50 in boxes. Florida oranges are $3.25 to $3.50. Fancy Floridas—Mandarines and Tangerines—are quoted at from $3.50 to $4. Lemons are $3.25 to $4.50. Bananas are $1.75 to $2. Pineapples are 20 to 30c. Malaga grapes are $7 to $8. Fancy cranberries are $9 per barrel. North Shore stock is offered in baskets at 75 to 90c. Apples are plentiful at $1.50 to $2.50 per barrel.

FISH AND OYSTERS.

The sales of fish are still light, under a quiet demand. Stocks are likely to be none too full for Lent, as there is a limited stock in the frozen state. Manitoba white fish is 7½c., other whitefish is 7c., and salmon trout is the same price. Lake herring are $2 to $2.50 per hundred. Sea herring is 5c. Steak cod is 6½ to 7c. Market cod is 4½c. Codfish, skinned and boned, sells at 6½c., and is in fair request. Labrador herring is $6, shore herring $5 to $5.50, and Digby 11 to 12½c. per lb., boneless fish is 4c., boneless cod is 7 to 8c. Oysters are $1.25.

FIRST-CLASS GOODS.

We respectfully ask the trade to recommend this brand to their customers:

MONTREAL MARKETS.

MONTREAL, Jan. 5, 1893.

[As there is often inequality in the prices of the various sellers on this market, owing to differences in buying conditions and other circumstances, and as prices are modified by both quantity and quality, the quotations given below, and in our Prices Current, necessarily take a wide range.]

GROCERIES.

Between the two holidays no one expected any large volume of business, but on the whole the wholesale grocery trade has experienced a fair holiday business at steady prices. Tea has been enquired for and a larger volume of business is reported. Values on dried fruit have been somewhat irregular, in consequence of inferior offerings, but on really good lines a moderate trade was done on a fairly steady basis. Syrups and molasses have moved fairly well with no change to note, and altogether the grocery trade have not much cause for complaint with the business that has been done. It is worthy of remark, also, that a healthy tone pervades in all staple lines, notably in sugar, and refiners will not consider any request for commission at all, claiming that they are perfectly satisfied to wait until business comes to them, as it must do, for they consider that supplies in third hands throughout the country cannot be large. Few people talk about payments, and the presumption is, therefore, that they are satisfactory on the whole.

SUGARS.

It looks as though buyers had concluded that it was not policy to hold off much longer, for there were attempts to negotiate some contracts for large quantities for future delivery at former prices, but the refiners would not consent to binding themselves to anything in the face of the position of the market for raw material. Some granulated was moved at $4\frac{1}{2}$ c. from the refineries and some yellows at $3\frac{3}{8}$ to 4c. for bright and $3\frac{1}{2}$ to $3\frac{3}{4}$ c. for lower grades, but on Tuesday the price went up $\frac{1}{8}$ c., and granulated is now $4\frac{3}{8}$ c. at the refineries, and yellow quotes firm at $3\frac{3}{8}$ c.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES.

There has not been much doing in syrups since our last report, but a few lots of choice domestic have been moved at 2 to $2\frac{1}{2}$ c. in the wood. A sale of American stock was also made at 23c.

Molasses is quiet, with no new sales to report. For a round lot of Barbadoes, however, $32\frac{1}{2}$ c. is the first figure obtainable now from any holder.

TEAS.

Buyers appear to recognize that it is hopeless to hold off any longer in tea, and the consequence of this has been sales of some round lots of Japans during the week, some 2000 packages in the aggregate changing hands since our last at a basis ranging from 15 to 19c., and sales of choicer grades have been made all the way from 21 to 30c.

COFFEE.

Coffee has ruled somewhat unsettled in sympathy with the feeling in New York but with light stocks here, prices are nominally the same as they were. We quote nominally Jamaica 18 to $18\frac{1}{2}$ c., Rio 19 to 21c., Maracaibo $18\frac{1}{2}$ to 20c., Java 22 to 25c., an Mocha 23 to 25c. for straight lots.

SPICES.

Spices are unchanged, a fair trade being done in pepper at 7 to $7\frac{1}{4}$ c. Cloves rule steady at $7\frac{1}{2}$ to $8\frac{1}{4}$ c. and nutmegs have changed hands from 50c. to \$1.00 according to quality.

RICE.

The rice market is quiet as usual and prices do not show any change. We quote: Standard, \$3.85 to \$4; Louisiana, \$5.25 to \$5.50; choice Burmah, 4 to $4\frac{1}{2}$ c.; Japans \$4.50 to \$5; Patnas, \$5.25 to \$5.50; Carolina, \$7 to \$8.

NUTS.

The demand on holiday account having been satisfied business in nuts is on the quiet side. Prices are nominally unchanged. Pecans 11 to $12\frac{1}{2}$ c., Terragona almonds $16\frac{1}{2}$ c., Grenoble walnuts $13\frac{1}{2}$ to $14\frac{1}{2}$ c., filberts 10 to $10\frac{1}{2}$ c., Ivica $14\frac{1}{2}$ c., Brazil 15c., marbots $12\frac{1}{2}$ c., cocoa nuts \$3.50 to \$4.50 per bag of 100 for old, new \$5 to \$5.50.

DRIED FRUITS.

The stock of inferior goods offering has led to some low priced sales, $4\frac{1}{4}$ to $4\frac{3}{4}$ c. being mentioned in some lots, but buyers can depend for a certainty that no really good to choice stock can be touched at any such figure. In fact we note sales of straight wholesale lots of prime Valencia offstalk at 5c. and seconds $4\frac{3}{4}$ c. so that it is easy to see no jobber could job out for less than a $\frac{1}{4}$ to $\frac{3}{8}$ c. advance on this basis. Currants are steady for $5\frac{1}{2}$ to $5\frac{3}{4}$ c., as to package in straight lots.

FRUIT.

The movement in green fruit etc. has been beyond the average for the holiday season, but it is quieting down somewhat now. Local quotations are as follows: Valencia oranges, \$4.25 for small boxes and \$5.25 for large; Messina lemons, \$2.25 to \$3; Florida oranges, bright good counts, \$3.25 to \$3.50; bright Florida russets, \$3 to \$3.30; Jamaica oranges, \$3 per box and \$5.25 per brl; Langerenes, \$3.50; grape fruit, \$3.25; cocoanuts, \$4.50; fancy dates, $5\frac{1}{2}$ c.; fancy figs, 12c; choice cranberries, \$9.50 to \$10 per brl.

APPLES.

The local market is quiet, but we note sales of car lots at $2.25 to $2.50 as to quality. Some holders here have made turnovers in Chicago on lots sent there from the west at $2.40 to $2.50, which stands them a loss.

POTATOES.

The potato market has been quiet and steady at 80 to 85c for car lots of choice early rose.

POULTRY.

The demand for poultry was good until the very close of the week, but has been quieter since. We quote turkeys $10\frac{1}{2}$ to $11\frac{1}{2}$ c., geese 6 to $6\frac{1}{2}$ c., ducks 8 to $8\frac{1}{2}$ c., chickens $7\frac{1}{2}$ to 8c.

PROVISIONS.

Provisions continue quiet with only a jobbing movement. We quote as follows: Canadian short cut, per brl. \$19 to \$20; Mess pork, Western, new, per brl. \$19 to \$20.00; Hams, city cured, per brl. 11 to $12\frac{1}{2}$ c.; Lard, Canadian, in pails 9 to $9\frac{1}{2}$ c.; Bacon, per lb., 11 to 12c.; Lard, com, refined, per lb., $8\frac{1}{2}$ to $8\frac{3}{4}$ c.

EGGS.

Eggs rule steady at $14\frac{1}{2}$ to 17c. according to quality.

BUTTER AND CHEESE.

There has been nothing new in butter since our last, but prices are nominally unchanged. We quote: Late made fall creamery, 23 to $23\frac{1}{2}$ c.; earlier makes 22c.; Townships 20 to 21c.; Morrisburg and Brockville 18 to 19c.; Western dairy 17 to 18c.

Cheese is now in few hands and firmly held at 11c.

THE SCARCITY OF HOGS.

Reports from all over the United States indicate an unprecedented dullness in the packing industry. Men have been discharged by the thousand from points hitherto regarded as the great centers of the business. Plants are being operated at, in some cases, less than half their capacity, and all this has been brought about by the scarcity of hogs.

Statistics lately compiled show that the hog receipts for given months in the current winter fall below the corresponding period of last year by over one million hogs, and consequently there is a proportionate falling off in the work done by the packers.

Leading packers acknowledge that there seems but little chance of immediate relief, and that the shortage is becoming every day more apparent.

Many and divers reasons are given for the shortage. Some say heavy rains have been the cause. Others contend that the low prices of product early in the spring made farmers careless, and instead of keeping their hogs, as they usually do, until the holidays, they fattened them on corn early and sent them to the market. With these and many other solutions of the difficulty, however, the fact remains that the scarcity prevails, and prices for products must sooner or later be affected. The home market will probably feel the trouble keenly.—National Provisioner.

HOW TEA IS SORTED.

Tea sorting is one of the common occupations of young girls in tea farming districts of Japan, says an English exchange. They carefully pick out all the seeds, weeds, bits of bark and other rubbish that unavoidably fall into baskets during the picking.

The sorting is done after the tea leaves have been fired—that is, dried by being placed in a tray with a stout paper bottom and shaken over a charcoal fire for a time, and then placed on the top of an oven built for that purpose, when the drying operatives twist the leaves by hand.

The pickers, besides taking out the rubbish, in many cases sort the leaves into different grades, the better qualities being taken out and sold at very remunerative prices. The Japanese teas are divided into eight grades, but unfortunately the best of them are not sent to Great Britain.

After the tea has been dried and is ready for picking, it is carefully sifted, and then packed in lead-lined chests and in caddies. The dust from the sifting is saved, and large quantities of it are sent to America every year. The dust only costs about sixpence a pound wholesale, and by careful admixture with good tea can be made to retail at two and sixpence.

Restore goods to their proper places as soon after using as possible

FLOUR AND FEED.

TORONTO.

The flour market remains dull and unchanged. There is a feeling the present prices are likely to be improved on, as the depression appears to depend on conditions of over supply that are exaggerated. Prices continue as below:

FLOUR.—City millers' and dealers' prices are: Manitoba patents, $4.60; strong bakers' $4.25; white wheat patents, $4.50; straight roller, $3.40; low grades, per bag, $1.25 to $1.50.

Car prices are: Toronto freights—Manitoba patents, $4.35 to $4.45; Manitoba strong bakers' $3.90 to $4.10; Ontario patents, $3.40 to $3.50; straight roller, $3.00 to $3.20; extra, $2.60 to $2.70; low grades, per bag, $1.00 to $1.50.

MEAL.—Oatmeal is $3.80. Cornmeal is $3.50.

FEED.—Bran is $11.50 to $12, shorts $12.50 to $13 mixed feed $22, feeding corn 57 to 58c., oats 29 to 31c.

HAY.—Baled timothy is $9.

STRAW.—Is steady at $5.50 to $6.

MONTREAL.

There has been no material change in flour during the week, and buyers show the same indifference as ever. As a consequence only a few jobbing sales are made. We quote: Patent, winter $3.95 to $4.15; patent, spring $4.20 to $4.35; straight rollers $3.45 to $3.65; extra $3.00 to $3.15; superfine $2.60 to 2.85; city strong bakers $4.00 to 4.10; strong bakers $4.00 to $4.10; oatmeal $2.05 to $2.10 bran $14; shorts $15.

EXPORTING COFFEE.

Coffee is not a shrub, as is generally supposed, but a tree, which, if allowed to go untrimmed, would attain twenty feet or more in height, but which is generally kept down to eight or ten feet for convenience in picking. A grove can be started by burying the berries or from slips. The latter are preferable, placed about six feet apart, and those plants which have been taken from the nursery with considerable earth around their roots will bear fruit in two years, though their full yield is not attained under four years. It is calculated that 1,000 thirty trees will yield on a fair average 3,200 pounds of coffee per annum, but in some parts of San Paulo province the yield is as high as 6,500 pounds. There are two and sometimes three harvests to a year, but after fifteen or twenty years the old trees must be cut down to give place to new ones.

When fully ripe the berry is about the size, shape and color of a large cranberry. The tough red skin incloses two grains or seeds. The old way of preparing it for market, still much used in Brazil, was as follows: When the berries have acquired a rich blood red they are picked into bags by the negroes, twenty-three pounds being considered a fair days work for one picker. The bags are then emptied on the terreno or drying place, which is generally a piece of ground beaten smooth or covered with cement. After a few days in the sun the outer skin becomes black hard and shriveled, and then the berries are pounded in huge wooden mortars until the skins are broken without injuring the tough grains.

By sitting, the skins and grains are separated and the latter are again spread out in the sun until the pellicle enveloping each grain is dry as dust. Then they are again subjected to the mortars and the winnowing fan, and are ready for sale or immediate consumption. The improved method now in vogue on the wealthier estates consists in drying the freshly picked grains on wooden trays or pavements, by which they escape the earthy flavor acquired when dried on the bare ground, and the outer and inner envelopes are removed by passing them through two mills.

The main feature of the first mill is a horizontal copper cylinder, whose surface is roughened after the manner of a rasp. It revolves against a board, between which and the teeth space is left for the grains to pass, but not the husks. The grains drop into water and are left to soak twelve hours, in which time the parchment-like film that envelopes each seed is softened. They are spread out again on trays in the sun, and when thoroughly dry are passed through the second mill, which resembles those used for grinding plaster, except that the two vertical rolling disks are of wood, six feet in diameter and five inches thick, their light weight abrading the pellicles without injuring the grains. Then the fanner is brought into requisition and the berries are put in bags for transportation.

The freight on a sack of coffee (138 pounds) is about 1 cent per mile; therefore, coffee coming from the end of the Dom Pedro II railway must pay in the neighborhood of $4 per sack for transportation to the shipping point—one-third of its value when delivered in Rio. From Rio to New York the freight rarely exceeds 60 cents a sack, and it is often as low as 25 cents. Thus fifty miles of railroad carriage in the country where it grows costs more than 5,200 miles of ocean. Many of the planters still send their coffee to market by mule train, considering that the cheaper way of transportation.

The entrance into Santos of a mule train from the interior is something worth seeing. The train is always preceded by a white horse wearing a string of bells, and the mules obediently follow the leader. Sometimes troops of several hundred arrive in a morning, and again there are weeks when none appear. Every mule brings two bags of coffee on his back. Having made long, slow journeys, often hundreds of miles, the animals are pitiable looking objects when their burdens are removed, for the constant sawing of the loads has not only abraded the skin, but in many instances ground off the flesh to the bone.

The bags are dumped in huge piles in the custom house yards, and around them cargadores immediately collect like swarms of black bees. There is an export duty to pay, and every bag must be pierced and a sample withdrawn in order to determine the quality and the duty thereon. The tariff, based on the market price, is regulated anew every Saturday.

The sampling instrument is a brass tube, shaped exactly like a pen. When the point is pushed into a sack of coffee the berries run down through the tube, and after a handful has been abstracted the instrument is withdrawn and its point turned over like a crotchet hook, thus closing the opening. The operation occupies only a few seconds, and the "samples" taken out amount to many tons in the course of a year. They, together with all samples of exported sugars, are presented to the lepers' hospital.

The gangs of cargadores employed in "toting" the coffee away from the custom house and loading it upon waiting vessels are a feature of Santos. Naked, except from waist to knees, their chocolate colored hides glisten in the sun and their well-cultivated muscles stand out like whiplashes. Each gang has its leader, generally the tallest and most powerful negro among them, who carries a rattle, to the music of which his followers keep step in a rapid jog trot, singing a low, monotonous song meanwhile, in words to us unintelligible. Sometimes the rattle gives place to a small flag.—Ex.

THE PATRONIZING MERCHANT.

There is nothing so ridiculous and so easily discernable in a merchant as an air of patronage towards customers. It is a species of vanity which is as ludicrous as it is disagreeable. This weakness is called bump-tiousness, and is repelling to the general run of customers, who are quick to distinguish it from a pleasant presence. A pleasant presence in the store is one of the essentials towards the success of a merchant. This essential of a pleasant presence is made up of simplicity. Just that and nothing else. Simplicity is the most charming of all qualities and is and always has been possessed by the men and women that the world deems great. The simple man is natural and is possessed of a suavity which is real. Assumed suavity is generally made up of bump-tiousness and is as different from the inherent quality as the sweet violet is different from the violet of the millinery counter.

The bumptious merchant in his vanity reckons himself somewhat of a philanthropist. His behaviour towards his customers is offensive to those amongst them who are of a keen or sensitive nature. In his overweening vanity he reckons himself the patron and the customer the beneficiary. Every action of his conveys that expression. When he is sympathetic he is condescendingly so; heartiness is luring and often vulgar; his insincerity is apparent, for humanity is a distinctive judge of disposition and character. The patronising merchant is a humbug.—Ex.

A retail grocer in Minneapolis recently said, as reported by the Northwest Trade: "In looking over my book accounts, aggregating something like 2,300, at one time I found it easy to classify them as, one-third good pay; one-third slow pay; and one-third don't pay. Now, the first third of that business has some profit in it; the second third, the slow pay, virtually ate up its own profit; and the last, of course, was a dead loss. Under these circumstances I reached the conclusion that it would be good business to sell only to the first third, those who were good pay and afforded some profit. I would do a small business but a profitable business, and I would count on reducing two-thirds of my expenses."

If you want books, it is rarely wise to pay double price for them to a travelling book-seller.

A feather duster disperses but does not remove the dust from the store.

A reputation for truthfulness is indispensable to permanent and satisfying success.

Credit is often too cheap and overbuying far too common. Don't be guilty of the one, and don't abuse the other.

One thing in particular should be impressed upon clerks—the necessity of careful attention to small customers.

The trader who pays his way must sell at a profit, and cannot afford to cut below others in the same line.

THE SUGAR CURE.

The following, which is translated and abridged from the Deutsche Zucker Industrie, will be good news to the sugar trade, whose staple is so frequently tabooed by medical men. It would seem that we want more, and not less, sugar in this dyspeptic age, and, if our German authority be right, the remedy should be, "Take no more pills, nor any other medicine, except Tate's Cubes." It may be mentioned that grating lump sugar on wounds is an old and well known remedy in some English country places.

Some years ago a pamphlet on sugar as a food and medicine appeared in Jena. As a motto it bore the saying of Claude Bernard, Truly everything may be referred back to sugar. The authoress, who had suffered long from chronic abdominal catarrh (from which she had, amongst other places, in vain sought relief at Karlsbad), was cured by sugar. She then studied this healing property of sugar, and collected in the pamphlet everything she could find in medical literature on the subject, with the following results. The Swiss chamois hunters on their excursions only take bacon and sugar with them to restore their muscular power when exhausted. Dr. Bocker, in 1849, in his account of his numerous medical experiments, said, with regard to the effect of sugar, that he had eaten daily from 200 to 600 grammes (0.40 lb. to 1.25 lb.) of sugar and honey without suffering from indigestion, when taken with other suitable foods. He had a large practice among the poor, among whom chlorosis, scrofula and rickets frequently occur, and he treated all of these maladies with sugar. Setting aside Torn's statement, that the Turks heal wounds by strewing sugar on them, the authoress finds mention in 1666, in an article by Skuletus, of the healing of sores by that process. In the first half of our century sugar was much used medically, for thrush in the mouths of small children, which Hecker removed, through gentle rubbing with powdered sugar. It was also used for sores, spots of hard skin, ulcerated discharge from the ears, and, further, as a powder for the larynx. But the results lately obtained by Professor Lucke, at Strasburg, in the treatment of wounds with sugar after severe amputations, are specially notable; they were tations, are specially notable, for of 202 patients treated with sugar only five died. We learn from the authoress that Schurmann administered small pieces of sugar as the best, and, in fact, the only remedy against Asiatic cholera. It is a pity, she adds, that those who tested the vitality of the cholera germs in beer, wine, and other drinks, were not led by this remark to try a solution of sugar in their experiments. A second treatise by the same lady with the motto, "Sugar Heals," was published in 1892 (by Herman Briegen, at Berlin), and called "A New Remedy for Stomach Complaints." Leading physicians have given the writer (in the D. Z. I.) verbal confirmation of the truth of the authoress' statements, that in the last two years many persons suffering from nervous stomach complaints have obtained happy results from the sugar cure, whilst most have been greatly relieved by it. The authoress adjures the reader, further on, to aid himself by taking sugar as the one cure. Through taking it the patient can alone obtain relief from his sufferings, whether they consist of acidity, pains in the stomach or heartburn; by the use of sugar these conditions and their recurrence can be lastingly prevented. Amongst nervous stomach complaints which can be cured by taking sugar, I place all those sicknesses which doctors do not consider infectious, and also those where no cancer or similar disease is present. In all other cases, for example, in debility leading to enlargement of the stomach, as well as in simple colds, sugar will brilliantly prove its healing power."

Under the heading "How shall the patients eat sugar?" we receive detailed information from the authoress concerning the sugar cure. The patients are advised at first to take not less than 100 and never over 250 grammes of sugar (say 1-4 lb. to 1-2 lb.). Everyone will then be able to test, by himself, whether he has taken the necessary amount of sugar for the regulation of his digestion. The sugar is to be taken in small pieces (cubes or dice), with a little water drunk directly afterwards, or as sugar water (eau sucree). Usually 10 to 15 grammes of sugar are taken after breakfast, but the chief quantity, perhaps 50 to 100 grammes (2 oz. to 4 oz.), must be taken after the main meal of the day. The patient must always have sugar at hand, so that, in the case of any discomfort, acidity, oppression, or pains, he can take at any moment one or more pieces, according to his experience. Sugar water (eau sucree) has also frequently proved itself beneficial as a table drink, so that former recurring discomforts cease completely, or are considerably relieved. The authoress refers to the celebrated Hafeland, who writes:

"After too heavy a meal I have very often removed all indisposition by two loths (about 40 grammes) of sugar dissolved in water. If one feels unwell towards evening, one should take 50 to 100 grammes of sugar in hot water, or, if inclined to nausea, in cold water. The favorable effects of the sugar do not show themselves for a few weeks, and, in very severe cases, for a few months. Appetite, sleep, and appearance improve, and an increase of weight follows, which latter, however, can be controlled. He who has once accustomed himself to the use of sugar never likes entirely to give it up." The authoress has taken 100 grammes of sugar daily for the last 10 years, and has increased in weight by one third, while before the cure she was emaciated. According to her, the widespread opinion that sugar spoils the teeth is erroneous. Eating delicacies hard to digest, such as confectionery, is what causes decay. On the contrary, it is said of a learned man, Mallory, that he ate great quantities of sugar, and had magnificent teeth till he was very old. Another learned man, Professor Aston, of Edinburgh, is of the opinion that he owes his remarkably fine teeth to sugar eating. Both of the authoress' pamphlets tend to show that sugar is to be considered as a nourishing food, and not as a delicacy. Comparing the consumption of sugar per head in England, where it is far heavier than in Germany, she adds that the strength and endurance of the English race is owing to their diet, and, in this direction, to the use of sugar. The opinion of the authoress is comprised in the axiom, "To eat more sugar is good for all; to eat much sugar is good for invalids."—Produce Markets' Review.

SARDINES.

But a portion of the little fish that are sold as sardines are entitled to the name. Sprats, herrings and pilchards, all inferior in delicacy to the true sardine, are imposed upon the consumer under false colors. They are excellent and valuable articles of food, but they are not sardines. The excellence of so-called sardines depends first, upon the genuineness of the fish itself; and next, upon the quality of oil in which it is preserved. Pure olive oil is an essential; with any other the delicate flavor of the fish is destroyed. Adulterated and inferior oil is used to a great extent in the preservation of sardines, and a rank and coarse flavor results. The consumer should always select brands whose reputation is a guarantee of quality.

Sardines are abundant in the Mediterranean and the Bay of Biscay, and are also found in the Atlantic ocean, although not as far north as England.

Sardines are exported to the most distant parts of the world, cured in oil, in tin boxes. To cure them, they are first carefully washed, then sprinkled in fine salt, and after a few hours, the head, gills, etc., are removed; they are then washed again, and spread out on willow branches or wire work, exposed to the sun and wind if the weather is dry, but in damp and rainy weather to a current of air under cover. They are next put into boiling oil, in which they remain for a short time, and when they are taken out the oil is drained away from them as much as possible, and they are put into the familiar tin boxes. The boxes being filled with sardines, oil is poured in, the lid soldered on, and they are placed for a short time in boiling water or exposed to hot steam. The boxes that have leaked or burst in boiling are rejected and those that remain sound are ready for the market. In the south of France sardines are sometimes cured in red wine, and those so cured are Sardines Anchoises, or anchovy sardines.

There seems to be no good reason why the sprat of the British coast should not be cured in oil like that of the west coast of France, and so prove a new source of wealth, besides probably being brought at a lower price to market, to the advantage of those for whom sardines are at present too expensive. Several species of small Clupeidae, which resemble the sardine, are found in different parts of the world, and are used the same as sardines of the Mediterranean. One species frequents the south and east coast of Ceylon in such vast shoals that 400,000 have been taken at a single haul of the net in a little bay, and when the shoal approached the shore the broken water became as smooth as if a sheet of ice had been floating below the surface.—Ex.

"CREDIT" AGAIN.

In a recent issue we made some remarks upon Cash v. Credit, which, from the extensive way in which they were copied, must have struck the nail very fairly on the head. In this editorial we purpose to indicate in a general manner the method of judging safe credits.

In the first place the credit of accommodation paper should never be given. It is not strictly honest, and it is also a piece of unwisdom. Accommodation paper is the raft by which a merchant deserts the sinking wreck of his business. It enables two men of little credit to finesse so as to obtain large credit, and when the denouement comes, the man who is most innocent is the man who has to pay up, for the astuter scamp, who has "been there before," takes care to fail first, or otherwise get out of paying the note. The sign of accommodation paper is hard to decipher, but when one man gives a note to another in a totally different line of business one may generally consider it to be accommodation paper. The small storekeeper is not always the offender. At times of stress the wholesaler has been known to borrow the notes of or draw drafts upon his customer in excess of the latter's liability to him—accommodation which the customer cannot readily refuse to grant one who trusts him.

In Great Britain the use of accommodation paper is contrary to law. In Canada it is not so, and, as the sudden stoppage of the custom might temporarily injure commerce more than the change would benefit it, we cannot urge the intervention of the state until the evil reaches greater proportions. But a step in the right direction might be taken by those who have the control of credit which might so reduce the prevalence of the practice as to make it an easy thing subsequently to abolish it entirely.

It is dangerous to make sales upon credit to distant customers, of whose actual standing and movements it is difficult to keep track. Cash transactions are far the best in this case, and were they always insisted upon we would hear less of preferred creditors in the maritime provinces, heavy law costs, and other fruitless expenses. Every merchant knows how difficult it is for him to recover from an insolvent or feeble firm in his own town, and many have learned by bitter experience how much more improbable his returns are when the debtor lives elsewhere.

We would also call attention to certain necessary precautions in dealing even with local houses. Our remarks, while applying particularly to banking and wholesale dealers, are applicable also to retail transactions. It is risky to trust a poor dealer simply because his endorser is reputed good. He has been known to pull his backer down with him, while if the backer endorses his notes what other notes may he not be on as well? Double name paper does not mean a man and a dummy. Of course, in ordinary business transactions, the buyer may be good and the seller poor, and the note be yet all that can be desired. Discretion more than set rules must be relied upon in such cases. A good banker or clever business man can tell a shallow business as a sailor distinguishes shallow water by certain indefinable surface indications.

In making advances or sales, or in discounting paper, there are two rules to be observed that are not sufficiently followed at present. The first is to demand a statement from the debtor or customer at regular intervals and to keep track of the amount of his stock, which should bear a very large proportion to his debit balance with the trusting firm, or, in the case of a bank of which he is a customer, be considerable in excess of his discounts current. The second rule is that the firm desiring credit be kept insured against fire. In these days it is an indication of lack of sense, or of poor business ability, or at least of close sailing to the wind, for any firm to remain uninsured. If there are not sufficient profits in the business to allow the annual premiums to be laid by, the firm can scarcely be considered sound enough to be trusted, while a man who declines to protect himself against fire loss can hardly be expected to give much thought as to the protection of his creditors.

Retail dealers cannot, of course, insist upon these points, but they can pretty accurately judge the soundness of their customer by finding out his tangible assets and whether they are safeguarded by insurance.—Canadian Trade Review.

AN ORANGE.

An orange. A bright, yellow skinned Palermo. That is all. Yet, that small, golden hued fruit has all the power of a necromancer of the "middle ages." It can, and does call up before my mind with vividness, and distinctness pictures of a crowded auction room, of a busy pier, of a stormy ocean, and of a rippling sunlit sea, reflecting in its own blue depths the deeper blue of the unclouded sky above it. It brings before me a vision of a sleepy Italian village, resting peacefully at the foot of a slumbering volcano. It tells me of a land of passionate loves and passionate hatreds, of noble deeds and dark mines. By virtue of its power my spirit gazes again upon the country of the hot blooded generous Sicilian. Again I feel the hearty clasp of his hand or meet his dark frown of hate. For I have lived among these fierce impetuous sons of the Southern land, and have learned to appreciate the love that never falters, the friendship that never wants and the hatred that never sleeps. I have drawn in, with the heated atmosphere of their beloved island some of the fire that tingles through all their veins. I have laughed with them, and have danced with them, have fought with their men and have made love to their women, have known joy and sorrow among them. And my orange brings it all back to me. I hear once more the love song of the dark eyed, tawny skinned peasant girl, once more I stand upon the quay at Palermo, and watch the natives loading the fruit steamers, once more I float upon the blue waters of the Mediterranean.—The Fruit Trade Journal.

Thursday, of last week, a deputation of the dry goods section of the Montreal Board of Trade, consisting of Mr. R. L. Gault, president, and Messrs. James Slessor and P. P. Martin, waited upon Mr. John Burton, general freight agent of the Grand Trunk railway, and Mr. George Olds, general traffic manager of the C.P.R., in reference to cartage questions. Owing to the recent separation of the cartage from the freight in the railway accounts, the dry goods men complain that they are compelled to pay cartage to their warehouses upon goods bought, freight prepaid, in the west, and they ask the railways to return to the old system under which the cartage and freight were included on the one charge, but the goods delivered free at their own doors. The railway representatives, after giving reasons for the present system, replied that no alteration could be made at present because the tariff sheets and schedules have already been printed.

TRADE IN THE MARITIME PROVINCES.

But 200 new vessels, of 30,000 tons, were added to the registry in the Maritime Province during the past year, leaving a net decrease of 40,000 tons. Of this 33,600 was in Nova Scotia and 11,800 in New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. Notwithstanding the almost total failure of the inshore fisheries, the exports of fish from Halifax to the West Indies increased from 247,500 quintals of cod and 32,200 barrels of pickled fish in 1891, to 262,000 quintals of cod and 45,800 barrels of pickled fish last year. The principal markets for these fish were Jamaica, Porto Rico, Cuba and Demerara. There was a decrease in the imports of molasses of 9,000 puncheons and a decrease of 1,500 hogsheds of sugar, but an increase of 50,000 bags of sugar. As a result of the abolition of the sugar duties the collection of customs revenue decreased $233,000.—Bradstreet's.

LIGHTBOUND, RALSTON & CO. DINE THEIR STAFF.

There was the usual pleasant annual gathering of the employes of Lightbound, Ralston & Co., wholesale grocers, in Montreal last week at the residence of Mr. Lightbound, senior partner of the firm, on Peel street. It is Mr. Lightbound's regular custom at the holiday season to dine the staff of the firm, and the present was the eighteenth annual gathering, and quite as enjoyable as any of its predecessors. By the kind courtesy of Mr. Lightbound the representative of THE GROCER participated, and is able to tell the trade of the good feeling that exists between Lightbound, Ralston & Co. and their staff. The guests were received by Mr. and Mrs. Lightbound, and after full justice had been done to the excellent menu, and their kind hostess had retired, the feast of reason and the flow of the soul proceeded.

The genial host in a short preliminary address expressed the pleasure it gave him to have his assistants once more gathered around him. For some it was the first time, others could count back almost to the first dinner given eighteen years ago by the firm, but old or new in the service of the house, all were welcome. These annual gatherings helped greatly towards the harmonious working of the staff, and from his experience of its results it made him wonder that the idea was still left to him alone, as to his knowledge no other firm of grocers had made any attempt in this direction. Proceeding, Mr. Lightbound thanked his staff for their good work during the past year. In many ways it had been a difficult one, and much work had had to be done, all, though, had borne their share, and through their combined efforts had carried on probably the largest business handled by a staff of their numbers in the Dominion. Some idea of the work to be done will be gathered from the fact that in the last three months' goods to the amount of $600,000 had been invoiced by the house, closing with this almost unparalleled amount a most successful year. Once more he thanked them for their good work, and extended to one and all a most hearty welcome, and wished to all a happy and prosperous new year.

During the latter part of Mr. Lightbound's address busy hands had uncovered a beautiful "Grandfather's clock," and when he sat down Mr. Tidmarsh, the firm's "Napoleon of finance," arose, and in a few fitting words presented the clock to Mr. Lightbound as a slight token of the affection and esteem of his employes.

A few fitting words of thanks from the "chief," and the regular toasts were proceeded with.

"Our Travellers" was responded to by Messrs. Hutchison and Rutherford.

"Our Office Staff" was ably answered by Messrs. Tidmarsh and Aird.

Mr. Thompson gave a well studied and interesting sketch of the general state of the country in the western part of Canada, and Mr. Ballantyne of that in the most important part of eastern Canada, the Eastern Townships.

Mr. Huxley arose to answer the toast of the "Tamilkande Tea." While thanking the company for the hearty manner in which they had drunk the toast, he regretted that it had not been drunk with Tamilkande tea. After only eight months' work, this tea was already for sale in two hundred and sixty towns and villages in Canada, and though many encouraging letters and unsolicited testimonials had been received, they were yet to receive a complaint as to its quality. He regretted that through the absence of Mr. Pegg "Tamilkande" lost an eloquent and poetical champion, yet as that gentleman had gone to England to get married and would shortly return, he could not really complain about his being absent.

Mr. Lightbound, in proposing "Our Sugar Interests," paid a high tribute to our refiners. He said that Canada to-day was supplied by its refiners with sugar which for its purity and general qualities was not excelled by any other country.

Mr. Thompson, of the Canada Sugar Co., answered to the toast in fitting terms.

THE GROCER representative was then called upon to answer for "The Press" and THE GROCER, after which the ladies were duly honored, and then the party adjourned to the drawing room, where the genial host proceeded to distribute some very acceptable gifts from an attractive Christmas tree. Every one had been thought of, and all went home carrying with them some handsome book or seasonable token of a really pleasant gathering. For Mr. Aird, of their office staff, the firm had a more substantial acknowledgement for his hard work and good services in the shape of a handsome cheque.

The following were present; Mr. and Mrs. Lightbound, Mr. Huxley, Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Thomson, Mr. J. Hutchison, Toronto, Mr. Jas. Rutherford, Mr. J. H. Stewart, Mr. A. W. Osgood, Mr. A. Aird, Mr. A. Tidmarsh, Mr. J. McGregor, Alex. Ross, Mr. Ballantyne, Mr. Rutherford, H. Jenner—Fust, John Norton, Master Robertson, Mr. R. B. Hall, Mr. Thomson, (Can. Sugar Co.) Mr. Orme, (Dominion Grocer.), Mr. E. Desbarats, (Can Grocer).

Mr. R. J. Kirkland, manager of the British Columbia Canning Co., on River's Inlet, returned from the north on Wednesday. Speaking about fishing in northern waters, Mr. Kirkland remarked that he was surprised to find that the shad placed in the Sacramento River years ago had worked their way north to River's Inlet, and even further up the coast. During the salmon season three fine shad were caught in the sockeye nets. The fish weighed between two and two and a half pounds each, and were filled with spawn. He says that shad propagate wonderfully fast, as it is only four years since the first were taken in the Straits of San Juan de Fuca, and last year the first was netted in the Fraser near its mouth. Mr. Kirkland is confident that in a few years shad fishing will be one of the most important branches of the fishing industry.—Vancouver News-Advertiser.

THE TREATMENT OF CUSTOMERS.

The whole duty of the dealer to his customer is not summed up in honest dealing, polite attention and prompt delivery of goods. It is required of merchants that they should at least provide sufficient room between the store counter and the merchandise to allow patrons to move about without being crushed by contact with each other, or without having clothing soiled by coming in contact with goods during the busiest hours of the day. Some stores have so narrow a space between the counters that Saturday evenings are a trial to the patrons a few people uncomfortably crowding the space and preventing another moving about to examine the articles which they wish to purchase. The appearance of a jam in a retail establishment will cause many women to avoid the place, even if the prices are below the range of neighboring stores, and the most desirable class of patrons is most likely to be thus repelled and driven to rival establishments. This objectionable feature of too many retail grocery stores, viz., want of sufficient room for customers, seems to be due to the high rentals of eligible store property in many cities. In New York City there are few jobbing houses that are not greatly hampered during the busiest season by want of space in the shipping and packing departments, and the attempt to do business in too cramped quarters is, in this case, as with many New York and Brooklyn retailers, to be attributed entirely to the high rents of business buildings. The result is, as regards the retail trade at least, that floor space that should be devoted to the accommodation of patrons, and which would enable the clerks to move about more quickly while waiting upon customers during rush hours, is covered with piles of goods, only a narrow pathway being left open between the door and counter. Such establishments are rightly denominated "stores," the term "to shop," as used by the fair sex, not strictly applying to trading with this class of retail establishments—they are simply places for the storage of goods, the sale of which cannot but be conducted with more or less difficulty.

The contrast between a store crowded with goods in the manner alluded to above and the best arranged establishments, is very unfavorable to the former. The most modern style of grocery store, with its surplus stock stowed away under counters, on shelves and in the basement, and a clear view afforded right through the store from end to end, invites new custom, while the over-crowded store repels it. If to the advantages of a clear floor be added seats for waiting customers, such as are to be found in some of the leading grocers' stores, the attraction for the best class of customers is irresistible, if other things are equal. The dealer who compels his female customer to stand while waiting a clerk's leisure, or while her orders are being filled, has hardly mastered the secret or art of selling goods. An old dealer who retired from business a few years ago, said to the writer recently: "If a customer is standing a salesman will have great difficulty in selling her a new brand of goods which his employer is eager to push, but give her a comfortable seat and with a little tact the clerk can sell her articles which she is not actually in need of." A little reflection will convince the reader that our friend has not exaggerated the advantages of the grocer who provides a sufficient number of seats for his patrons.

This feature of the retail business—the arrangements for the comforts of patrons who visit their merchant's place of business—is as important as the demeanor of the proprietor and his assistants towards the said patrons, or the method employed in the delivery of goods. It is a source of much complaint that too many grocers' customers do not personally make their purchases, but send servants or children with their orders. In this contingency the dealer has no opportunity to make sales of new articles of merit the messengers not being empowered to make purchases on their own responsibility. If retailers wish their lady customers to visit their establishments they should make proper preparations for the accommodations of the desired visitors; not expect them to run the gauntlet of greasy butter tubs, dusty flour barrels, and toppling pyramids of canned goods, or to be hustled about by strangers while forced to stand for perhaps many minutes. Make a place worth a visit and purchases by proxy will become less common.—Merchants' Review.

Most people are aware by this time that the Southern Confederacy was unable to assert its separate corporate existence, and consequently that its credit is hardly a good basis to build up a fortune upon. The notes issued by its short-lived government as a medium of exchange have of course long been worthless as currency, though some value may attach to them as historical relics. The green goods men and their dupes are now endeavoring to revive the buying power of these notes, and their success will depend upon the carelessness or ignorance of the honest people to whom they are proffered. There were some green goods men base enough to outrage the confidence that is founded on the time-honored principle of "Honor among thieves." They have been mean enough to send bricks and packages of sawdust to the confiding criminals who sent them good money to pay for ten times its face value of counterfeit money. The conscience of these green goods men appears however to have been burdened by their sense of guilt, and now they are using their pals a little better, for they are sending them some of the bills of "The Confederate States of America." It is not supposed that even these are genuine, but their buying power is as good as that of the genuine bills, of which the source of issue was long ago defunct. It is reported that one enterprising business man in the province of Quebec invested $500 of good money in this counterfeit Secessionist money. Others may have got some of it too, so it is as well for traders to be on the look out for five, ten, and twenty dollar bills of "The Confederate States of America." There is also a new counterfeit of the $2 Dominion note that needs to be guarded against. Only a few days ago a specimen was brought for the first time under the notice of the Commissioner of the Dominion police. The counterfeit is printed from a wood cut, is very poorly executed and should easily be detected. The signatures are especially bad. But traders should get out of the habit of assuming that all money tendered them is good. It is necessary nowadays to examine it carefully, otherwise a new and constantly widening avenue of loss will be opened.

Counterfeiters for the most part confine the exercise of their talents to the increase of the circulating medium. The art beloved by them is the making of money, in both senses of that phrase. But they occasionally find the production of other material that is of the nature of official vouchers or tokens to be profitable employment for their skill. They seldom descend to anything so low as postage stamps, as these call for too much trouble for little return, though they are simple enough to invite imitation. Revenue stamps are of course valuable according to the amount of the duty borne by the article whose name is printed in the stamp, but independently of that variability, there is the uncertainty of the tariff, which in these mutable times is likely to change suddenly, and cut down materially or abolish altogether a duty that made it worth while for crooked traders to take the risk of practising frauds on the revenue. Further, the perils of smuggling are not faced with the same hardihood in these degenerate times as they used to be. All these considerations no doubt influence enterprising counterfeiters and incline them to neglect revenue stamps. But it appears there is one man who believes there is money in fraudulent revenue stamps, and a despatch from New York tells something about him. This man left an order a short time ago with an engraving company in that city to make him a plate of the Canadian 20 lb. tobacco revenue stamp. It is not said whether the stamp was an inland revenue or a customs certificate, but it was most probably the latter, and intended to cover a contraband trade in United States manufactured tobacco. Unless he meditates a raid upon some of the bonded warehouses of our manufacturers or wholesalers, it is difficult to see how he could make any money out of spurious excise stamps. It appears that the engraving company reported the matter to the United States Secret Service bureau, that when the man returned for the plate he was arrested, and that the United States and Canadian Governments are communicating with each other concerning him. The name given by the man was E. C. Wintele, and he represented himself as from Toronto.

Though an influential deputation of Montreal merchants last week waited on the Provincial Government again to ask the remission of the heavy tax that has been laid upon the commerce of that city, it is pretty certain they will be granted no relief. The deputation included the President of the Board of Trade, the president of the Chambre de Commerce, the president of the Corn Exchange, as well as other members of these bodies and of the committee appointed by a general meeting of the merchants to deal with this subject of taxation. The Provincial Treasurer, Hon. Mr. Hall, pointed out the necessity of meeting the province's temporary loan on the 16th July. A tax upon real estate was impracticable. The tax on personal property was likewise out of the question. The Government had at last to take to a tax levied on the rental value of business places. He showed that Montreal was paying less than half of the real estate tax, three-fifths of the license tax, and five-sixths of the commercial corporations tax. The deputation claimed that the rental tax should be collected from professional as well as business men. The taxes they considered unfairly distributed, and they would rather pay two years' taxes in one to tide the Government through its financial difficulty than to pay more than their fair proportion. The premier promised that the measure would be amended, but that the present year's taxes would have to be paid.

The Canada Salt Association is no more. It was dissolved on the last day of the old year. This was the consummation long looked forward to with the eyes of faith by the Patrons of Industry, and that body no doubt takes to itself the credit for bringing the thing to pass. But there is another claimant for the people's gratitude for the same public service, and that is the C. P. R. The President of that company says, in an interview published in the Empire, that the new salt works at Windsor were started in the interest of the C. P. R. and the public, because the Association had closed the only salt works on the C. P. R. line, namely, those at Wingham. He is further reported to have said in the same connection, that since the railway company could not properly engage in such an enterprise as the production of salt, "some of us" took hold of it as a private matter and the works at Windsor were the result. The C. P. R., he added, has nothing to do with these works, though they were started chiefly for its benefit. He states that the Windsor works would not have anything to do with the combine. In the Globe, President Van Horne's statement that the Association closed the works at Wingham is flatly contradicted by John Ransford, the secretary of the late Association. The secretary of the Association, says also that owing to new wells being started at More-town, Windsor, etc., it was felt impossible for the Association to continue. In his statement he also says that the salt manufacturers feel especially aggrieved that a public institution like the C. P. R., which owes its inception and its present existence to the large sums of money that have been given to it by the taxpayers of the Dominion, should condescend to enter into a needless and wasteful competition in the manufacture of salt. The Association has resolved itself out of existence at any rate, and the price of salt may be expected to take a drop. Prices are at present nominally as they were, but they are certain to be lower as soon as trade begins to exercise its influence, which now entirely favors the buyer. Retail merchants will have nothing to gain by the break, because they must now expect that every sale goes to the dealer making the lowest quotation.

The retail grocer or general merchant does not need to be told to avoid high prices. But while he is seldom a party to the making of high prices, and while his influence is nearly always decidedly on the side of low prices, he cannot prevent the rise that is a consequence of shortage in the supply. He therefore has high prices frequently to deal with, and should take note of incidental effects of them, where such are manifest and can be turned to account. He is aware that a great increase in the cost of any article is always attended by a shrinkage in the consumption of that article, everybody using less of it and many withdrawing the support of their consumption entirely. It commonly happens that an alternative article is found to which the difference in the demand is transferred, and the trader ought always to be on the still hunt for such substitutes when the price of any staple is unusually high. That is the only way he can requite himself for the loss of trade in the dearer staple. When the price of tea was kept up by the retailers ten years ago, trade waned and the tea pedlar interloped and enriched himself between the consumer and the retailer. When oats grew so high about three years ago that they were deemed a good thing to speculate in, on account of their supposed indispensableness, consumers took to chopped feed, to corn, etc. Just now the price of flour is cheaper than ever it was before, but the city bakers charge the same price for bread as they did when flour was half as dear again. What is the result? A great many housewives are baking their own bread, and the bakers are complaining of it. The price of pork is now at an extraordinarily high figure. People who used pork from preference now use beef and mutton from economy. It is reported that some of the lumber firms are purchasing beef to supply their camps up north. Good beef is about 5 1/2 c., while barrel pork is about 9c. When flour is too dear people buy potatoes, unless they are also too dear. Thus very high prices estrange trade from the goods in which they hold, and the trader ought to think of this, both when he is tempted to speculate in an advancing commodity and when he finds the call for that commodity declining.

The diluted advertisement is a failure. The funny paragraph or sensational item that ends with a trader's advertisement in lower case letters is about the most repellant bid for business that could be adopted. Nobody likes to be fooled. Consequently the feelings with which a man comes to your name are just about the most unpropitious for the favorable impression you want to make that they could well be. If you undertook to guy a customer of common sense and self respect, in your own store, and tried to excite his interest simply to wind up with some irritating and senseless joke turned on him, he would cease to be your customer probably from that moment. Aside from the disagreeable effect of such insinuating advertisements, they impress the reader with a very unflattering opinion of yourself. The advertiser is decided to be a very light-headed, inconsequential person, for whom a considerable degree of contempt is felt by the irritated reader. Somebody else will get the bulk of that reader's business.

The almanac would appear to be hard pressed, between the publication of the weather probabilities in the daily newspapers on the one hand, and the annual distribution of calendars by advertisers on the other. These two agencies have long threatened to supersede it as an authority on the weather and current chronology. But the old household favorite seems to have an abiding place in the people's affections. It has never been successfully rivalled for long range weather predictions. The farmers still turn to it with faith, to see when the last snow of the winter will fall, it is still the orthodox reference for dates, and its ancient joke is continue to delight the weary agriculturist who stays home from church. An almanac can be used for backward as well as forward reference, while the past part of a calendar is stripped off. Then the calendar does not give the changes of the moon, upon which hog-killing, soap-boiling, tree-pruning, sheep-washing, and so many other vital interests depend. Even if the people all took a daily paper and were all in daily view of a train with the weather signals on it, they would still want their almanac. The almanac has worked itself into the domestic life of the country more than many more useful and necessary things have done, and the trader will oblige many an old customer by keeping a few for distribution. The other day a man of bucolic dress and demeanor dropped into a drug store in town and asked for an almanac. He was asked which he preferred, but being rather uncertain, the fluent clerk recommended X's, which he declared hit the weather to a t last year. This settled the granger's choice, and X's almanac was taken.

A BAD YEAR IN APPLES.

During the early fall THE GROCER referred to heavy losses made by Canadian shippers on early fall apples, pointing out that the chief cause of this was the high price which, through unnecessary competition between buyers, had been paid in the country for early fruit. Since then some shippers have pulled out a little on the later shipments, but the results of the season as a whole this year have been to forcibly demonstrate the utter folly of such a proceeding as the one referred to above. During the week, a leading Montreal shipper, F. J. Hart, of Hart & Tuckwell, returned from an extended visit to Great Britain, and the personal investigations he made while over there bear out what we have said on the matter.

After remarking that the apple trade was not a successful one for the middleman this year, Mr. Hart proceeds to explain the causes of this. The chief one in his opinion was the heavy shipments of early apples which were dumped on the English market just as a large quantity of home-grown British fruit had to be sold. The English people therefore had a surfeit of early apples, and when winter stock commenced to arrive it had to face an unfavorable market, besides competing with French oranges. In fact Mr. Hart is opposed to shipping early fruit at all, and thinks that the only remedy is to abstain from doing so, and ship good keeping properly packed winter stock.

This course would be desirable no doubt to the shippers in Montreal and elsewhere, but it is hardly possible, for something has to be done with the early fall apples, as it is extremely doubtful that the fruit growers will adopt Mr. Hart's advice and cut down their early fall trees. No, they made too much money this fall, so if they don't want to feed this surplus to the live stock, they will have to accept a price which allows shippers some margin to work on, and then money can be made.

But the blame for the disastrous results of last season to shippers rested far more with themselves than with the fruit growers. They started cries of short crops, rushed in and bid up prices, and kept on doing so, so that it was not surprising that holders in the country held on. With all this experience in mind it will be their own fault next year if buyers don't profit by it and refuse to pay high prices on crop scores, unless they are justified in doing so by positive and unmistakable information.

DRESSED HOGS IN MONTREAL.

Dealers in dressed hogs in Montreal have manifested considerable excitement during the past week on account of some large purchases in Ontario, and the news from Chicago, which gives evidence of a decided scarcity in hog meat. Buyers in Montreal have paid as high as $8.20 in the west, or equivalent to $8.25 to $8.35 laid down in Montreal for car load lots, and the general expectation is for much higher prices. In fact some of the more sanguine operators profess to see the possibility of big profits in store for them on the small lots they hold, for this is the single drop of disappointment in their cup of satisfaction, that they do not control anything like their usual quantity of stock. There can be no doubt that the receipts of dressed hogs in Montreal have been much smaller this year than for a long time, and the presumption is that the same state of affairs rules elsewhere. But whether we are to have a scarcity similar to the remarkable experience of 1868 is another matter, and a development not safe to calculate on. At present the continued spell of clear, cold weather has helped to increase the firmness, so that holders now hardly know what to ask.

HAMILTON RETAIL GROCERS' ASSOCIATION.

The Retail Grocers' Association of Hamilton, elected officers on the 3d inst., as follows:

D. Winnifrith, president.
Adam Ballentine, first vice-president.
G. Elder, second vice-president.
C. Bremner, treasurer.
W. R. Harvey, secretary.
John Ronan, J. O. Carpenter, O. H. Peebles, J. Main, T. Hazell, executive committee.
C. Holt, G. Powell, auditors.
B. Winnifrith in the chair.
W. J. O'Brien was proposed as a new member.

A letter was received from Hon. J. M. Gibson to the effect that the resolution passed by the association recently, regarding the weekly payment of wages, would receive the attention of the Ontario Government.

TORONTO

RETAIL GROCERS' ASSOCIATION.

The Toronto Retail Grocers' Association held its January meeting on Monday evening in its rooms in Richmond Hall. The following were present: Messrs. Booth, Clark, Gibson, White, Mills, Westren, McMillan, Saunders, Doyle, Bond, Butcher, Cleary, Johnston, Roberts.

The minutes were read and duly confirmed.

AMENDMENTS TO THE CONSTITUTION.

The motion of which Mr. Gibson gave notice at the last meeting was moved by Mr. Gibson, seconded by Mr. McMillan. It was that the constitution be so amended that the nominations to offices be made at the last meeting of the old year and the elections be held on the first meeting of the new year.

After some discussion this motion was amended so as to make the November meeting the time for nominations and December meeting the time for elections. In this amended form the motion was carried.

Mr. McMillan withdrew the motion of which he gave notice at last meeting, and of which the object was similar.

Mr. Roberts' motion of which notice was given, to amend the constitution so as to make 10.30 the time for adjournment, was proposed by Mr. Westren, seconded by Mr. Mills, and carried unanimously.

NEW MEMBERS.

J. Ferguson, W. R. Kindree and R. Rowland were proposed for membership and duly elected.

THE ANNUAL REPORT.

The following is a report on the progress of the Association for the present year up to the present date:

MEMBERS.

In Jan, 68 now accepted as basis. To these 120 have been added who have paid fees. Total 188. Audited and found correct.

(Signed.) M. McMILLAN.
FRED. S. ROBERTS.

Mr. Mills said the Treasurer should be present to answer any questions that might arise out of items in the report.

Mr. Clark moved that the report be received and adopted. Mr. Johnston seconded this motion and it was passed.

THE AT HOME COMMITTEE.

Mr. Gibson reported progress by the At Home committee. He believed this at home would be one of the most successful yet held. The tickets were in demand and a large number of people were desirous of attending.

INSTALLATION OF OFFICERS.

President Booth rose and said that he now laid down the gavel for his year of tenure. He heartily thanked the members for their courteous and considerate support, and he bespoke an equally helpful support for his successor, president-elect Clark. He then called upon Mr. Mills to formally install the officers.

Mr. Mills said that it became his pleasurable duty to introduce into their offices his fellow-members who had been elected to the responsibility of directing the Association for another year. He hoped they would be well seconded by the members in their efforts to do their duty faithfully. He reminded the Association that there was still work to be done, and hoped that officers and members would labor to do it well. He then introduced by name each of the officers who were present in graceful words.

President Clark on being conducted to the chair thanked the members for his election, and hoped that harmonious and energetic work would be done this year. There was work to be done, and there were good men to do it. He would like to see the members, as well as capable outsiders, contributing special papers on various trade subjects, and proposed to call on members for such papers. A question box ought also to be adopted, as thereby much light might be thrown upon troublesome questions. He suggested as well that there should be a blackboard in the meeting room on which entries of goods for sale might be placed, to give members a chance to offer any excess of stock.

Mr. Gibson approved the new ideas proposed by the new chairman, and particularly favored papers or lectures by specialists, members of the Association, wholesalers, travellers, and others qualified.

Mr. Mills in appropriate terms moved a vote of thanks to the retiring president, Mr. Booth, and to all the officers.

Mr. Saunders seconded this motion, and it was unanimously carried and tendered by the President.

Mr. Booth acknowledged the vote.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

The receipt of the $50 donations by the St. George's Society and St. Andrew's Society was gratefully acknowledged in communications which were formally received.

SWELLED CANNED GOODS.

The letter from the Hamilton Association read at last meeting, in relation to swelled canned goods, and advising co-operation on the part of associations to get the views of the wholesale trade at the various centres was brought up again.

Mr. Gibson said both jobbers and canners always took back swelled heads. They took all back cheerfully, so far as his experience went.

Mr. White said the retailers had to do not with the packers, but with the jobbers, whom he always found ready to take swelled goods back. Therefore the retailers had no ground of complaint.

Moved by Mr. White, seconded by Mr. Gibson, that the secretary inform the Hamilton Association that Toronto wholesalers always take swelled goods back.—Carried.

Mr. Gibson moved that the Executive Committee take into their consideration whether it would not be advisable to invite some gentleman every alternate meeting to address the Association on trade questions. Mr. Westren seconded this.

Mr. Booth thought that the Association was in a position to consider this matter of itself, without referring to the executive. There could be no two opinions about the value of such matter as was contemplated in the proposed arrangements for specialists to read papers before the Association. As an illustration of how much good could be done in this way, he referred to the paper on Tea, read before the Hamilton Association by Harold Lambe, and published in THE CANADIAN GROCER. That was an excellent paper, and he was sure his fellow-members would bear him out in that opinion, for he made no doubt they had all read it, as he assumed they all took THE GROCER and regularly read it. If they did not they ought to. The article was full of useful information, and contained much that was unknown to most grocers.

Several members spoke in favor of the Association dealing directly with the proposal.

Mr. Mills favored the initiating of the matter through the Executive Committee to arrange details and prepare the matter for the consideration of the Association. Another idea he favored was the occasional meeting of the members of the Association at the Public Library to consult works bearing specially on the grocery trade. An arrangement had been made for the improvement of the skilled and scientific knowledge of mechanics, to whom the use of special books had been thrown open on given evenings by the Library Board, and the same thing might be done for the grocers.

In amendment, Mr. Booth moved, seconded by Mr. Bond, that the President, Vice President and the mover be a committee to consider the plan of arranging with trade specialists to read papers and lectures before the Association every other meeting evening.

The resolution was withdrawn and the amendment substituted and passed.

A TEA BOOK.

The Secretary suggested that a Tea Book be compiled by the Association. He thought a very useful one could be put together. The matter was no further pursued.

ACCOUNTS.

A post card account of $1.75 was ordered to be paid.

THE TOBACCO TAX.

Mr. Mills reminded the meeting that the tobacco tax was now due, and that all should govern themselves accordingly.

Mr. Johnston knew a man who was selling tobacco, cigars and cigarettes to minors. He moved that the Secretary write complaining of him to the inspector. The motion was not seconded.

The meeting then adjourned.

MISREPRESENTING GOODS

There is little question but that, theoretically, the average merchant subscribes to the highest ethics of shop-keeping. He finds, indeed, a certain moral satisfaction when giving his concurrence to the opinions of speakers and writers on trade topics, who assume to teach from an elevated point of view, and though it is a question when, after all, in the practical application of such theories, there is not a great deal of divergence from the theory itself, possibly the temptation to have a lower code of business ethics than what is conceived to be absolutely just, has its strongest force in the matter of representing goods to customers.

An esteemed English contemporary suggests that "there is a song of a not very elevated character which carries the refrain, 'It's all right, if you love the girl,' and we fear," it adds, "there may be here and there a tradesman who sings as a lullaby to his own conscience, 'It's all right, if you sell the goods.' But is it? Is it even all safe and prudent and good policy?"

While this may be regarded as shifting the question to a very much lower plane, it has the advantage of attracting more attention. Our English contemporary argues that the chief reason for a lowering in ethical consideration of the practical side of this question is that "we all know how to live uprightly and won't, whereas we do not know how to make fortunes, and wish we did." It, undoubtedly, is true that business morally has a much better chance, if the odds are in favor of its paying a dividend in hard cash.

The solution of this question in a way that deals fairly with the consumer and satisfies him, and justifies the merchant's own conscience, even when tried rigidly by the standard of the highest business ethics, is to handle only good goods.

We have no question that a man is a better man, better satisfied with himself, better contented with his business, more successful in his business, more popular with his customers, and more likely to obtain larger custom, if he sells goods that he does not feel he is compelled to misrepresent in order to "make them move." Good goods at fair prices, when put into practical effect, therefore satisfies not only the moral, but the material side of the merchant's life. There can be no possible reason why a merchant should not adopt that motto as his own, and put it into practical operation. Poor goods at any price do not pay in the long run. Good goods at a fair price always pay.—Michigan Tradesman.

NO. 2.—CREDIT.

It was a beautiful summer's morning. The sun shone brightly in the clear blue sky. Not a cloud was to be seen, all nature seemed to be smiling in sweet content, and the birds warbled forth their sweet songs as if their little hearts would burst with joy. It was a sweet scene, and I myself felt at peace with all mankind, as I sauntered down the street meditating upon the marvellous works of nature, and from nature my thoughts travelled to nature's God. I could not help but wonder how it was that man seemed to be the only dissatisfied creature upon the face of the globe, and then I began to wonder why was it that he of all creatures the one who ought to be the most contented and satisfied, the one who has most to be thankful for, the one for whose use all things were made, and intelligence given him to teach him how to utilize them, was the most dissatisfied of all. Thus thinking and being unable to account for this state of things, I thought I would take a walk over to B—street and see my friend Brown. I thought that he being a grocer and coming into contact with all kinds and conditions of human nature, I would be able through his insight into the hearts of his customers perhaps to solve the problem. So I walked leisurely over, and entering his store I found him busy behind the counter. He was up to his eyes in work, the counter was just strewn with orders, so he did not notice me as I entered. I could not help but look at him. There he was working like a slave with his sleeves rolled up and the perspiration rolling down his cheeks. Talk about excitement; why, he was as excited as if there had just been a fire in the place and he had just got over putting it out. He would shout to one clerk, and then to the driver to hurry up, and see that this was right, and the other right. "Here, Jim," he would shout, "see that Jones' oranges are in the box, and you, Bill, see that Simpson's get their coal oil, and don't put it near the other things or else it will spoil them, and they will be coming back and telling me that the butter and tea taste of coal oil, and I'll be that much out. Coal oil is a bad thing to have near groceries; it has a worse effect almost than smoking in a store." With this he looked up and saw me. With a smile he extended his hand, and said, "Why, bless my heart, where have you been all this time? I thought you were dead, I have not seen you for so long." "Well, I have been out of town, I said, and just got back yesterday, and as I was going down B—street I was thinking over some things which I could not understand myself, and which I thought you by your experience of human nature could perhaps explain to me, so I decided to come over and see you. But I see you are very busy, and I will not disturb you at present, but take a more convenient season." "Well," said he, "if it is anything that will occupy much time I guess you had better, as you see I am very busy and will be so until night, but I tell you if you could make it convenient to come over to the house to-night at 8 o'clock, I will be free from that time all evening, and would enjoy your company very much, as I have not had a good chat since the last time you were over, old boy. Can you do that?" Not having anything on hand that night, and seeing that he was really very busy, I told him that I would be there sharp at 8 o'clock. "By the by," I said, "I heard you say that coal oil was as bad for spoiling groceries as smoking. Do any grocers smoke in their stores?" "Well, I should think so," he said. "Why, some of them have the pipe or cigar in their mouth from morning till night, and quite a few can trace their failure to that habit." "How is that?" I asked. "Well," he replied, "in the first place the tea, butter, spices and provisions absorb the nicotine from the smoke, the smoke hangs to everything, and by and by the store begins to look cloudy and dirty, the goods don't taste the same, and you catch the nasty, musty smell as soon as you enter the store coming in from the fresh air. By and by, Ladies of any delicacy of taste sicken at the smell, and by and by they cease calling and without giving any reason. If you meet them out in company you will here them sometimes say, 'I used to deal there but I don't go now. There is something about it I don't like; it seems dirty, and there is always a musty smell of smoke about it, just like the smell of a coat that has been in a bar room all night.'" "Well sir," I said, "I guess you are right. Women are particular on these points, and it is not a pleasant thought." "Oh," he said, "it is too true, I know several stores I call on that have that nasty smell." "Well," I said, "I will wish you good day for the present and call and see you at 8 o'clock sharp." "All right," I'll be home." So I left him and went down town to my own office, pondering all the way upon what he had said.

That night I kept my appointment. If the morning was fine the night could not be surpassed. The moon shone brightly through a cloudless blue sky. It was neither too hot nor too cold, just a lovely night for a walk. According to promise I wended my way up to Brown's. Arriving at the door I knocked, and in a few minutes the door was opened by a child of about seven years of age. She looked at me as if she was afraid of me, and wanted to shrink into a corner out of sight. She looked as if she never knew what a kind look was. I asked her in a warm friendly way if her father was in, and in a kind of half hesitating way, as if she was afraid she should make a mistake, and as a consequence get a beating, she said, "Yes, sir, I think so, I will go and see," and leaving me standing in the hall she went to see, and I heard her tell her father, for I could tell it was him by the sound of his voice, that a man wanted to see him at the door. "Well, why didn't you tell him to come in?" said he in a sharp impatient voice, and with that he came out into the hall himself, and seeing it was I said, "oh it is you, is it! Come in and sit down." Obeying his invitation, I followed him through the hall, which was lightened by a lamp, which according to appearances had forgotten to shine, the little girl keeping behind me as if she was afraid of getting a slap on the ear for being so dull. Passing through the hall we entered through the door into the sitting room. Entering through the sitting room door, a cold chill passed through me, and a keen sense of confusion all around took possession of me. The room in the first place was not properly heated. The floor was carpeted with an old carpet, which looked as if it had been used for a century. The fire in the grate had retreated as if it were in disgust, and left nothing but ashes to remind you of the past. In the centre of the room stood an old square table upon which stood a lamp, which from its appearance seemed to be struggling for a breath of oxygen upon which to live, and the glass looked as if it was in mourning over its fruitless efforts. Upon this table also lay a ledger, two or three day books, about two dozen pass books and several other books, and a lot of bill heads. Kneeling down under the table was a woman which proved to be his wife. She was hunting through an old waste paper basket for some invoices which he had mislaid in his hurry. She looked up at me as we entered and smiled a welcome. I don't think I will ever forget that face. The eyes were kindly, but oh such a sorrowful look shone through them. You could read the whole book of her life at once. It was a tale of sorrow, worry and anxiety, the lines around the mouth told of sadness and care. The expression was that of one who had lost all relish of life and desired to be at rest, as if death itself would be a sweet relief. She smiled as well as she could, and extending her hand wished me to take a seat, which I did while he tried to coax back the retreating fire, but it was no use, for it had disappeared never to return again. Beside the grate was his other little girl. She was trying to make mud pies out of what the retreating fire had left. Beside her lay a cat, which looked as if it too had been trying to wash itself in the pies which the little girl was trying to make, and it seemed to succeed admirably, for its coat seemed to be pretty well matted. Not far away lay a big Newfoundland dog which looked as if he would only like to get a bone or two to help fill out his skin. Such was the house I had come to spend the evening in, and I suppose it is needless for me to tell you that I was sorry that I had not stayed at home and tried to solve my problems myself, instead of coming to this barn to only wish that it was time to get out. However, I was in it, and I could only wait patiently till I got out of it as easily as I could without offending any one, so I broke the ice by saying, "Well, you seem to be as busy in the house as you were in the store." "Well, yes," he replied, "I hardly ever have a moment to spare. When I'm not at the counter, I have to be at my books," "You must do a large business," I said. "Yes, I do, but it would be better for me and all concerned if I did not do so much." "How is that?" I asked. "Well, don't you see," he said, "I do a large business but it is principally credit, I have to lie a long time out of my money, which if I got when it was due I could be doubling and trebling, but I can't get it in, and sometimes I never get it. I have lost about a thousand dollars this year in bad debts, and if I had that now I could get a new carpet for this floor which needs it badly enough, and I could get my wife a dress fit to go out in; she has to stay home from church now because she has not one fit to go to church with, so stays home. Then my children; I could get them things which they need but have to do without. My wife worries herself to death over it, and her worrying makes her nasty with the children, and that makes them unhappy and all caused by this cursed credit system. I wish to the Lord something could be done whereby this confounded system could be done away with. Why, look here, he said, as he walked over to a bureau and took out a big cabinet album, "I've got some of the cusses in this that owe me money for the last year. Just look here," and he opened the album, "do you see that fine dressed lady there? See the fine seal skin cap and seal jacket she has on. Look at the style of her. She owes me $150 for groceries. I kept her and her husband all last winter when he was out of a job, and when he got into something and was earning good pay I asked them to let me have some money, and she flew up on her ear and got insulted, and I have not seen her since. I hear she is dealing somewhere else and paying cash, and he came round and told me he would pay me a dollar a week until it was paid. He paid that for one or two weeks and that was the end of him. My wife ought to be wearing those furs. Here is another specimen. Do you see that big fine looking fellow there with his whiskers all brushed up like a man who had been all his life in the military service? Well, that is Mr. E. R. He is a shipbuilder, and built a few boats that sail the waters. Well, he is one of the worst dead beats in this town. That man was getting twelve hundred dollars a year, and he owes me $150 for this last five years." "Well," I said, "why don't you get it out of him?" "Why don't I? Just because he always drew his salary ($25 a week) in advance, and because some of the laws regarding these matters in this country are rotten. I had him up on a warrant of committal which expired in 90 days. I got judgment against him. He by order of the judge had to pay me $5 a month. He paid me the first $5 at the end of thirty days. He paid me the second five at the end of the sixty. At the expiration of the 90 days he paid me nothing, but snapped his fingers at me and laughed, because he knew I could do nothing, for the time having run out, he knew I would have to get another warrant of committal, which would cost me as much and more than he had paid me on the whole thing. Then, again, if he has two or three judgments out against him he can go and get what you call a stop order. He explains to the judge that these two or three are weighing him down, and he will not issue another judgment until he gets these paid, which at the rate he was paying me would be never. That is the way things are run in this country. That man's wife and family can afford to take a trip to California and back on my money, and put on all the style imaginable, while mine has to stay here and work like an old drudge. Her life is a misery, and it makes her cranky with the children, and they get miserable and don't look like other people's children. I'm miserable, she is miserable, and the children are miserable, and it is all through this cursed credit system."

POINTS FOR THE DAIRYMEN.

The Australian butter makers have been for a long time using every effort to introduce their butter into the English market, without success, but by the aid of Preservitas they have at last established themselves on a sound footing in that market of unlimited consumption.

As will be seen from the extracts from Australian papers, which are given below, the butter in which Preservitas is used commands four pence more per pound than butter prepared by the old process.

This is a subject of vital importance to the dairymen as well as this whole country, for the reason that it opens up an enormous market and high prices for a commodity, which Canada can produce in any quantity, and which in value of output would far exceed the cheese industry. Readers who are interested in dairies might find it to their advantage to correspond with Mr. Edgar of Halifax, who is agent for this product.

Extract from the Melbourne Argus of March 12th, 1890.

"At the invitation of Messrs. F. T. Paten & Co., agents for the 'Steven's Cold Vacuum Process,' Mr. D. Wilson, the Government dairy expert, with a number of gentlemen interested in butter preserving, met at the offices of the Fresh Food and Frozen Storage Company yesterday. Mr. Wilson, on behalf of the Agricultural Department, superintended the tinning of a sample lot of Victorian fresh butter by 'Steven's Cold Vacuum Process.' For the purpose of testing the value of this process, Mr. Wilson had half-a-dozen tins filled with the same churning of butter, in three of which tins an ounce of

'Preservitas' was mixed. In the other three tins the butter was done up as it is usually sent to market. These six tins were placed in the same case with the six tins of butter subjected to the Cold Vacuum process, and at the end of two months the tins will be opened, and the state of each lot of butter tested. The whole of the tins were placed in a box, which was sealed in the presence of the gentlemen present, and on the 10th of May the same gentlemen will be called together again, when the box will be opened and the state of the butter examined.

Extract from the Daily Telegraph, Melbourne, May 17th, 1890.

"It will be recollected that two months ago a meeting was held at the offices of the Fresh Food and Frozen Storage Company, Limited, to test the advantages of preserving butter by means of 'Steven's Cold Vacuum Policy.' For the purpose of testing the value of this process the services of Mr. David Wilson, the Government dairy expert, were called into requisition, and he decided to fill six tins by Steven's process—three tins without any treatment (except adding salt, in fact just as butter is sent to the market), and three tins with the addition of 'Preservitas.' It was then decided to leave these three lots of butter for two months in the hands of the Fresh Food and Storage Company, Limited, and a meeting was held yesterday on their premises, when the tins were opened by Mr. Wilson, who called aside two others, well-known as experts in butter, and on their return to the meeting it was announced that the butter treated with 'Preservitas' was most decidedly the best, in fact, Mr. Wilson said he never saw anything so emphatically decided. The butter treated with 'Preservitas' retained all the fine natural aroma of butter, which this lot was known to have when the butter was put into tins, and in this connection it should be mentioned that all the three lots put down were from the same churning of butter, made under the supervision of Mr. Wilson, and he pronounced the butter treated with 'Preservitas' to be worth at least 4d. per pound more than the other."

Extract from The Age, Melbourne, May 16th, 1890.

"Some two months or so ago quantities of butter from the same churning were tinned under three different processes, at offices of the Fresh Food and Frozen Storage Company, Bourke Street West, in order to determine which was the most satisfactory manner of treating the butter. The three processes were as follows:—

"1. Treating the butter in the usual way by the addition of salt.

"2. Treating it by what is known as the Vacuum process.

"3. By the application of salt and the addition of 'Preservitas.'

"Yesterday morning a number of gentlemen interested in the tests assembled at the offices of the Company, and the experts on whose decision the promoters of the different processes relied were—Mr. D. Wilson (the Government Dairy Expert representing the Agricultural Department), Mr. Vagg (of the Chilled Butter Company), Mr. Taylor (a salesman in the service of the Fresh Food and Storage Company), and Mr. McDonald (Dairyman of the Mount Wallace district). The tins of butter having been opened and tested the four experts were unanimous in the opinion that of the three tests the 'Preservitas' treatment was by far the most successful, and that the butter treated by that process would fetch fully 4d. per pound more in the market than the butter treated under the other two processes."

Extract from the Melbourne Argus, May 16th 1890.

"Some two months ago the preliminary steps for testing the different methods of preserving butter were taken at the stores of the Fresh Food and Frozen Storage Company, Bourke Street. Samples of butter from one churning were packed by the Government dairy expert, Mr. David Wilson, according to three different methods, the first as ordinarily salted for the market, the second by Steven's Cold Air Vacuum Process, and the third with a compound known as 'Preservitas.' On the samples being opened yesterday they were submitted to the judgment of experts, who were unanimous as to the superiority of that treated with 'Preservitas' which, in Mr. Wilson's opinion, was worth at least 4d. per pound more than either of the other samples."

Extract from The Herald, Melbourne, May 15th 1890.

"A quantity of the same churning of butter was submitted two months ago to three tests, viz.—by the Steven's Vacuum Process, by 'Preservitas,' and by salt, as generally sent to the market. At the office of the Fresh Food and Frozen Storage Company, Bourke Street West, an inspection of results was made to-day. Mr. Wilson, the Government, dairy expert, and two other gentlemen qualified to judge, decided without hesitation that the butter treated with 'Preservitas' came out worth at least 4d. per pound more than the others."

Extract from the Evening Standard, Melbourne, May 15th 1890.

"About two months ago, when a number of farmers and others interested in dairy produce met at the offices of the Fresh Food and Frozen Storage Company, Limited, Bourke Street West, to test the 'Stevens's Cold Vacuum Process' of preserving butter, Mr. David Wilson, the Government dairy expert, who was present, representing the Agricultural Department, recommended that twelve tins of the same churning should be stowed away for a period of two months, in order to practically test the process. This was done. Half-a-dozen tins of the Stevens's Cold Vacuum Process, three tins with 'Preservitas,' and three of the butter as ordinarily prepared for the market, were placed in a box and put in a box and put in a case in the cellar, where the case remained sealed until this morning. On opening the case this morning the butter was tasted by a number of experts, who had assembled for the purpose of proving which was the better process—the 'Preservitas' or the Stevens—and their opinion was that the butter preserved with 'Preservitas' was unmistakably superior to the other samples, and worth at least 3d. to 4d. per pound more in market value."

Extract from the Evening Standard, Melbourne, May 16th, 1890.

"We have been requested to mention that Francis Forrest and Company, of 484 Collins Street, Melbourne, are agents for The Preservitas Company of London, whose treatment of butter was yesterday proved to be so successful at the trial which was held at the offices of the Fresh Food and Frozen Storage Company, Limited."

Sole proprietors: The Preservitas Company, 110, 112 Southwark Street, London, S. E. Samples and all particulars relating to "Preservitas" may be obtained from the agent, M. F. Eagar, 181, 183 Water Street, Halifax, Nova Scotia.

STOCK-TAKING.

"The time to take inventory is of but minor importance, but it should be taken when practicable, at the dullest season of the year in the locality where your business is. My judgment is that for an annual inventory Feb 1 is a particularly good time. The rush of the holiday trade is over and the bulk of the winter stock has been sold, the spring purchases have not been made, and in the majority of stores the stock is at the lowest; besides, at this season the average prices on general commodities are at their lowest point. Procure a book with day book ruling of about 300 pages for an inventory book. A few days before commencing stocktaking, begin to arrange your goods compactly; get all lines together and goods of a kind placed so as but one entry will need to be made for an article. If in a general store, take first the lines carried for every day. I would suggest to enter first, groceries, then dry goods, boots and shoes, hardware and crockery in their order. Let cost govern you as to price for the article inventoried, unless there has been an advance or decline, in which case put the price at that at which it sells for in the market. I have known parties to go on year after year inventorying an article at original cost, which has depreciated 50 per cent since the time of purchase. Never do this. An inflated inventory is of no service whatever in determining your actual worth. Go through the entire stock in a careful manner and be careful in your extensions and footings. After finishing this, on the following page take an itemized account of your fixtures, scales, desk, measures, safe, tools, etc. If it is the first inventory, put the prices at what they are worth. After the first year, I should deduct 10 per cent, annually for depreciation by reason of use and wear. This being properly done, go carefully over your ledger and inventory on your book all the accounts receivable, giving a line to each customer. Then follow this by all notes due to you from your customers, adding interest to date of your stock-taking. Then add the balance of cash on hand and in bank. When this is finished you will have a detailed statement of your assets. On the following pages make an inventory of your liabilities. From your ledger or your files, make a statement of all bills you owe that have been put in stock before you began your inventory. Follow this with a statement of all notes due merchants for goods purchased, or due the banks for money loaned, or from individuals for use in your business and rent unpaid, if any. When this is done take a double page, heading one 'Assets' and the other 'Liabilities.' Under these arrange the footings of the inventory, which should appear as follows:

Assets.	Liabilities.
Mdse on hand.....	Due for mdse.....
Notes receivable.....	Notes payable.....
Cash in bank.....	Interest due.....
Cash in store.....	Rent to date.....
Book accounts (good)...
"doubtful 1/2 value..
Balance present worth..	Feb. 1, 1892.

"I forgot to state that an account must be kept of sales made during the stocktaking of goods, which have not been inventoried. These to be added to the final footings of your stock less, say, 20 per cent. the average gross profit. This is necessary, as your book accounts are only inventoried to the day when your stocktaking begins. This method, while crude, is substantially accurate, and will give you a basis for next year's work by which not only the present worth may be known, but also the loss or gain for the year."—Store Crank in American Grocer.

CANADIAN EXPERIMENTAL DAIRY FARMS.

A meeting of members of the provision trade was held on Wednesday, at the Home and Foreign Produce Exchange, Limited, Hibernia Chambers, London Bridge, to hear an address from Professor Robertson, Dairy Commissioner to the Dominion of Canada, on the work of the experimental dairy farms which are under the control of the Canadian Government. Professor Robertson said that in Canada a system of experimental farms, with headquarters at Ottawa, was established a few years ago. The primary object of those farms was to investigate the varieties of grain which were best adapted to different soils, climate conditions, and methods of cultivation. Some experimental dairy stations had also been established in each of the provinces east of Manitoba. Their products were shipped to English markets in order to gain information from close market contact how to meet the preferences and prejudices of British merchants and consumers, through whom they were endeavoring to help farmers by showing them how to seek the market, how to suit it, and how to keep it for their own goods. After stating that British farmers had least cause to fear the competition of Canadian food products, he assured British consumers that they might rely upon the wholesome character of all such products which came from the Dominion.—Manchester Grocers' Review.

ASSOCIATION ITEMS.

A committee of the St. Louis Retail Grocers' Association have gone to the State capital for the purpose of having introduced a bill for the modification of the garnishment and exemption laws of Missouri.

The Retail Grocers' Association, of Boston, numbers a membership approximating one thousand, and at the recent annual meeting the Trustees reported upwards of $17,000 in their hands.

With the view of more closely uniting the retail and jobbing interests, the Retail Grocers' Association of Grand Rapids, Michigan, recently resolved that wholesalers be invited to address that body.

The Central Association of Retail Merchants, of New York and vicinity, which claims to represent a membership of three thousand grocers, has addressed a circular "to the growers, receivers and dealers in berries throughout the United States," notifying them that "the grocers will, from this time forward, refuse to buy berries which are not contained in non-returnable packages," and offering the following reasons among many others, which go to prove that sound business policy demands the use of the non-returnable package: "They will cheapen freights by more than one-half, because present charges include free carriage of empties; they will always present the fruit in clean and rightly packages, and this means uniform higher prices; they will widen the existing market for berries and create new ones; prevent gluts, and keep up prices to a profitable level, and will be more healthful, because of the lessening of the dangers of contagion."

The Retail Merchants' Association of the State of New Jersey held a convention on Wednesday last. Each auxiliary association sends three delegates, with one additional for every fifty members. Statistics of progress are submitted.

The retail grocers of New York city are preparing to build a large storehouse, where groceries bought in bulk can be stored and purchased in any quantity desired by the members of the Retail Grocers' Union at first prices. "This plan has worked well in Philadelphia, Baltimore and in other cities much smaller than New York," said President H. I. Dreyer to a World reporter "and there is no reason why it should not work even better in New York. The Retail Grocers' Union will take hold of the matter as soon as the new officers have been installed in January, and I have no doubt that the scheme will be in successful operation by spring. We may not build a storehouse at first, but will rent a large building in a central location. The scheme will result in the saving of hundreds of dollars every year to the retail grocers." Plans have been accepted by the union for a new hall and office building and work has already begun on the foundation for it. The corner-stone will be laid about January 15, and the building will be completed next May. It will be a handsome stone structure of five stories, and stand at Nos. 138 and 140 East Fifty-seventh street. The union will occupy one floor as a hall and another for offices and a parlor. The remainder of the building will be rented.

At a meeting of the Chicago Retail Grocers' Association, January 4, a subject brought up for discussion was as to what methods had best be adopted for the purpose of collecting the outstanding dues from delinquent members. It was finally decided to instruct the financial secretary to place the amounts in the hands of some reliable party for collection on a percentage, said percentage being left to the discretion of the secretary with full power to name a rate which in his judgment would be just and reasonable to both the association and the collector.

A new development in the Ohio adulterated food prosecutions is to the effect that the wholesale grocers of the state will hereafter boycott any manufacturer who will not guarantee his goods to be pure or who will not stand responsible for all costs of successful prosecution for the sale of adulterated food by innocent retailers.

The Grocers Union, of San Francisco decided to give no Christmas presents to their customers, but to take up a subscription among the charitable ones and devote the same to some institution. The amount collected in this manner was $68.50.

About a month ago the retail Grocers' association at Columbus, O., concluded to make a trial of co-operative buying

PRESENT BUSINESS METHODS.

"Friendship doesn't sell many goods now-a-days," remarked a salesman recently. This is true enough in one sense, but in another friendship plays just as great a part in commercial affairs as it ever did. That friendship that tied a merchant up to a particular house, or to a certain salesman in that house, and made him blind and deaf to any other concern, has largely passed away, but there still exist many instances of warm personal consideration between merchants and salesmen, founded on mutual esteem, and on benefits given and received in the course of business, that will secure trade for certain houses, other things being equal. A merchant will usually prefer to buy of a salesman whom he knows, in whom he has confidence, and with whom he is in sympathy, but he expects just as good treatment from him as from his rivals; in fact, this friendship is usually founded on the idea that the merchant can do a little better in one way or another with his particular house or salesman than with any other.

This change in the business methods of the country is due in part to its transformation from a new and thinly settled country to one in which the most advanced commercial ideas alone can rule, and partly to changes in the industrial interests of the entire country. In the early days anybody could make money retailing goods. Style was but little thought of. A merchant's stock was good until it was sold. The city and the surrounding country was being settled rapidly, money was plenty, and price was not of such great importance when everyone had money and felt certain that they would shortly be wealthy.

Now what is the state of affairs? There are more goods for sale than people must or can buy. Buyers have been taught to be cautious and critical, and economy is practiced of necessity by nine-tenths of the people. Competition hence becomes severe, and a merchant to be successful must be both wise and diligent in his purchasings, and cannot afford to overlook the advantages which may be found by searching through an entire market. He must post himself on what is offered him by all the houses, and if one can make better prices on any line of goods he must avail himself of the opportunity. Not only is his competitor likely to do so, but his customers are much better posted on prices than formerly through the catalogues now so freely distributed by the large city stores. His best friend in business is that one which will make him the lowest prices, or in some way enable him to make the most money. So that selling goods is not a matter of friendship nowadays, but is strictly business, as it ought to be.—Ex.

MONTREAL NOTES.

Tea brokers here have received frequent enquiries for best Japan tea April and May pick, and some large sales have been made at 27c. to 31c. on western account.

Letters to sugar brokers here state that there is a tremendous amount of speculative buying of raw sugar in Java and the Philippine Islands for next June and July shipment, in the expectation of an advance in prices based on the short supply of cane products.

Cables on currants from Greece to Montreal importers report an easier market at 14s. 3d. to 14s. 6d. cost and freight New York.

Mr. Chouillon reports business to be picking up with him, and credits chocolate men with a lot of sales.

Their annual jollification did not prevent the employees of Lightbown, Ralston & Co. from attending to business this week, and Japan tea and molasses ought to be a purchase now if the tendency of both markets count for anything, and the firm have a good stock of both.

Chaput, Fils & Co. have some fine lines of raisins and currants on hand—sultanas, provincials, etc.

If you have a sweet tooth, the Sherbrooke Maple Product Co., of Sherbrooke, can furnish you with the native product and just what you want.

Some of the more sanguine traders place the stock of molasses in Montreal at less than 1,000 puncheons against 1,800 to 2,000 at the same time last year.

Cod fish is a remarkably firm article on the market here, and Munn's special lines of it came in for considerable attention.

Chocolate and cocoa are more or less of a luxury, but they are a nice thing for the breakfast table. Mr. Hughes says that Bendorp's is doing well, and Walter Baker & Co.'s goods are not behind the procession.

THE CARELESS CLERK.

There are some employes in stores who, though not really dishonest, are equally dangerous to merchants.

Though they will not actually steal, still they are as criminal as the thief. The losses incurred through the carelessness of employes often escape notice, for it is a species of viciousness, the result of which is not always apparent. Yet the merchant suffers, all the same. Perhaps we are wrong in deeming this trait vicious. At worst it is but a deplorable weakness of character, often not latent, but acquired by an unwise training. For the possession of this drawback in character, people invariably have to lay the blame with those on whom their early training depended. The boy who learns his early lessons from the man who conducts his business in a slipshod or haphazard manner cannot help possessing a disregard for order in his latter years. Habits are easily acquired, but it is woefully hard to rid oneself of them especially if they are bad habits.

The clerk who is careless in even the most trivial things never will be successful. Business, like life, is a series of incidents; on the attendance to each item depends the success of the whole. The man who shirks, disregards or ignores trifles will be unsuccessful in the main, for great things are but an aggregation of little things.—Ex.

THE GROCERS' AT HOME.

The committees in charge of the preparations for the annual At Home of the Toronto Retail Grocers' Association, to be held at Webb's on Wednesday evening next, have completed their arrangements for that event, which promises to be the most brilliant and successful one yet given by the Association. The enthusiasm of the whole trade is enlisted even more than it was last year. This was to be expected, since the popularity of the At Home has asserted itself more strongly each year. This year's At Home gets the benefit of the hard work done by former committees.

The attendance has enlarged by a substantial movement each year, and restrictions have had to be placed on the sale of the tickets in order that the trade may first be accommodated. This year the tickets have been in strong demand.

The following are the committees in charge:

Refreshment—J. G. Gibson, A. White.
Printing—R. Mills, J. G. Gibson, A. G. Booth.

Orchestra—A. E. Saunders, J. Doyle, A. Sinclair.

Talent—A. G. Booth, F. S. Roberts, A. Sinclair, D. W. Clark, R. M. Corrie, A. E. Saunders.

Treasurer—R. Mills.

To call on wholesale houses—J. G. Gibson, R. Mills.

As usual the first part of the At Home will be a concert. The following is the programme along which it will be ordered:

	C. Dimmock.
Song	"My All" ... J. Hayden Wand.
	C. A. Smiley.

Mrs. Chas Savage—Accompanist.

This programme is short, but it is said to be diverting enough to last all night. The ball programme is as long and varied as any one could wish, and the menu is a splendid one.

All who attend the At Home may come prepared to enjoy themselves. Double tickets are $1.75, and 60 cents is charged for extra ladies' tickets. Tickets may be purchased at the door.

THE INVENTORY.

"No, sir!" said a Minneapolis business man who is well informed on the local grocery trade, "I don't believe there are over 25 out of the 375 grocers in this city who take stock even once a year." Is it possible that this is the fact? And if the fact, isn't it surprising there are not more failures in the retail grocery trade every year than there are? No merchant knows anything as to where he stands, or what the condition of his business is if he does not make an inventory at least once a year. He may think he can tell the state of his stock to within $50 or $100, but if he made a complete inventory, he probably would awaken to some serious surprises.—Northwest trade.

Retail dealers in other cities than Minneapolis are inclined to shirk work which is really necessary to the successful management of a business, and therefore we would not be surprised to hear that the annual inventory is taken by but a moderate percentage of the retail trade of the country. As regards the importance of the inventory we have spoken in earlier issues, and can consistently endorse all that our Minneapolis cotemporary says upon that head. Not only is the inventory necessary to determine the annual or semi-annual profits of a business, but the future of the dealer may depend upon its revelations. A stock may appear large and valuable, but owing to a deterioration in value through a fall in market prices or by shop-wear, it may be much less valuable than the owner supposes. It may also have run down very low on the more salable sizes or kinds, and need sorting up very badly. Yet all the while the dealer may be deluding himself with the notion that his stock represents a considerable portion of his business assets. He cannot tell until he takes stock whether he really has in his store goods which have been paid for and have not been sold. Several years ago a jobbing house in this city took an inventory at the beginning of the year, and discovered a serious discrepancy between the value of the stock on hand in the sugar department and the account of sales of the article during the previous six months. The conclusion immediately arrived at was decidedly unfavorable to the reputation for honesty of certain employees. Detectives were put at work, and in a few days stealings involving many thousands of dollars were unearthed. Truck loads of sugar for which bills had been rendered and paid, on the receiving clerk's receipts, had been shipped to the firm by the refineries, but never reached their destination. The jobbing firm finally recovered every cent of which they had been defrauded in this manner, the total amount being sufficient to pay for the trouble and expense of many annual stock takings.

Putting aside all other considerations, the mere fact that an inventory enables the merchant to take steps toward the prompt disposal of slow selling goods, which have already depreciated in value and promise to still more rapidly depreciate the longer they are kept, by revealing their perhaps unsuspected existence in the stock, should be a sufficient inducement to the dealer to take account of stock, however laborious and troublesome the work may prove. As regards the difficulty of the task, it should be remembered that only a few hours' time is required and at a season of the year when trade usually experiences a temporary lull. Take stock, by all means take stock, is our advice to all our readers.—Merchants, Review.

Ove Lange, general grocer and commission merchant, Upper Water street Halifax, has admitted Charles R. Reynolds as a partner in his business, and the firm will be known as Lange & Reynolds.

It is calculated that Ireland sends to England every year about forty thousand tons of eggs. This means in close figures six hundred and forty million eggs.

James F. Copland, retail grocer on King street east, Toronto, is in financial difficulties. His liabilities are $10,000 and his assets nominally $11,000. The principal creditors are W. Ryan, Christie, Brown & Co., and Eby, Blain & Co.

A. S. Harrison's grocery and confectionery store at Norwood, Ont., was destroyed by fire last week. Mr. Harrison's stock was insured for $1,550, and was a total loss. The exact amount of Mr. Harrison's loss is not known. The fire is supposed to have originated from a defective flue.

J. E. Hutton, Thornbury, Ont., was in the city this week making purchases for his general store. He is one of the most successful of the young men in business in northern Ontario.

The Christmas number of THE CANADIAN GROCER was a beauty and no mistake. Its handsome cover inclosed 48 pages of fine letter press and elegant illustrations; while the reading matter was fully up to the standard so long maintained. Judging from the display of advertising carried, THE GROCER is enjoying the prosperity it deserves.—Detroit Herald of Commerce.

The other morning between 5 and 6 o'clock Edward Clay, oldest son of W. P. Clay, grocer, Galt, Ont., got up and lighting the lamp for the purpose of warming a drink for the baby, he placed a tin cup on the top of the glass, which forced the flame down into the lamp. He made an effort to get down stairs to throw the lamp out of doors, but it exploded while he was on the stairs, and, being in his night shirt, he was very severely burnt from the head down. With the assistance of his wife and brother-in-law, who stops with them, the flames were put out as soon as possible. Drs. Sylvester and Warlaw were sent for and found Mr. Clay in a very critical condition.

Now that the great banquet is over the members of the Toronto Board of Trade are beginning to talk of the approaching elections. These will take place on the 26th inst, nominations being made a week earlier. Many names are canvassed in connection with the several offices, but at present no very definite prophecies are ventured upon as to the outcome of the balloting.

The Grand Trunk railway Co. have issued a circular stating that an allowance of five cents per barrel off current winter tariff on flour will be granted millers who desire to forward flour to Montreal now, to be stored there pending the opening of navigation and export. The flour will be filled at tariff and the above-mentioned allowance made on proof of exportation. Shippers or consignees will be required to pay Montreal terminals and storage charges.

J. M. Gordon, general merchant and grain buyer, Beaverton, Ont., met with an accident a few days ago by which he lost his left arm below the elbow. While the morning train was taking water he engaged in conversation and placed his hand on the side of the car. A sudden movement of the train caused him to fall, and in the effort to recover his feet the left arm passed beneath the car wheel, being crushed into a pulp. Amputation was necessary.

The West Peterboro' Farmers' institute held a meeting in Peterboro' on Saturday. D. E. Smith, B.A., of Brampton, spoke on "Road-making," proposing changes in the present system. The meeting was unanimous in the opinion that there should be a change in road making. None desired a commissioner and about one third favored the employment of a trained engineer to superintend roads. A committee was appointed to interview the county council with a view to having the act respecting wide tires on heavy waggons imperative in that county.

The success which attended the shipment of turkeys from Canada last year resulted in preparations being made for the coming season on a wider scale. A consignment was landed at Liverpool yesterday from the S. S. City of New York of sixty tons, or about 12,000 turkeys, and they have proved to be in fine condition. An agency has been opened in London, and part of the present shipment was sent here yesterday. The remainder will be distributed over Lancashire, Yorkshire and the Midland counties. Further shipments are expected on the 18th and 21st inst.—National Provisioner.

The Minneapolis grocers had an "experience meeting" recently, after the regular order of business. Some interesting opinions were given on the question, "What is the greatest evil or abuse in the grocery business?" Among other things the following were considered great evils: For a customer to order a can of oil, make the grocer go several blocks for the can and then deliver the oil; ordering a two cent postage stamp and having it charged on the pass book; customers dictating too freely, and allowing them to measure goods bought; lack of unanimity among grocers; delivering a yeast cake two miles; the pass-book system (duplicate slips of sales' accounts were recommended); too long hours, and the universal credit system.

AFTER HOLIDAY REFLECTIONS.

Now that the holidays have come and gone the trade can take time to figure out the gains and losses of the past year. There is no better time for stock taking than now, when the rush of business has slackened and stock has been reduced by the demands of the past busy season.

I believe that a great many grocers do not take a very careful account of stock at any time, because it is a long and tiresome task, and because to the man who carefully watches every detail of his business and owes no man money that he cannot easily pay, it seems a little unnecessary labor.

Those who are hanging on the outer edge do not care very much, and, perhaps don't want to know the facts too intimately.

In either case, however, the task should not be looked upon either as a burden or as an unnecessary one.

It should not be a burden, and is not unnecessary.

To begin with, nothing will show the leaks in a business, nor the accumulation of bad stock, or the fungus growth of unhealthy accounts, like a strict stock taking. It will not be denied that these things are most necessary things to look after.

There are some men who can tell from day to day just how they stand on these matters, and these men always perform as well an annual inspection. It is needless to say that they, as a rule, get out of their business all that it will give.

But the other, and by far the greater number, do not begin to get out of theirs what they should get. How many times, for instance, do they use bad words when they find goods, salable goods, stowed away out of sight, and reported as "all out" by a clerk? Of course, the latter is blamed for this, and he, no doubt, deserves a share of the blame, but what of the proprietor, who waxes so wroth and becomes so fierce over what he should have made impossible by using proper methods?

Some time ago I heard of a grocer who had occasion to remove his place of business, and who, in moving, found boxes of soap and boxes of canned goods and other articles, which had been laid away for months and of which he knew nothing. It was told in rather a spirit of boasting that the find was a great discovery. I am sure that no sensible business man would or ought to boast of such careless methods as were here exposed.

The practice of stock-taking, however, is becoming more general as its merits are becoming more understood. Competition has become so keen that slipshod methods do not avail as they once did. Long credits are not as easily given as they were once, and in consequence of both reasons, over-stocking is much less common than it was some years ago.

Stock-taking cannot be too highly urged upon all retailers, though it should not be necessary to urge it, because its benefits are so great and patent. Men go along easily and jauntily on their business career, taking for granted that their affairs are as they would like them to be. Some day trouble comes and they find it difficult to meet some bills. When forced to investigate, they find that by neglect in looking over stock that they have bought too much of goods which have not a ready sale. The bills that are due and pressing are for these, and they then readily see, what care would have shown them before, that by buying carelessly they had created obligations which should not have been contracted. Every dealer has been confronted with trouble; some only once, while others repeat their troubles because they never heed the lesson.

Now is the time to account to yourself for your stock.

Such grocers' stocks as I have seen during the past holiday season show a great increase in variety over those of former years. More and more of the trade are out in the hunt for all the trade of their own customers that they can get. The belief has gained ground that the great staples can take care of themselves, and more attention has been given to fancy goods than ever before.

Still, to me, it seems that a great discretion must be exercised in selecting the variety which goes to make up the new lines of goods. Many grocers tell the tale that their customers do not buy and will not appreciate most of the fancy goods, because of the fancy prices which are attached to them. It is a mistake to suppose that the grocers themselves get any fair part of the fancy price, because the goods cost them so much that to sell them at all they must be satisfied with less than an average profit. This statement will be verified, I think, by the statement of any grocer having experience in this line of goods. The fact is that the packers of goods in glass and some other packages should be satisfied with a smaller profit than they at present demand, before there can be any great extension of the sale of their goods. Now they apparently cater to that fortunate, but extremely limited, class of consumers who have no care at all as to price.

The fact is that grocers are reaching out to get some of the money which their patrons reserve from November payments to use for Christmas purchases. They are moving in the right direction, and I believe have met with the ready co-operation of their customers. To instance this, I will state that I can name a grocer who put candy in his stock for the Christmas trade and who sold nearly a ton by the pound! He told me that he made more money on this sale than he had on sugar for the past five years, and I can easily believe him.

This, therefore, is an article that every grocer should have in stock; should instruct his clerks to talk up.

I hear of a grocer in a large city west of Albany, who, amongst other rules, forbids any clerk to urge sugar on any one under penalty of discharge. Wise man?—Harlem in National Grocer.

DRY GOODS.

There are times when the wholesale houses relapse into almost hibernating quietness. The past week has seen very few buyers in the city, and the consequence is that trade seems very quiet. Nevertheless, one is soon undeceived, when the shipping department is visited. Large quantities of goods are going out, and larger quantities are coming in. Cases, large and small, are tumbled in and out, showing that in time of peace dry goods men prepare for war.

Letter orders are fairly numerous, and travellers' orders are coming in slowly, but as large as could be expected.

The weather has been very favorable to retailers during the past three weeks. All over Ontario, and, in fact, throughout the whole of Canada, the weather has been fairly severe, accompanied by a small amount of snow, but still sufficient to afford good sleighing. This has quickened the movement of grain and produce, and also the movement of heavy winter goods. When the retailers unload their winter goods well they are always in better spirits for spring buying, and many dealers will not buy spring goods till the middle of January.

Alexander & Anderson are in receipt of their shipments of spring prints in domestic and imported. They claim that the variety shown is fully up to that shown by the average dry goods house, and includes the newest designs on the market. Domestic and imported flannel-ettes are coming to hand, and the range shown at present is very extensive.

Gordon, Mackay & Co., have secured one thousand pieces of combination suitings. These plaid goods are much used by ladies for dresses, morning wrappers, skirts, etc., and are rapidly becoming popular. They are selling these goods at 2 1-4 cents less than the regular price. This of course is due to the large quantity taken by the house, the entire stock of the manufacturer having been secured. The patterns are twenty in number, and were never shown before this season. In their furnishing department their "Crest" brand of white dress shirts is always kept in full stock. This line is becoming celebrated with the trade for style, fit and wear, and is carried in all prices. In parasols their stock is now complete in all lines. The feature of this stock is a choice assortment of handles in natural, ebony, celluloid, sterling silver mounted, and other lines. The prevailing color in fancy parasols is cardinal.

Caldecott, Burton & Spence are busily engaged cutting their spring dress tweeds. The demand for these domestic goods has been quite equal to former seasons. These goods will probably hold for another season. They are moving out their spring lines of hosiery, underwear and topshirts. Staples are in good active demand in the house at present. Prints, flannelettes, shirtings, cottonades, dress linings, gingham, and teazel cloths are moving lively.

W. R. Brock & Co. are showing a long range of art muslins, for curtains and draperies, in all the leading colorings and designs. These goods can be retailed all the way from 7 to 25 cents a yard. The prices are low, although repeats can only be secured at an advanced price, due to the higher price of raw cotton. A shipment of frillings, vellings and complexion nets in the newest shades has just been passed into stock. A case of infants' bibs has just been opened up. These goods are new in design and pattern. Two special lines of unaudried shirts that can be retailed at 50 and 75 cents are being offered. Extraordinary circumstances allowed the purchase of these lines at a price which makes them it is claimed, better value than has ever been shown before. Their sale is very rapid in lots of ten to twenty-five dozen.

John Macdonald & Co., have just received a large shipment of mottled carpets. This line was bought at a special low price, and will be sold to the retail trade at 20 cents per yard, which is considerably lower than any carpet hitherto offered. Moreover, American quotations on this line of carpet show an advance this week of 2 1-2 cents per yard, and it is hardly likely that the line will be duplicated. In their linen department they are doing a huge trade in gingham, napkins, towellings, hessians, etc. The strong demand for these goods has necessitated the forwarding of repeat orders. In the haberdashery department they have just opened a shipment of seam bindings, bone casings, satin ottomans and linen beltings. These are new goods in this market, and can be obtained from this house only. Seven cases of Austrian pearl buttons have been opened up. All sizes are kept in a bewildering variety of design. They have now in stock a full line of their celebrated "Sphinx" linen thread, manufactured by Wm. Barbour & Sons, Lisbon Island, Ireland. In belts they are showing a long range of new styles for spring in fancies, selfs, and club colors. The widths are from 2 to 3 inches, the 2 1-2 and 3 inch widths being in favor.

John Macdonald & Co. are showing a new line of 20 inch tartan surah in tartans Macdonald, clan Alpine, Ferguson, McLaughlin, Mackinnon, Robertson, Macfarlane, Royal Stewart, Campbell, Breadalbane, Macintosh, and the Victoria. These are the newest thing in the silk market to-day, and ladies are using them for blouses and dress trimmings. The effect is very handsome. They have also received a shipment of Swiss muslin and cambric embroideries and insertions; widths run from one-half to 40 inches. They are being sold at special job prices. A new range of 14-inch complexion nets is also to hand; these are popular goods at present. There is a big demand for satin checked apron muslins, and this house carries a large stock. They are shown in checks from the pin check to the largest sized basket plaid.

J. McCabe, grocer, Elora, Ont., lost his stock in a fire which destroyed the building in which he carried on business. His stock was insured.

a point of Keeping it always in Stock.

[As there is often inequality in the prices of the various sellers on this market, owing to differences in buying conditions and other circumstances, and as prices are modified by both quantity and quality, the quotations given below and in our Prices Current necessarily take a wide range.]

TORONTO MARKETS.

TORONTO, Jan. 12, 1893.
GROCERIES.

The wholesale trade report 1893 to have made a good beginning. They never look for much business during the first fortnight in January. The last two weeks have been no dazzling exception to this rule, but they have clearly been better than the corresponding period of last year. The hard weather and fine fall of snow improved the roads and gave an earlier movement to farmers' deliveries of grain and started business somewhat in the country. The advance in sugar had a similar, though less appreciable effect; there was a limited movement on the part of city retailers to anticipate any further advance. The wholesale houses have completed their stock-taking but have not yet made out the results. This they do know, that they begin the year with stocks light in everything that is likely to be in current demand. They are all quite or comparatively low in sugar, Valencia raisins, currants, tea. In all these, the market is in such a shape that wholesalers would for the most part prefer to be well-stocked. Another general point relative to stock-taking is the expectation that last year's net results will be rather low. Price-cutting played havoc with profits up to the month of September. From that forward till the end of the year there was a rather less aggressive competition carried on and some money was made.

COFFEE.

The market is still very firm. The price of Brazil coffee has hardened since last report. A local house that had bought an invoice last week tried to duplicate it this week, but was unable to do so unless at an advance of $\frac{1}{4}$ c. The price of Rio coffee is firm from 20c. upwards. In Java coffee the market is likewise very firm at a recent advance. The price is firm 28c. upwards, but very finest Old Government Java would now cost the importer 40c.

DRIED FRUIT.

There is some life still left in the dried fruit trade. The stock of Valencia off-stalk raisins is very light, some houses being bare of supplies. The lowest quotation for good fruit is $5\frac{1}{4}$ c. Prices on a lower basis relate to a much lower rate of quality than that usually acceptable to consumers. Valencia layers in very small compass, and the demand does not revive since Christmas. The price is 7c. upwards. Of blue fruit there is enough left for the holders to compensate themselves for the cutting they did before the close of the old year's trade. On the remnant of the better classes of this fruit there is a firmer feeling, but London layers do not quote materially higher, \$2.25 to \$2.60 being the range. Currants are not in strong request, but as they are not plentiful the price is unchanged, being firmer indeed in some lines. There is a line heard of that can be got below $6\frac{3}{4}$ c., but the bulk of the trade hold that figure as their inside price. Barrels are quoted by some holders at 6c. Good Patras currants are quite scarce. A considerable quantity of stock, sold some time ago to arrive this month, is now on the way, and it may affect present prices. There are scarcely any cases to be had on the street. Cases are 6d. higher in Patras. Prunes are considered very good stock now, being in small volume and in very fair demand. U's are $7\frac{1}{2}$ c., B's $8\frac{1}{2}$ c. Fancy figs are about cleared out. Bags are $4\frac{1}{2}$ to $5\frac{1}{2}$ c. Walnuts, which usually are easy at this time of year, are very firmly quoted by shippers. This market is doing little in nuts of any kind. The range for walnuts is 10 to 15c. according to quality.

RICE AND SPICES.

The market for rice is steady and unchanged. The price is $4\frac{3}{4}$ c. upwards. Spices have not undergone any marked change. In cloves and pepper an increased firmness is noted, both coming a little higher to buyers in the foreign market. Cloves are now quoted at 15 to 20c. The firmness is attributed to speculative efforts in London to corner the market. Black pepper is 12 to 15c.

SUGAR.

A problem on which there are a good many heads now engaged is the future price of sugar. The present state of the market warrants the view that the price will not be lower before March. The statistical position appears to support the theory that there will be a further advance. There does not appear to be a sufficiently strong and widespread conviction that this latter view is correct to lead to any heavy buying movement on the part of either wholesalers or retailers. The wholesalers would have bought liberally before the advance if they could have got future delivery, but their offers since the advance are not said to be very numerous. Speculation in sugar has never brought much money to any house that has tried it. Either the market takes a reverse, or the necessity or policy of making a cut have usually caused such ventures to turn out disappointing. There is therefore not so much keenness to take risks this year as there was last. Granulated is steady at $4\frac{3}{4}$ c., and yellow quotes from $3\frac{3}{4}$ c. Sugar stocks are light in wholesale hands, and that circumstance will impel buying.

Willett & Gray, New York, in their Statistical say of sugar: The week—Raws and refined unchanged. Net cash quotations: Muscovados, 3c; centrifugals, 37-16c; granulated, 46c. Total stock in all the principal countries by latest uneven dates is 1,220,039 tons, against 1,046,863 tons at the same uneven dates last year: Havana and Mantanzas stock 3,000 tons, against 20,000 tons last year. Raws—This has been rather a holiday week, and transactions in the local markets have been quite insignificant, but a considerable business is reported from Cuba, including 70,000 bags centrifugals, at rather above the parity of our local quotations, which are unchanged from last week. The tendency of the opening year is in favor of sellers although liberal offerings from the new Cuba crop are commencing to be made, which may check the tendency to an advance.

Refined—After a quiet ending of the old year, buyers appear disposed to take on larger stocks for the new year's business, and an active and strong market is to be noted with the opening year. Prices, however, remain unchanged for the week, except for grades of softs, and there are no indications of any general change for the present. Quotations will no doubt follow the course of the raw markets quite closely this year, and many circumstances are likely to occur to influence the market.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES.

Syrups are selling quietly at from $1\frac{3}{4}$ to 3c. New Orleans molasses is quoted 30 to 50c. according to quality. West Indian is 30 to 35c.

TEAS.

Purchasers are not coming forward so freely with their orders as might be expected, the low rate of retail stocks and the scarcity of the best selling grades being considered. A lively movement is one of the early certainties, however. The wholesalers are now giving attention to stocks, and tasting is now very generally observable in the sample rooms. Japans quote from 15c. up, Congous from 14c., Young Hysons from 18c., Indian and Ceylon from 14c.

MARKET NOTES.

[Importers, wholesale merchants and manufacturers should send any items intended for this department so that they may reach the head office not later than Wednesday morning. The editor will always welcome such information.]

Davidson & Hay now control the sale of T. D. Millar's Paragon cheese.

Clemes Bros. have received a carload of cocoanuts direct from Jamaica.

Labrador herring and fish of all kinds are now stocked by T. Kinnear & Co.

Warren Bros. & Boomer have received a shipment of fine Rio coffee, ex s. s. Capua.

Sloan & Crowther are offering some special bargains in gallon tomatoes, packed in cases of 6 tins each.

The perusal of W. H. Gillard & Co's. advertisement should interest merchants who desire to extend their tea trade.

Clemes Bros., have received a consignment of maple syrup, just in from the Eastern townships, that they claim to be extra fine. It comes in ten lbs. tins.

T. Kinnear & Co. are offering case prunes, first-class in quality, at reasonable prices. They have also some old prunes in hogsheads that they can sell at $4\frac{3}{4}$ to 5c.

Merchants should write W. H. Gillard & Co., Hamilton, for particulars of their advertised Standard Teas. An increased sale or better profits is invariably the result to buyers.

Davidson & Hay have a large stock of James Morand's Valencia raisins on hand. The firm claim that this fruit is second to none, and they are prepared to quote prices on a basis favorable to buyers.

Perkins, Ince & Co. are advised by their Rotterdam correspondents that Java coffee suitable for the Canadian trade is very scarce. Yellows in small parcels he reports as changing hands at a price equal to 40c.

Eby, Blain & Co. are offering fine freshwater herrings, heads off or on, in kegs. As only a limited quantity of these fish are put up this season, intending buyers should avail themselves of this opportunity to purchase.

Very fine and delicious California Loose Muscatel raisins in bags and barrels are being offered by Eby, Blain & Co. This fruit is very fine, and is particularly delicious as cooking raisins. The price is low and consequently they are free sellers.

The clam, unlike the oyster, is not only a delicious article of food, but its juice or broth is said to possess wonderful medicinal properties, cures dyspepsia and all forms of disordered stomach. Burnham's Clam Bouillon is an outgrowth of this discovery. A food that tickles your palate and fits your stomach well is certainly something to be desired.

Yesterday the American ship Cora, commanded by captain Ray, was cleared for New York by Harrall & Elmer with a cargo of 5,300 bbls. of molasses and 1,131 bbls. of rice. The cargo was consigned to N. W. Taussig & Co., of New York, and the shipment of molasses was said to be the largest single shipment to leave New Orleans.—New Orleans Picayune.

The Sanitary Soap is a new line that the Pure Gold Mfg. Co. are putting on the market. It is likely to be received with a strong demand, as such a line is in much stronger request since health precautions and health inspection have been given such an impetus by the cholera and by the fear that it may reach this continent this year.

J. A. Hawkesworth furnishes the following Valencia raisin statement, crop 1892: Stock on hand November 30, 100,000 boxes; received during December, 123,000 boxes; stock on hand December 31, 110,000 boxes; distribution during December, 113,000 boxes. Valencia raisins on the way, by steamer direct, 20,000 boxes.

Messrs. E. Lazenby and Son, the well-known pickle manufacturers of London, on Saturday week held their sixth annual dinner in the Whitehall Rooms of the Hotel Metropolitan. In accordance with the custom of the firm all the representatives and staff were invited, and an exceedingly pleasant time was spent. Mr. W. Lazenby occupied the chair, and Mr. C. Lazenby the vice-chair—Manchester Grocers' Review.

A trial shipment of a few carloads of canned vegetables is now on its way to England from this market. If the experiment proves a success this line of export trade will undoubtedly be followed up. The circumstances are favorable to success. The cost of the goods is low in this country and comparatively high in the United States. Hence the competition of the United States pack will not be so hard to face in the English market as it would be if these conditions were the reverse of what they are. Any considerable relief through an export outlet would improve domestic prices.

A decision was rendered on December 28th by Judge Carpenter of the U. S. Circuit Court, district of Mass., in the case of O. & W. Thum v. John A. Andrews & Co., in favor of the complainants. This has been a long drawn out and hotly contested suit, every point involved was fully discussed and considered, and in every point were the complainants sustained. The decision firmly establishes O. & W. Thum Co's rights to the sealing border and other features of their Tanglefoot Sticky Fly paper. The success of Tanglefoot is the result of much time, labor, and money spent in perfecting and introducing it, and the O. & W. Thum Co. naturally feel that they are entitled to the benefits of their patents. The decision of this suit is of special importance and interest, as it will enable them to suppress several other close imitations of Tanglefoot and infringements of their patents.

PETROLEUM.

The market is featureless, with the basis continuing at 14 to 14½c., the price of Canadian refined.

BUTTER AND CHEESE.

The play of butter prices from day to day is within a small limit. The deliveries of one day may be better than another and a temporary but trifling relaxation is noticeable, but there is never a greater drop than a cent, seldom that, and prices always recover, because the demand is keen and constant, whereas the supply is on the short side and operates rather fitfully. Good dairy tub butter is in request, the capacity of the demand being much above the resources of the supply. In default of offerings of butter of this description, buyers have of course to take something else, and the market for lower grades of tub butter is therefore likewise supported by a good demand. So that all dairy tub is good property, and is scarce. Choice is quoted at 15 to 20c., lower grades are 15c. up, and are readily taken by bakers when they get to the minimum point of value. Large rolls are not over-plentiful either. Good roll butter is worth 17c. Indifferent stock is worth 14c., with the range between these prices scaled for variations in intermediate quality.

Cheese is very firm at 11 to 11½c. for fall makes. Earlier makes are 10½ to 11c.

COUNTRY PRODUCE.

BEANS—The price of No. 1 hand-picked stock is $1.35. There is some common stock held at $1.15.

DRIED APPLES—Buyers are open to take all that come at 4¾c., but higher prices are hard to get.

EVAPORATED APPLES—Some purchases have been made of round lots at 7¾c. outside; 7¼c. has also been paid outside. Jobbing parcels are 7½c.

EGGS—Fresh eggs are now quite a rarity and are worth 25c. There is no need to couple the condition "in small lots," because large lots are not to be had at all. Cold stock are worth 18 to 19c., and limed eggs are 16 to 16½c.

HONEY—Extracted honey is 7 to 10c. and is finding little sale. Comb honey is 13 to 16c.

HOPS—The price at which the little business that is done is 18 to 20c. for 1890 stock. Choice hops of the former year's crop are 15 to 16c.

ONIONS—In this cold weather there is scarcely any trade in onions, which remain at $2.50.

POTATOES—Cars are taken at 75c., but sellers are few. The cold weather gives a check to business. Out of store lots are 85 to 90c.

DRESSED POULTRY—The offerings have fallen away very much. Chickens are 35 to 50c. per pair, ducks 60 to 80c. per pair, geese 7c. per lb., turkeys 10½c. per lb.

HOGS AND PROVISIONS.

The market for dressed hogs, though it had reached an almost unprecedented point last week, did not stop there. Packers take all suitable offerings at $8.25, and this price has been paid both for spot stock and to arrive. Higher prices are also spoken of, and some purchases are reported to have been made at an advance on $8.25. The packers are not all so fastidious as they used to be in the matter of select weights. Hogs are now so scarce that the heavy weights and light

TORONTO.

The market for canned goods continues to be favorable to buyers. The prices realized may not go so low down as they did. 82½c. being now the inside price, but this rather means that the lowest grade goods do not sell well and so are not freely offered by the jobbers. The range is from 82½c. to $1. Packers do not give the market a chance to turn in their favor, their efforts to sell having a steadily depressing effect. Their goods are going rapidly into consumption, but the responsibility of carrying them is put on the producers, neither jobbers nor retailers being anxious to assume any share of the risk. The low price and the now established place of canned goods among the foods of the country cause the consumption to be very large, but the traders only stock themselves in a hand-to-mouth way. Salmon is quiet from $1.45. All other descriptions of canned goods are at a standstill. A few cars of vegetables have been forwarded for sale on the English market, but nothing can be said yet of the result of the trial.

MONTREAL.

The movement in canned goods is small and the market without feature. What little business there is, is at very small margins.

weights are not all allowed to go to the butchers. Products are remarkably firm at advanced figures.

BACON—Long clear 11c. Smoked backs are 12½ to 13c., bellies 13½c., rolls 10c.

HAMS—Are 13c.

LARD—Pure Canadian is 11½c. in tubs, and 12c. in pails. Compound is 10 to 10½c.

BARREL PORK—U. S. heavy mess is $20 to $21. Canadian short cut is $21.50 to $22.

DRESSED MEATS—Beef forees are 5 to 6c. hindquarters 7 to 8½c., veal 6½ to 8c., mut-ton 6½ to 7c., lamb 7c. to 8½c.

GREEN FRUIT.

Cold weather makes trade in green fruit rather slow. The market is sufficiently stocked for all requirements. Boxes of Jamaica oranges are $2.75 to $3. There are no barrels. Floridas are $3 to $3.50. Tangerines are $2.75, Mandarines $3.25. Valencias are $4.25 to $4.50. Grape fruit is $4.50 per hundred. Lemons are $2.75 to $3.50 as to quality. Bananas are $1.50 to $2 and are scarce. Malaga grapes are about done at $7 to $8. Cranberries are $10 per barrel. North Shore stock is 75 to 90c. per basket. Pineapples are 20 to 30c. Cocoa-nuts are 5½ to 6c. Apples are $1.50 to $2.50.

FISH AND OYSTERS.

Whitefish and salmon trout are unchanged and quiet at 7c., while 7½c. is the price of Manitoba white fish specially. Lake herring are scarce at $2 to $2.50. Sea herring is 5c., steak cod is 6½ to 7c., market cod 4½c. skinned and boned codfish, 6½c., Labrador herring $6, shore herring $5 to $5.50, Digby herring 11 to 12½c., boneless fish is 4c., boneless cod 7 to 8c., oysters $1.25.

MONTREAL MARKETS.

MONTREAL, Jan. 12, 1893.

[As there is often inequality in the prices of the various sellers on this market, owing to differences in buying conditions and other circumstances, and as prices are modified by both quantity and quality, the quotations given below, and in our Prices Current, necessarily take a wide range.]

GROCERIES.

There has been more spirit shown by the grocery market during the week, which is due to various causes. The principal cause is the manifest anxiety about supplies of leading staples, such as tea and sugar, which has led to a rather active movement of both from first hands. Jobbers have been holding off all along on these in the hope of better terms, but it has not done them any good, in fact, the reverse, for the chances were that they could have booked orders for supplies at better terms before the holidays than they can now, as the natural conditions at primary markets and the statistical position favors higher prices if anything. In consequence of this, both sugar and tea are firmly held and the indications point to higher prices if anything. The advance in sugar of an ¼c. has quickened the demand for the staple and both refiners and jobbers report a freer demand, while the raw product continues to show a remarkably firm front. Teas and coffees have experienced considerable activity and the latter is remarkably firm, with a stiffening tendency in values. Chicory is also scarce and wanted.

Syrups and molasses have been quiet but firm, especially the latter, stocks of which in Montreal are placed at one half what they were at the same time last year. Holders manifest considerable independence, therefore, and talk higher prices. With regard to payments, traders' generally anticipate slow returns during and just after the holidays, and this is the case at present.

SUGARS.

There is a very fair trade passing in refined sugars, the demand being of a general character plainly evidencing that stocks in grocers hands are small. The advance of an ¼c. by the refiners has not checked the demand and there is talk of another raise in consequence of the remarkably firm position of the raw sugar market. We quote refiners prices as follows: Granulated 4½c. and yellows 3½ to 4c.

SYRUPS.

There is not much doing in syrups but the market holds steady at 1¾ to 2¼c. A small movement is reported in Barbadoes molasses at 32½c. in round lots. This price however could not be repeated now for jobbers are asking 34 to 35c.

TEAS.

There has been a fair trade doing in teas, as buyers are evidently beginning to understand that holding off for lower prices is not going to bring them about. There is considerable enquiry for cheap Japans, prices of which are moving upward. Good to medium and fine grades also have shown a freer movement, some 1000 packages in all having been moved during the week.

COFFEES.

There has been more enquiry for coffee, not from actual consumers but from jobbers, who, in this as in other lines, show more anxiety about securing stock for future wants, and we note some sales of good round lots in consequence. Mocha has left first hands at 25c. in round lots, while Jamaica has changed hands at 18½c. for ordinary grades. There is no really fine stock to be had, but bids for 20c. have been received. Asking prices in round lots of other kinds are Maracaibo, 22 to 23c.; Rio, 20 to 21c.; Java, 26½ to 29c., and Mocha, 27 to 30c.

SPICES.

Despite advices from New York citing weakness, spices are firm here, and although we note no sales it would certainly take 7½c. to move a round lot of black pepper. There is no change in cloves or nutmegs.

RICE.

The rice market does not show any change, business being quiet and quotations unchanged at the following standard $3.85; choice $4.25; higher grades $5 to $7.

DRIED FRUIT.

Dried fruit has not furnished any special activity during the week, but despite the free offerings of cheap stock really prime fruit cannot be had under 5c. net cash in round lots, but no sales of importance have transpired during the week. A lot of good ordinary seconds have come forward during the week and is offered on the market at 4½c., thirty days, in round lots. As to the cheap poor stock it is very difficult to quote for it is simply selling for what holders can get and that is not much but it is more than likely that a bid of 4c. would be readily accepted by some holders. Valencia layers are firm at 6 to 6¼c. in round lots. There is no perceptible change in currants which are quoted steady at 5¼ to 5¾c. in straight round wholesale lots. For jobbing quantities with the exception of the inferior Valencia stock a buyer would have to pay a proportionate advance on the above figures.

NUTS.

Business in nuts is quiet and prices are unchanged. We quote the following:—Pecans 11 to 12½c., Terragona almonds 16½c., Grenoble walnuts 13½ to 14½c., filberts 10 to 10½c., Ivica 14½c., Brazil 15c., marbotts 12½c., cocoa nuts $3.50 to $4.50 per bag of 100 for old, new $5 to $5.50.

FRUIT.

Business is quiet in oranges the usual lull after the holiday rush. In small jobbing quantities we quote Fancy Floridas $3.25 to $3.50 Valencias $4.00 to $4.25 Messinas $2.50 to $2.75 Jamaica in barrels $5 to $6.

There is even a small demand for lemons and we quote Missinas $2.00 to $3.50 according to goods.

Grapes are quiet and unchanged as follows Almeria in kegs $7 to $8 Concords 3½c. to 4c.

There is a fair demand for dates at 5½ to 6c. in boxes.

FISH.

The demand for fish is good and dealers report an unusually active business. Sales to arrive of No. 1 Halifax green cod have been made at $5.75, while spot transactions have transpired at $5.50. We quote:—Haddock 4c., cod 3 to 3½c., steak cod 4½ to 5c., lake trout 7c., white fish 7 to 7½c., pickerel or dore 8c.; dried cod, $5.50; No. 1 green cod, $5.50; B. C. salmon, $13 per brl.; Labrador salmon, $13 to $14; No. 2 mackerel, $14 per brl.; do. $7 per half brl.; Labrador herring, $5.25 to $5.50 per brl.; C.B. and N. S. herring, $5.25 per brl.; tommy cods, $2 to $2.25 per brl.; fresh herring, $1.85 per hundred.

APPLES.

There is no material change in apples but stocks are ample and with a rather dull market, holders in the West are offering at lower prices. Car lots of good winter varieties can be had at $2.25.

POTATOES.

Supplies of potatoes are decreasing here and the feeling is firmer in consequence. Car lots of good to choice having been placed with buyers here during the week at 90 to 95c., which is an advance of 10c.

HOPS.

The hop market is quiet and good Eastern Townships, 1892 stock, has been offered here at 18 to 19c., a round lot fetching 18½c. the other day. Yearlings are slow of sale at 14 to 16c. and old stock very dull at 5 to 9c.

HONEY.

There is no change in honey, combs selling at 13 to 14c. for choice, with 9 to 11c. for darker stock as to quality. Extracted is quoted at 6½ to 8c.

BEANS.

The market is steady, with sales of choice hand packed at $1.35 to $1.40 per bushel, and $1.15 to $1.20 for ordinary.

ASHES.

The movement in ashes is slow and the market dull and featureless. We quote first pots $4.25, seconds $3.50 to $3.55, first pearls $5.15 to $5.20.

DRESSED POULTRY

There has been a fair demand for fine dry picked turkeys at 11½ to 12c. per lb. and common stock 10 to 10½c. in lots and good dry picked chickens command 8½ to 9c., geese 8 to 8½c. and ducks 9 to 10c. in lots.

DRESSED HOGS.

The market is somewhat excited and higher purchases by Montreal buyers hav-

FLOUR AND FEED.

TORONTO.

The improvement in the wheat market has caused a movement among millers to secure a higher range of values for flour, millers claiming that the price of raw material is too high for them to continue selling at former prices. Both bran and shorts are firmer.

FLOUR.—City millers' and dealers' prices are: Manitoba patents, $4.60; strong bakers' $4.25; white wheat patents, $4.50; straight roller, $3.40; low grades, per bag, $1.25 to $1.50.

Car prices are: Toronto freights—Manitoba patents, $4.30 to $4.40; Manitoba strong bakers' $3.75 to $4.90; Ontario patents, $3.25 to $3.50; straight roller, $3.15 to $3.30; extra, $2.60 to $2.70; low grades, per bag, $1.00 to $1.25.

MEAL.—Oatmeal is $3.80. Cornmeal is $3.50.

FEED.—Bran is $11.50 to $12, shorts $12.50 to $13 mixed feed $22, feeding corn 57 to 58c., oats 29 to 31c.

HAY.—Baled timothy is $9.

STRAW.—Is steady at $5.50 to $6.

MONTREAL.

There has been some improvement to flour during the week, an export demand being to note, while the local call is widening to larger dimensions. Winter wheat $4.25 to $4.50; spring patent, $4.25 to $4.50; straight rollers $3.55 to $3.75; extra $3.20 to $3.25; superfine $2.65 to 2.90; city strong bakers' $4.10 to 0.00; strong bakers $4.00 to $4.10.

ing been made in the west at $8.20 to $8.25 laid down here and we now quote $8.25 to $8.35 per 100 lbs.

PROVISIONS.

In sympathy with the excitement in the west we have a much firmer provision market to note and domestic pork is higher than a week ago. Lard also is higher than it was while the feeling in smoked meats is firm. We quote as follows: Canadian short cut, per brl. $19 to $20; Mess pork, Western, new, per brl $19 to $20.00; Hams, city cured, per brl. 11 to 12c.; Lard, Canadian, in pails 10½ to 10½c.; Bacon, per lb., 11½ to 12c.; Lard, com, refined, per lb., 9 to 9½c.

EGGS.

There is a good local demand for eggs and prices are firm. We quote: Fresh boiling, 24 to 25c.; held fresh, 19 to 20c.; local limed, 17 to 18c.; and Western limed, 14 to 15c.

BUTTER AND CHEESE.

There has been a rather freer movement in creamery butter on export account since our last and holders feel somewhat better than they did, but prices are unchanged. Choice dairy stock is scarce, and there is very little Western stock offering here. Creamery, 22 to 23c.; Townships 20 to 22c.; Morrisburg and Brockville 18 to 19c.; Western dairy 17 to 18c.

Cheese has been more active also, some 8,000 boxes having been moved during the week at 10¾ to 11½c. Stocks here are very small, and holders are disposed to ask higher prices if anything.

ST. JOHN, N. B., MARKETS.

ST. JOHN, N. B., Jan. 12, 1893.

GROCERIES.—The past week has been like all after a storm, but indications point to more active market in most lines. Refiners and wholesalers are talking higher prices for sugar. The flour market has taken an upward turn. Beeves fall in line, and to say nothing about lard and pork, which is almost out of sight and still keep smoving upward. If money were a little more plentiful it would look like a regular old fashioned boom.

MOLASSES.—The talk during the fall that molasses was a short crop has proved a fizzle, as prices are lower to day than for some time with a very limited demand.

DRIED FRUITS.—Higher prices are talked of for off-stock of Valencia layer raisins present prices are 5½ to 6c and 6½ to 7c. Prunes 8c. Dates 4½ to 5c. London layers $2.25 to $2.40.

FISH.—The market is dull and not much prospect for improvement. Large cod are quoted $4.50 to $5, medium cod $3.75 to $4; pollock $2.15 to $2.35. Pickled herring, Shelbourn, $4 to $4.25 per bbl.; half bbls., $2.50 to $2.75; shad, $5 to $5.50 for half bbls.; mackerel, half bbls., $4.50 to $5; smoked herring, 7 to 9c.; finnan haddies, 6c. Frozen cod and pollock, 2¼ to 3½c.

THREE KINDS OF CUSTOMERS.

Every retail merchant knows that in trade there are three kinds of customers to deal with—first, the one who knows just what she wants; the second, the one who thinks she knows, and the third does not pretend to know. The first is generally posted on styles, fashions, weave, finish and colorings of the goods desired—in a word knows what she wants and where to obtain it. This class is easily waited upon, and gives the merchant or salesforce but little trouble. The second, who thinks she knows what she wants and does not, is the one who is the most difficult to sell and please. She requires special attention, the exercise of patience and good judgement on the part of the salesforce. The good salesman understands this, and brings the power of his knowledge of human nature to the fore to satisfy and to please. This is where the skill and tact of the good salesman comes in. The third is the unpretentious customer who depends upon the experience, taste, judgment and knowledge of the merchant and his salesforce rather than her own. She is frank enough to tell you that her knowledge of goods is limited and that she does not get out much. She depends upon you to be suited. This affords the salesman the opportunity to sell the late styles or unsaleable stock in many instances. If he treats the customer fairly he tells what are good sellers, what are not selling well, what are the latest styles and the most serviceable goods. The cunning salesman often overreaches the mark by attempting to sell an unsaleable article to such a customer. This is a mistake, and one that will react against the merchant. Never deceive. If an article is out of style say so; tell the truth and you will sell more goods, and satisfy your customers, as well as yourself.—Chronicle.

SYSTEM IN THE STORE.

A late issue of the Ohio Merchant contains the following relative to system in the store:

"Webster defines system as 'an assemblage of things adjusted into a regular whole; or a whole plan or scheme consisting of a chain of mutual dependencies,' etc.

"The principle of system, in common with all principles of action, is found in the operations of nature. The man, therefore, who lacks 'system' is out of line with nature, and to be out of line with natural system is to be at odds with the world, and his surroundings. What the rudder is to the boat, system is to the business, without which it will helplessly drift beyond rescue. It is often stated that men of genius are particularly noted for being careless in their methods and habits of action, but these are not the 'geniuses' who make a success in business lines. We honestly believe that if a man were possessed of sufficient capital and experience, and all other factors of success, but was totally lacking in system, he would surely make a failure in business. Some of the principal matters in which system relates to dealers are the buying of goods, the arrangement of stock, the division of labor, the recording of sales and accounts, and the delivery of goods to customers. In the matter of buying it is necessary that the buyer should avail himself of a system which will keep him posted as to goods needed or soon to be needed, and the market prices and relative differences in goods.

"He will therefore keep a record of goods asked for but not kept, and new articles which are brought to his notice by the trade papers or manufacturers' circulars. He will also keep a record of current prices and quotations, and freight and other allowances, to enable him when he buys to purchase with intelligence in regard to his needs, and with discretion in regard to the market.

THE DRUMMER'S PETITION.

A hungry drummer out in the wilds of Nebraska puts up the following pathetic petition, to which many of our eastern travelers will respond; "so mote it be!"

"Backward, turn backward oh time in thy flight!
Feed me on mush again just for to-night;
I have grown weary of restaurant fakes,
Petrified sandwiches, vulcanized steaks,
Oysters that sleep in a watery bath,
Butter as strong as Goliath of Gath;
Weary of paying for what I can't eat,
Chewing trunk hinges and calling it meat,

Backward turn backward, for weary I am!
Give me a whack at my Grandmother's jam;
Let me drink milk that has never been skimmed,
Let me eat butter whose hair has been trimmed;
Let me but once have an old-fashioned pie,
Thereafter in peace I might curl up and die.
I have been chewing old scrap iron for years,
Can you then wonder I'm melting in tears?"

—Detroit Herald of Commerce.

Olive growing, olive picking, and the manufacture of olive oil have become a highly important industry in California. This year the industry has a remarkable boom, and the dealers are entirely unable to meet all the orders they have received. This is especially the case in the Pomona Valley. Everybody engaged in the olive trade—growing, making oil, or acting as brokers—is making unusual profit, and there is a demand for five times the amount of the crop. One order that could not be filled came to Pomona last week from a New York grocery house for 20,000 gallons of pickled olives. Many orchardists have made $250 an acre from olives this season, and some have made a clean profit of $350 an acre.—Commercial Engineer.

Rennie's Illustrated Guide for Amateur Gardeners is issued for the whole of 1893, its appearance pretty closely coinciding with that of this year of grace. It has the advantage of a very fine cover, and the cover has no cause to be ashamed of its contents. The outside of the book, in fact, triumphantly challenges fault-finding, the variety, richness and harmony of its coloring matching well with its tastefully conceived design. So bright a book might make the disappointed amateur gardener reconsider his decision not to try his 'prentice hand again and reconvert him to belief in the simple joys poetically associated with garden labors. The Guide has a tempting appearance that cannot fail to do good to the hoe and rake trade.

PRICE CUTTING AND A REMEDY.

When first I mentioned this matter before our committee it was received with an air of suspicion by most members. Our president at once advised us to beware of attempting any interference with individual freedom in trade matters, for, he said, and I myself believe it, many a promising association has gone to its ruin in the vain attempt to coerce members into adhering to prices fixed by the committee. It is a rock that would shatter any association. I thought I was misunderstood. I did not advocate any such measure as the fixing of prices and insisting upon our members adopting them. I explained my meaning in the columns of the Grocers' Review, and gave many reasons for the adoption of such a move as that I advocated. Other writers followed me, agreeing with me that something of the nature I proposed was not only desirable, but had now become a necessity in the interests of the whole trade. Wholesale, retail, and assistants alike, from this correspondence, and more still from letters I have received, and conversations I have had with many grocers and their assistants—I feel quite satisfied that some guide to sound prices; showing a fair remunerative margin for the defraying of business expenses, and a reasonable profit for the tradesman or employer, would be hailed with pleasure by the Manchester Associations. My reason for first mentioning the idea to our committee was the strong conviction I had that something of the kind would be expected by many of our members. Fools are not all dead yet, and if conducting a business for the benefit of the public, and the eventual ruin of a man's business and family, entitles him to that unenviable distinction, I think the grocery trade may fairly lay claim to the prize. I will take sugar as an instance. We have for some time past been selling it at a considerable loss. We go on selling it at 2d. per lb., while the co-operative stores calmly charge 2 1-2d. for the same article, and get it, except in the case of those members who are cute enough to buy almost everything they want there, and, after that, head for some private grocers for their sugar. These are what may be termed bargain hunters. They go round scanning shop windows to see who cuts prices in one article, and who in another, some people using half a dozen tradesmen in this manner. These bargain hunters are quite within their right. Grocers themselves are to blame. I don't suppose there is a single tradesman to-day who is not heartily sick of selling crystal sugar at 2d., yet for want of an effort at combination to effect a farthing per pound rise, we still stick in the mud. This is really a crowning folly, and especially so nowadays when we are surrounded with magnificently fitted tea shops and butter shops. These two articles, which for generations have been looked upon as requisite to compensate a grocer for his loss incurred upon the sale of sugar, have been in a great measure filched away. Therefore it is useless to preach old custom when the conditions of trade are altogether changed. I know it has been customary from the days of olden times to sell sugar at first cost, but in the days when such a practice was established there were no tea firms who could boast of doing a large proportion of the tea trade of the country. I was amused, when discussing this question the other day, at a grocer who remarked that not one grocer in fifty could do a simple multiplication sum. He said that if a grocer only realized 2 1-2 per cent. discount he could at the same time clear and re-stock every week, and make 130 per cent. per annum upon the capital employed. This sounded rosy, but to look at one side of the balance sheet only, and that the one showing profits alone, is to indeed dwell in a veritable fool's paradise. Look at the other side, where expenses are shown. Has any grocer yet found that his trade can be done, and all expenses paid, out of 2 1-2 per cent.? Rents, rates, taxes, depreciation, banking expenses, office expenses, wages, sundries; can these be paid out of 2 1-2 per cent.? I never heard of it. That kind of calculation is a veritable will-o'-the-wisp, and has led many a man into the quagmire of bankruptcy. In Manchester a well-conducted shop will take 10 per cent. upon the turnover to pay expenses. Further, there is no article in the average grocer's shop that is so expensive in its sale as sugar. So much time is taken up in weighing, making up, packing away, etc. I have not made any nice calculation, but I should say that where the expenses at 10 per cent. upon the whole turnover, sugar ought to be in a relative proportion of 13 per cent. or 14 per cent. Then, again, many men in business make a mistake in calculation of profits. I will suppose that a grocer has fancied he had placed an average of 10 per cent. of profit upon his goods, allowing what he considered a fair profit for margin. He draws for that week £110 in his shop, and, reckoning up, says, "I have made £11 gross profit, out of which to pay expenses and keep my family. Most tradesmen would say "quite right," but it is not right. The gross profit is but £10. He based his percentage upon first cost, not upon receipts. All these things go to show how much better it would be if the whole trade had a domestic list in the papers to guide them in fixing prices, this list to be based upon a profit to be agreed upon, and the wholesale prices, which would form the basis of this list, to be lowest prices to good buyers. I have spoken at considerable length about sugar, as I was requested to pay particular attention to this article. I know that to advocate a 10 or 12 1-2 per cent. profit to be taken upon sugar is to advocate a revolution in our system of trade, but as sensible men we must admit that we have now reached the limit of endurance, and it is high time we made a bold stand, and demand that which is just and right. My opinion is that no reasonable argument can be raised against it on the present condition of our trade. As for butter, this is the only other article I intend to refer to at any length. All around us we have men advertising the finest Kiel butter at 1s. 2d., and they take care to state upon this advertisement, "no higher price," thus leading the public to believe that 1s. 2d. is a reasonable price for best butter. We who are in the trade know perfectly well that best butter cannot be bought at 1s. 2d. per lb., no matter how heavy our order is, and we also know that at the present time 1s. 3d. per lb. will not yield profit sufficient to pay shop expenses, not to mention other costs incidental to our trade. 1s. 4d. is quite low enough, and if really finest butter is sold, 1s. 4d. will not yield more than 10 per cent. profit. This is only sufficient to pay working expenses, without leaving anything for the employer as profit actual. The only conclusion we can arrive at is that a tradesman who is really selling butter at 1s.

2d. per pound, is either selling a very inferior butter, or else is retailing a margarine as butter. The latter is far the most probable. The inspector may catch him, but there are a hundred chances to one he won't. Therefore it pays to run the risk. Had we a domestic market running in the papers, with a paragraph weekly calling attention to these facts, fraud of this kind would fast diminish, for it would not pay. The public would know too much to be so easily gulled by these tricksters. Trade honesty would fast run to a premium, but at the present time I maintain we have placed a premium upon fraud by our long silence. The small tradesman who has been tempted into these by-paths in order to eke out the profit he has so foolishly thrown away upon other articles may think I am merciless and arbitrary. is mistaken. Gentlemen, we want saving from ourselves. Do away with the temptation by boldly showing our position to the consumer, and the sin will either disappear or be fast reduced to a minimum. It is only the cunning trickster who cries, "let the public know nothing, or you cut away your living." This class of trader has caused our trade to become a by-word, and its members ignoble in the eyes of magistrates. It is said that the publication of such a market would give an impetus to co-operation. How does this tally with the oft-repeated assertion that members of co-operative stores are so blind that they will pay any percentage of profit to their own store? If the latter is true, then to educate them to what is right and reasonable would not only assist us but be also a benefit to themselves. The co-operative committees have no trump card so valuable as the list of prosecutions of private traders selling adulterated articles, and they make a drastic use of this in their general meetings, and it wins, too. The mischief of it is that the innocent often get condemned with the guilty. Gentlemen, I have said quite enough, and I will now propose the following resolution: "That in the opinion of this meeting a retail price of all articles of large consumption, published weekly in a local paper, to be called a Domestic Market, would be a benefit to the trade of this district, and of good service to all honest tradesmen, the prices to be fixed by the committees of the two Associations. And that an announcement of this will appear in all the daily papers, stating why we consider it advisable to adopt such a measure." I have been asked to formulate a price list myself and place it before the committees of the two Associations, but to do this would not be wise. I only represent one class of trader, and the two committees are representatives of every class, high and low, big and little; and, further, I do not feel that I am called upon to do more than my share in helping to arrive at a sound basis of prices. I am jealous for the advancement of Manchester trade, and, so long as I am a member of these associations, I shall try my best to make them "honorable before all men."—Mr. Torkington in Manchester Grocers' Review.

A feather duster disperses but does not remove the dust from the store.

A reputation for truthfulness is indispensable to permanent and satisfying success.

Credit is often too cheap and overbuying far too common. Don't be guilty of the one, and don't abuse the other.

One thing in particular should be impressed upon clerks—the necessity of careful attention to small customers

AN AGE OF HUSTLERS.

This is pre-eminently an age of hustlers, and the sooner it is realized by the old conservative school of traders who believe that all they have to do is to know their respective occupations, open up with sufficient capital, and business come to them as it did to their predecessors, the better. A gentleman belonging to the latter class, who represented a large wholesale house in this city, was complaining a few days ago of the terrible strain of competition that his firm was subjected to by other houses covering his ground and offering greater inducements than he cared to do, as he was determined not to sell goods at less than a certain percentage of profit. He also stated that for several years past he had lost ground, and had been compelled to trespass on his capital account. He therefore thought of following the example set by a large wholesale firm on McGill street and retiring from business.

"Why," broke in the writer, "these are all hustlers who are covering your ground and taking your trade from you. Why not be satisfied with less profits and cover their ground the same as they do yours? Your smaller profits would be offset by a much larger volume of trade." But no, he could not see it in that light, and if he could not clear the same profits that he had been accustomed to, the hustlers were welcome to take the greater risks, along with the smaller gains. This trader of the old school hit the nail admirably on the head when he described the business of the present era as one of greater risks and less percentage of profits; and, depend upon it, those who refuse to do business on any other principles (we care not what branch they belong to) will get left. The tide of competition keeps flowing on, and its flood will be felt with greater force as the years roll on. Nor do we see how this can be avoided, as long as the human family continues to increase at the tremendous ratio which marks its present course. In proportion to population, there are two traders in the present day to one of twenty years ago, and if the increase continues, the proportion will soon be three to one, which means a gradually decreasing percentage of profits. To offset this, means should be devised whereby the cost of living is proportionately less.—Trade Bulletin.

GUESSING COMPETITIONS.

A tradesman recently made application to a London police magistrate for advice as to the legality of a guessing competition. The method of the proposed competition was that a sealed envelope was placed in the tradesman's window containing a number, and all customers were supplied with tickers entitling them to make a guess, the most successful being rewarded with a prize of poultry. It is hardly necessary to say that the magistrate declined to give any advice, and added significantly, that if the competition was illegal, the police no doubt would soon proceed in the matter. The applicant urged that last year a neighbor of his had such a competition on the weight of a big cheese in his window, and he was puzzled to see that such a mode of advertising was less illegal than the one he proposed. If we were called on to discriminate, we should certainly be inclined to say that there was less of chance in guessing the weight of a cheese than in guessing at an unknown number in a sealed envelope. But like the "missing word" competition, these specious methods of advertising must bring those who adopt them within the provisions of the Lottery Act, and should therefore be avoided. Last year there was a craze for placing abnormally long candles, lighted, in a window for customers to guess the number of hours they would burn, and bottles of coffee beans for guesses as to the number of each. We then stated that such were dangerously near an infringement of the law, and recommended that the practice should be discontinued. But the "missing word" sensation has no doubt again fired the mind of some who are on the look-out for striking novelties with a desire to adopt some form of guessing, and therefore we remind them of the law which prohibits all games of chance. But there is a further reason why respectable tradesmen should not countenance such specious methods; they encourage an unhealthy craving for the acquisition of money by other means than honest industry, and lead to a spirit of speculation which too often ends disastrously. We are told that the "missing word" competitions have led in several cases to the thefts of small sums by office boys and junior clerks, whilst clerks who did not steal their employers' money with which to back their fancy word, were found spending time during office hours trying to find the desired word of phrase. To such an extent did this develop that a number of merchants are stated to have found funds for endeavoring to put a stop to the system. The ethical side of the question is probably not one that will trouble some minds, but it must not be forgotten that the spirit of gambling speedily develops, and those who are caught in its vortex not infrequently involve others in their ruin. We are glad, therefore, that the law has been brought to bear upon guessing competitions, and the sooner they are banished from our midst the better it will be for the community.—Grocers' Chronicle.

SUGAR PRODUCTION IN CUBA.

An official report (Spain) has considerable information in regard to sugar production in Cuba. Among other things it says: When the Cuban insurrection broke out in the year 1868, there were, between that place and Guantanamo, 129 sugar estates; now the number within the same district is seventeen. Nevertheless, the actual quantity of sugar produced in the two districts does not differ greatly from that of 24 years ago, the extra yield of each property compensating for the smaller number. Greater improvements have been made on the larger properties, which are now supplied with double mills, triple effects, vacuum pans, filter presses and furnaces for burning the green bagasse. At Manzanillo the production has increased considerably. In 1889 that district produced 17,830 tons; in 1890, 22,103 tons, and in 1891, 23,970 tons. The estates there have a large saving in facilities for shipment, being close to the coast, and each one has its own wharf. The new budget for the Island of Cuba has, together with the increased import duties, caused considerable alarm among the sugar planters, and unless changes are made consequences may become very serious, not only to the individual planter, but to the island in general. Again, a new industrial tax, in addition to that already existing on the agricultural part, has been imposed, say of twopence per hundred pounds of centrifugal sugar manufactured, and half the said amount on molasses and other qualities of sugar. There is also a new tax on the manufacture of rum, and still another impost of £53 per annum on each cane-crushing mill on an estate.

Walter Baker & Co., the cocoa and chocolate manufacturers, have accepted the architects plans for their World's Fair display. It will be in the form of a pavilion, and of itself will make a creditable display.

CUPS OF COFFEE.

"If married folks only would refrain from conversation in the morning until they had their cup of coffee there would be fewer domestic disagreements," once said a delightful old lady with a varied experience at Washington and some foreign capitals. There is a great deal of truth in the odd remark, but who knows about coffee—the extent of its consumption, where it comes from and where it all goes?

Brazil is the largest coffee producer in the world, and the great bulk comes from her two provinces of Rio Janeiro and Santos, the latter furnishing the greater part of it and the finer coffee. Some quantity comes from the provinces of Bahia and Ceara, both a part of Brazil. Rio Janeiro and Santos, export every year from 5,750,000 to 7,000,000 bags of 130 pounds each. Rio was formerly the largest exporter, but Santos is rapidly outstripping her.

Santos coffee is higher grade, has a finer flavor, and as a rule commands more money than other South American coffees. All other coffees are called "mild" as contradistinguished from Brazilian.

The largest producers of coffee are Brazil, Venezuela, Guatemala, Costa Rica, United States of Colombia, Mexico (producing a high grade which is very popular, and the output is rapidly increasing), West Indies, Hayti and San Domingo. Cuba was a large grower of coffee, but the sugar interests have overshadowed it, and she now imports from this country. Little coffee is produced in Africa. Liberia and Zanzibar grow a small quantity. Manila is not a factor in the coffee trade of America. Small quantities come here, but most of the product goes to Europe.

Ceylon has been the largest single producer of coffee in the world, but owing to the exhaustion of the soil primarily and later to a leaf disease, it has rapidly fallen into the background.

Java, or East India coffee, is an important element in the coffee trade, is very popular and largely used. Mocha coffee is all shipped from Aden to London and Paris and transhipped here. This is supposed to be the coffee par excellence. It is an acid, light bodied coffee, and does not command as high a price as some Javas, or some of the finer grades of Central American coffee. The finest coffee in the world comes from the Plantation Ceylon, situated in the mountains in the interior of the island. Private growth Javas are very choice, and are probably equal to the best Ceylon. Mocha seed coffee from Santos is esteemed very highly, and large quantities of it are used for Mocha.

Small beans are sifted from Santos and mild coffees, and these are retailed as Mocha. There is no way that the consumer can distinguish genuine Mocha except by flavor. If coffee is clean it is apt to be good, and if the berries are regular in shape and uniform in size it is a good sign.

The United States are the largest consumers in coffee in the world, with Germany second and France third. Great Britain consumes a small quantity of coffee and is constantly decreasing the amount at a rapid rate. Tea is replacing coffee in the British Isles very fast. The use of tea in this country is falling off.

Brazil furnishes most of our coffee, and we prefer the strong grades. Europe chooses the mild kind. The finest grades are used by England, while France drinks 40 per cent of chicory in her coffee.

Holland is the great coffee mart of the world and is the greatest manipulator. They have more "tricks of the trade" over there than the rest of the world put together. New York, Hamburg, Havre and London are great speculative markets. Many millions of bags of coffee are bought and sold every year on options. Of course, the amount thus dealt in is greatly in excess of the actual amount in existence. The poorer the people the poorer the grades of coffee used.

Adulterations of coffee are not common in America except in the lowest grades, and this is done after it is roasted and ground, when beans and other foreign substances are added. It may be noted that speculation affects the retail price very little.—Ex.

A WORD TO CLERKS.

No country offers so many and varied opportunities to ambition as does ours, and the spirit of restlessness is probably nowhere so general especially among young men.

The visions of what might be breeds discontent with what is. The grocer's clerk dreams of proprietorship; of the time when he shall own a store, work for himself, and take the profits. He reasons that because he can sell goods and understands the general duties of the store, he would have just as good a chance to establish a trade and do a successful business as his employer has. But he is apt to forget—if he ever thought of it—that the avenues of trade are strewn with wrecks of just such adventurous craft as he is hoping to embark in.

It does not follow that because you are a good clerk, capable of performing all the duties of your position satisfactorily, that you would therefore make a successful merchant. There are almost numberless qualifications necessary to wisely and successfully conducting a mercantile business that are not called into activity in your position as clerk. This is not saying that you do not possess some or all of these qualifications, but, in your capacity as clerk, you have not proven that you have them and you are taking large risks by branching out for yourself with the chances ten to one against you.

Another consideration more weighty than any other to be considered is contained in the fact that this is an era of consolidation. Everything tends to combined enterprise as against individual effort. When, therefore, you attempt to multiply units by separating them from an established business you are defying the very force that is gaining strength every day—the law of co-operation.

You may ask: "Must young men renounce ambition and be content to plod along as clerks without knowing what possibilities they are capable of?"

If by that is meant that you want simply to work hard and devote all your time and energies to money-getting, any moralizing on that line don't amount to much, for when you pass off the scene of action neither you nor the world will be any better than had you remained a clerk.

If you really want to bring out the best that is in you, perfect yourself as a clerk. Learn to do your work better and in less time. Lend your influence to securing better conditions. You want time for reading and self-improvement outside the store, therefore agitate for shorter hours. Make up your mind that you will not spend all your time that you are not eating or sleeping in the store. Make yourself familiar with all the details of the business. Study your trade papers, watch the markets, make yourself increasingly valuable to your employer, and you will be in a position to sell your services for all that they are possibly worth. You will be able to secure a position of trust and responsibility with some large business concern that will give full play to your business instincts without the anxiety of running a store for yourself and you will have more time for the better things of life.—Commercial Enquirer.

THE GROCERS' COMPANY.

The history of this relic of the old English Trade Guild is worth reading. It is given as follows in The Newbury House Magazine:

The Grocers' Company is the second in order of precedence among the City Guilds, and was an off-shoot in very early times of the Fraternity of Pepperers. The latter guild is first met with in the year 1180, when it appears on the Pipe Rolls among eighteen "adulterine" guilds, or guilds which have established themselves without the Royal license. The Pepperers paid a fine of 16 marks for their transgression.

In 1231, Andrew Bockerel, who was of Italian descent, and a prominent member of the Pepperers, became Mayor of London, having, in 1221, held the important charge of farming the King's exchange. Bockerel continued in office as Mayor for seven successive years, and obtained commercial privileges for foreign merchants, devoting the tax levied from them to conveying sweet water into London from Tyburn. In the space of 114 years from this date, no less than nine Pepperers filled the office of Mayor during 21 years. It has already been remarked that citizens pursuing the same trade were accustomed in these early times to occupy the same locality, and the Pepperers were settled around St. Antholin's church, at the juncture of Soper Lane, (now Queen street), with Watling street and Budge Row in St. Thomas Apostle.

It appears from the earliest records that the Pepperers were officially connected with the duty of weighing in the city. Early in the fourteenth century they began to be called Grossarii, or those who weigh by the avoirdupois weight, of "Pesso Grosso," of the Venetians. They soon afterwards formed themselves into a fraternity, "the better to have, maintain, and increase, love and unity among themselves." This "fraternity of brethren Peppers, of Soper's Lane," was founded on the 9th of May, 1345, "to the honor of God, the Virgin Mary, St. Anthony, and all Saints." On the 12th of June following 20 of the members dined together at the town mansion of the Abbot of Bury St. Edmunds. Soon afterwards they left the monastery of St. Anthony in Thread-needle street, to attach themselves to the church of St. Antholin in Soper's Lane, where the Pepperers had originally settled. The early history of the fraternity is preserved in an ancient record known as the Black Book, which, fortunately, still remains in the possession of the Grocers' Company.

In 1373 the Company of Grocers had taken the place of the Fraternity of St. Anthony, and rapidly became a great power in the city, through the great number of aldermen (no less than 17) whom it numbered in its ranks. They were led by Sir Nicholas Brembre, four times Mayor, who was beheaded in 1387. His overbearing conduct occasioned a complaint to Parliament from the Mercers' Company, and an Act of Common Council was subsequently passed prohibiting any company from having more than six aldermen among its members.

Ravenhill, the earliest historian of the company, defines the word grocer as distinguishing merchants in opposition to inferior traders, "for that they usually sold in gross quantities by great weights." He also states that in old books the word signifies "merchants who in their merchandising dealt for the whole of any kind."

Lydgate speaks of the grocers as having become retail spice dealers in the reign of Henry VI., and that they kept their standings in Chepe. In 1428 the company obtained from Henry VI. their first charter, under which they became a body corporate. In 1450 the grocers obtained the important privilege of sharing the office of garbeller with the city. The duties of this official was to enter any shop or warehouse, to view and search drugs, etc., and to sift and cleanse them, with the object of preventing adulteration.

The following quaint epitaph of Simon Street, grocer, who died in 1459, and was buried in St. Antholin's Church, is preserved in Stow's "Survey of London":

Such as I am such shall you be:
Grocer of London some time was I,
The King's weigher more than yeres twenty;
Simon Street called in my place,
And good fellowship faine would trace;
Therefore in heaven everlasting life
Jesu send me and Agnes my wife
Kerlie Merlie, my words were tho,
And Deo Gratias I coupled thereto,
I passed to God in the yere of grace
One thousand four hundred it was, &c.

A new charter was granted to the company by James I. in 1607, and an entry in the company's journals shows that they gave eight guineas to Joyce Knight, "paynter, stayner for lymning, guildinge, and flourishing the Company's charter with the King's and Prince's armes, with divers of the assistants, their armes, besides an allowance of eight shillings for two skins of vellum." The privileges of the Company were confirmed, and other powers conferred upon them, by later sovereigns from Charles I. to George I.

In all the troubles which befel the Livery Companies, more especially in the century and a half ending with the Revolution of 1688, the Grocers had their full share. The great fire also proved most calamitous to them; but the Company was kept together and restored upon the old lines by the exertions and liberality of its leading members, so as "to become, as they once were," to use the words of the solemn minute of the court of 1887, "a nursery of charities and a seminary of good citizens." Among the most noteworthy benefactors who came forward to save the Company from dissolution on this occasion were Sir John Cutler, who rebuilt the parlor and dining-room at his own charge, and Sir John Moore, who gave £500 as a contribution towards rebuilding the hall, and, to satisfy the pressing claims of various parishes for their charities and arrears, the members of the court, on various occasions, contributed the necessary amounts out of their own pockets. In 1689, King William III. honored the Company by taking upon himself the office of master for the year, making them also a grant, which ceased at his death, of three fat bucks out of Enfield Chase. In the charter granted to them in the following year they are described as carrying on the mysteries or arts of grocers, confectioners, druggists, tobacconists, tobacco-cutters, and sugar bakers, or refiners of sugar.

The site of Grocers' Hall possesses considerable interest. Part of it was occupied by a synagogue of the Jews before their expulsion from England in 1291. After this event the site came into the possession of a body of begging friars called the Brethren of the Sack. They were, in turn, dispossessed during the reign of Henry III. by Lord Fitzwalter, who resided at Baynard's Castle, but had a family mansion in Coney Hope-lane, or Grocers' alley, adjoining the Friars' chapel. In 1411 the Grocers' Company purchased the chapel from a descendant of Lord Fitzwalter, and in the reign of Henry VI., the Company also purchased the family mansion, and used the entire site for the erection of a sumptuous hall. The house was subsequently inhabited by various aldermen, who kept their mayoralties there. It afterwards became the Windmill Inn in the Old Jewry, and is described by Ben Johnson as the favorite resort of the roysterers and master-spirits of the day.

The Company began to build in 1427, and their hall was finished in the following year, when they dined together in "parloire," at an expense of £5 6s. 8d. Five years later they bought the remainder of the Fitzwalter property, and with it enlarged their garden. This garden appears to have been the Company's pride, and contained alleys, hedgerows and a bowling-alley, with an ancient tower of brick and stone at the north-west corner. The bowling was confined as much as possible, to the brethren of the Company, and their "ancient neighbors dellying in the Powlterrie." The Grocers followed the practice of other companies in letting out their hall for public and private festivities. On 9th February, 1564, the use of the common hall, parlor and kitchen were granted to "Mr. Mallorie, sonne to the Lord Mayor and others," "to make a supper to divers gentlemen of Gray's Inne for the great amitie between them and the Middle Temple gentlemen." Abuses appear to have arisen in this system of letting, for in 1610 it was ordered "that, for the future, the Company's hall shall not be made use of by strangers for burials, county feasts, and the like, without leave of the wardens." And, in 1678, the Company's officers, making complaint that they were excluded on the hall being let to strangers "for dinners, funerals, county feasts or weddings," it was forbidden to be let unless they were employed. In 1641, the "Grand Committee of Safety" removed its sittings from Guildhall to Grocers' hall, and continued there at intervals for several years afterwards. In 1648 the Company narrowly escaped the quartering of Parliamentary troops in their hall under Fairfax. Next year a grand entertainment was made by the Company at their hall to Cromwell and Fairfax, when the latter was presented by the Company with a basin and ewer of gold, and Cromwell with £300 worth of plate and 200 pieces of gold. The grocers afterwards entertained Cromwell, as Lord Protector, in a still grander style, and finally at the Restoration, General Monk, when they expended £215 on the feast, and enrolled him a brother of the Company.

The great fire destroyed the roof and wood-work of Grocers' Hall, but left the walls standing. In recognition of Sir John Cutler's liberal contributions to its restoration, the court ordered "that his statue and picture should be placed in the hall as memorials of the Company's esteem and gratitude." The first meeting and festival held in the Hall after the fire were on Lord Mayor's Day, 1669. In 1691 the use of the hall was granted as a chapel to the parishioners of St. Mildred till their own church could be rebuilt. The court minutes of this period take note of "the unseemliness and disturbance of taking tobacco and having drink and pipes in the court room during court sittings," and it was consequently resolved that a fine of £5 should be imposed upon every member guilty of this offence; and if any person have "a desire to refresh himself with a pipe of tobacco or cup of drink, at a convenient time or interval of serious business," he was "to wothdraw into some retiring room more suitable and fit for the purpose."

In the latter part of the seventeenth century Grocers' Hall was regularly let to the Lord Mayor for use as a Mansion House. Sir John Moore (Lord Mayor in 1681) was the first who kept his mayoralty in the new hall, and he paid the Company a net rent of £200 for it. About 1694 the tenancy was transferred to the newly-established Bank of England, who obtained a lease of the hall, yard, and offices for eleven years, for a fine of £5,000, and a loan of a similar amount without interest, the bank paying all rates and taxes, and executing all repairs. Subsequently, the £5,000 mortgage was merged into a fine, and the financial relief thus obtained formed a turning-point in the history of the Company. The bank directors held their courts here until the building of the bank in 1734. In the following year the Company's circumstances having much improved, the hall was forbidden to be let except for the mayoralty of an alderman who was a member of the Company. In 1802 Grocers' Hall was rebuilt, but so imperfectly that in 1827 a thorough repair was found necessary. The old buildings have recently given place to a handsome hall and offices, now nearly completed. The Princes street frontage provides a great architectural improvement to that important thoroughfare. Grocers' garden remained unchanged till the alterations of 1802, by which it was much reduced in size. By the formation of Princes street in that year the garden was nearly severed in half, but the Company made an excellent bargain, receiving for the slice of ground surrendered to the Bank of England more than £20,000, the land having cost them, in 1433, but £31 17s. 8d.

A brief notice must now be given of the important charities administered by the Grocers' Company. The Company has always regarded the London Hospital as having peculiar claims upon its support and assistance, owing to its situation in the midst of the poor population of the East of London. Their first gift to the Hospital seems to have been in 1796; in 1868 and subsequent years they contributed £500 annually. In 1873 they gave the substantial sum of £20,000 towards the erection of a new wing to be called the "Grocers' Wing," and on its completion in 1876, a further sum of £5,000 was contributed towards its furnishing when the wing was opened by Her Majesty the Queen.

In 1872, the Company established a middle class school for boys at Hackney Downs, under a scheme approved by the Charity Commissioners, by the provisions of which the income of certain obsolete charities was applied to this purpose. The income not proving sufficient for the purpose, the balance, averaging about £1,000 a year, has been made up by the Company, who also made a grant of £6,000 to the school at its establishment. The Company founded, in 1861, six scholarships for pupils of the City of London School, which have since been transferred to their middle-class school at Hackney Downs. They also purchased the right in perpetuity of presenting six boys to Christ's Hospital, and three children of deceased liverymen or freemen to the London Orphan Asylum.

They have also founded six scholarships for the sons of freemen at Oundle School. This school was founded and endowed, together with almshouses, in 1556, under the will of Alderman William Laxton, who placed the management of the charity in the hands of the Grocers' Company. There is an upper or classical school, for which a new building has been erected capable of holding four hundred boys. A modern school is also provided at Oundle for the sons of farmers; sumptuous provision has been made by the Company for cricket and recreation grounds, boarding-houses, hall, library, museum, laboratory, etc. The Company are also trustees of two other endowed schools—the free school in Witney in Oxfordshire, founded by Henry Box, citizen and grocer, and the free school at Colwall, Herefordshire, founded by Humphrey Wallwin. They have the gift of eight exhibitions of £50 each, tenable for four years, four of them at the University of Oxford, and four at Cambridge. These were established by endowments left by Emma Backhouse and Mary Robinson in 1670. The Company has also founded two exhibitions of £25 each, for unattached students at Oxford, tenable for four years.

The Grocers' Company consists of a Prime Warden, three other Wardens, fifty-two assistants, and a large body of liverymen and freemen. The arms of the Company are: Argent a chevron, gules, between six cloves in chief and three in base, sable; a crest, a helmet and torse, a loaded camel trippant proper, bridled of the second; supporters, two griffins per fess gules and or; motto, "God grant grace."

More than one hundred and twenty Lord Mayors have belonged to this Company, and the roll of its honorary freemen includes numerous statesmen and other men of eminence in modern times. The mention of a few names will be sufficient: William Pitt, George Canning, Sir Robert Peel, the Prince of Wales, the Duke of Edinburgh, the Duke of Connaught, The Duke of Cambridge, Sir Leopold McClinton, Lord Napier of Magdala, Sir James Paget and the late Earl of Baconsfield.

BANK LOSSES AND MERCANTILE AGENCIES.

The following was included in a paper presented to the recent meeting of western bankers: "It is apparent that losses would be largely averted if the banker could be thoroughly and accurately informed as to the character and responsibility of his borrowers. Any plan, therefore, that will bring him into possession of this information should be promptly adopted and persistently pursued. The information now furnished by the various commercial agencies is of great assistance in ascertaining the responsibility of borrowers. Although their reports are not to be implicitly relied upon, being often incomplete and occasionally misleading, yet no prudent banker can afford to dispense with their services, especially where his field of operations is so extensive as to preclude the possibility of his having personal acquaintance with every customer, and accurate knowledge of their affairs. It goes without saying that access to these sources of information should be at the command of every bank officer whose sphere of operations is not purely local and confined to the narrowest field. In addition to this he should employ every proper means to ascertain and systematically record, in such manner as to be readily accessible, all facts which affect favorably or unfavorably the standing of those who are asking, or likely to ask, favors at his hands. In the end, however, the customer himself must be depended upon to make a full and complete exhibit of everything affecting his present responsibility and future success. It is unwise to accept the account of any man whose truthfulness is not fully established, and prudence dictates that no person should be accepted as a borrower who is not willing to make in confidence to his banker a complete exhibit of his resources and liabilities. The age of mystery as related to business affairs is happily passing away. The time was when business men considered it akin to an insult to be called upon, when asking credit, for a statement of their affairs, and when the publication of a full report of the condition of a bank would have been considered unwise, if not absolutely dangerous. Fortunately wiser and sounder views now prevail, and no right minded man or well-managed institution now hesitates, when asking favors, to place the prospective creditor in full possession of the facts upon which credits can be intelligently extended. Modern methods make it necessary that all the barriers which a false pride has served to erect between a banker and his customer shall be completely removed, and that perfect frankness shall characterize their intercourse. This course is clearly for the interest of the borrower as well as the lender, for nothing places a customer on a better footing with his banker than a willingness to tell him the whole truth at all times and under all circumstances.

HOW IT IS DONE.

A great many of the dormant retail grocers are constantly finding fault with their up-to-the-times confreres. The cause for complaint is that they (the live grocers) are selling too cheap. "Why," some of them will say, "I could not sell at that price, simply because I paid more by the case than he is retailing them by the single package." And their statement is true in every particular. But whose fault is it? The live grocer keeps posted by reading trade papers and watching the movement of the market, while the other would rather prefer to play pedro or else do most anything except what relates to and would benefit his business, and as for reading trade papers, that is time wasted; the reading is too dry; there is not the pith to it that is contained in an account of a prize fight; and so on. But when it comes to finding fault, then he can waste plenty of time. To approach one of these men with an application to subscribe for a trade paper produces about the same result as does the request of a slow paying customer who has already a large score recorded against his name, for the loan of fifty dollars to buy Christmas toys for the children.

However, it is the same with trade papers as it is with everything else, one must be brought up to the use of them in order to be able to grasp the benefit to be derived from their perusal. With a few lessons, such as some of the retail grocers will receive this summer, we think that many of them will become apt scholars and profit by their losses, not alone in having to pay more for their goods, but also on account of losing trade by not being able to cope with the up-to-the-times grocers. If less time were devoted to fault-finding and more to ascertaining in which way they could be up to those in the same trade and sell at the same price and make a profit, it would be greatly to the interest of the dormant grocer, who expects that all matters in the trade should be shaped to a mould of his own making.—Retail Grocers' Journal, San Francisco.

THE CREDIT HYDRA.

Credit is the ball and chain around the leg of the merchant, the incubus of trade which there is no throwing off and which, in many cases, proves so heavy a load that it drags down the bearer thereof to commercial annihilation, says the Baltimore Commercial Advertiser. More has been written on the evils of credit than upon any other subject connected with mercantile affairs, and yet to-day the question how to eliminate its risks from the daily business transactions of wholesale merchant and retail trader alike is, as far from satisfactory settlement as ever. There is one thing which may be regarded as settled at all events. So long as business is done, just so long will the merchant, whether wholesale or retail, be obliged to accept a future settlement, of more or less definiteness as to date, for a present transaction. Whether the volume of this trade be much or little, that it will involve losses, may be taken for granted, for the most astute business man, even with the safeguards of modern business practice at his command, has not succeeded in protecting himself from the unforeseen.

Most men, we believe, who enter into business, whether upon a large or small scale, do so with the honest purpose to pay their debts. When a dealer has sufficient capital to make a fair start by paying cash for his stock, provided he is wide-awake and energetic, and has started in a locality where an enterprise of the kind in which he has embarked is needed, the chances are that he will ask very few favors from the jobber. This class of dealer is usually too anxious to make cash settlements and save every possible cent in the way of discounts. It is also the class whose trade the wholesale merchants are anxious to get. But as all men who depend upon their own exertions for a livelihood are not so favorably situated as to be able to make a beginning in this way, they are compelled in most cases to depend upon the forbearance and generosity of the wholesale dealer who, if favorably disposed on account of former knowledge of his customers, as the result of an investigation of his business character and record, will secure the required stock upon terms within the reach of the customer. A beginning is thus made which in after years may broaden out and bear fruit in a long business intercourse mutually profitable and advantageous to both, or else an experience in which misplaced confidence, worry and financial loss may result to the accommodating merchant, illustrating anew the risks of credit.

POOR BOYS.

Great men are a nation's choicest treasure. There are many stately and exclusive doors open only to those who bear titles and degrees, but to the hearts and homes of all true Americans, those who have risen by their own exertions from poverty and obscurity to wealth and eminence, find a welcome. It has been said, "Biography is the most universally pleasant and profitable of all reading." If we would understand what heroism is, we must study the lives of heroic men and women. A living patriot will teach us more of patriotism than a thousand books.

Let us recall the lives of some of the men in active life who were once poor boys; whose fathers' names are unknown in public; who by years of persistent endeavor attained wished for and deserved success. Washington, Franklin, Grant, Garfield, are men belonging to this class. They have made the world richer and better, and have passed away leaving others to make for themselves similar positions. We have poets, inventors, statesmen, divines who have become popular benefactors, not for an age only, but for all time.

Among inventors such as Morse, Whitney and Robert Fulton, Thomas A. Edison rises pre-eminent in his superior practical inventive power. Born at Milan, Ohio, young Edison began life poor. Though of humble parentage, yet he has surpassed the profoundest thinkers of our times. To him we are indebted for the electric light, the only artificial light whose brilliancy approaches that of the sun. Many of our inventors have died in poverty, receiving no pecuniary benefit for their genius, but Edison received $100,000 for the discovery of the carbon telephone.

Our Presidents have been men whose early struggles against adverse circumstances strengthened and prepared them for their important positions. Benjamin Harrison, when a young man with his family at Indianapolis, living in three plain rooms, not ashamed of his poverty or the self-evident fact that clients would be received cordially at all hours, had no visions of living in the executive mansion; Mrs. Harrison, performing the monotonous duties of a housewife, could not see in the future the position she would hold in the American mind and heart. They began life in poverty, which is but the beginning of wealth and power, having the boundless possibilities of the future always before it.

In all these lives there have come patience by being poor, courage by coming in contact with opposition, knowledge of character they would not have gained had they been carefully shielded by the surroundings which money gives to the sons of the rich.—Merchant Sentinel.

The trader who pays his way must sell at a profit, and cannot afford to cut below others in the same line.

The Hon. N. Clarke Wallace takes the right way to fit himself for the duties of the office of Comptroller of Customs to which he has been appointed. He began by announcing his desire to become acquainted with the views of the mercantile class in relation to customs duties, appraisements, etc. When in Toronto last week, many of the leading importers, at his own request, waited on him and brought before him matters that they deemed anomalous or deserving of consideration with a view to reform. The questions discussed affected only the dry goods trade, and representatives of that trade alone were present at the meeting. The following day he went to Hamilton to meet the business men of that city and to talk over customs matters with them. No subject of direct moment to grocers or general merchants was brought up, but some matters important to other trades were broached, and closer relations between the business men of Hamilton and the customs department were established. It is to be hoped that this departure of the head of the customs department will be regularly followed up.

If he makes a practice of seeking the sense of the business community upon all matters vital to the importing trade, he will be pretty sure to prove a satisfactory Comptroller of Customs. Mr. Wallace's example is worth imitating by the chief of the Department of Trade and Commerce, of which the Customs is a sub-department. Commerce is probably better equipped with organs of opinion than any other interest that is under the administration of a department of state. Its special press, its Boards of Trade, and its business men's associations are all media through which its views can be ascertained and its wishes consulted. There is no need therefore for the Minister of Trade and Commerce, or either of his under-secretaries at the heads of the Customs and Excise Departments, to look to his office staff for guidance. Civil servants are notoriously attached to old routine, and the Minister who shapes his course according to their counsels is more likely to place the interests of his department under an elaborate office system than to effect any reforms for the benefit of the citizens concerned. That is red tapeism, and we are glad to hear Mr. Wallace say at the outset that he will not add a yard of the red tape that already fetters business despatch in the Customs Department. In the matter of diverse appraisements, the encouragement of informing by the allowance of a moiety of the goods confiscated, the duties on samples, etc., there is room for the introduction of salutary reform. X and Y may buy of the same line of goods from the same foreign manufacturer, but because X lives at Toronto and Y lives at Belleville, Y's goods may cost him more, owing to the fact that the appraiser at his port classifies them differently from the appraiser at Toronto, and exacts a higher duty. This difference between local appraisers is sometimes enough to settle which of two merchants shall command the trade of an intermediate district. Also, the fact that informers were rewarded with a portion of confiscated goods often led greedy but mistaken spies to cause a lot of trouble by false reports. These things need attention. Sir John Thompson announced at the meeting he addressed in Toronto last week, that his Government proposed to make some changes in the tariff during the coming session of Parliament. If the changes are made in the light of information obtained by Mr. Wallace's method, they are not likely to be followed by any great incursions of commercial deputations to Ottawa praying for modifications.

The annual report for 1892 of the American Sugar Refineries' Co., (otherwise the Sugar Trust), will not have a very depressing effect upon that company's standing in the stock market. Owing to a change which makes the company's year end with the 30th November instead of the 31st December, the report covers only the first 11 months of 1892. It shows that the net earnings for that time were $8,615,837.52. From this semi-annual dividend of 4 per cent. on the common stock and 3 1-2 per cent. on the preferred stock were paid last July, and a quarterly dividend of 2 1-2 per cent. on the common stock was paid last October. Another dividend of $2,206,380 was paid on the 3rd January, which leaves $2,732,152.52 of a surplus. A surplus of $1,637,822.70 was carried over from 1891, and this, added to the net residuum from 1892, enables the company to add to its coffers $4,369,980.22. President Havemeyer said: "It is believed that but for the scale upon which the business has been done it would be impossible to furnish refined sugar at the price which has prevailed. There has been this other advantage: By reason of the large stock of raw sugar which it is necessary to carry, the business has been made stable and put beyond fluctuations due to speculations and other temporary effects. An illustration was furnished by the cholera alarm which prevailed during the latter part of the summer. A serious check of importation was threatened. Under ordinary circumstances this was likely to have resulted in a large advance in the price of raw and a corresponding advance in the price of refined. The judicious purchase of large quantities of raw sugar contributed materially to the good showing of the year."

In the last issue of the American Grocer Editor Barrett gives the statistics of the canned goods pack of 1892. As our contemporary is in a position to obtain accurate information upon this subject—a subject which it has made its own—having for several years published annual statements as to the extent of the pack in the United States, its figures have come to be regarded as authoritative. The part of its report that will be scanned with most interest by Canadian canners is that relating to the tomato pack. The output of canned tomatoes in this country has been large, prices are unprecedentedly low, and canners are likely to realize but little profit on their product or to carry a surplus into the next crop year, if no new outlet is discovered. All this might be said with equal truth about other canned vegetables, but it is not these conditions that lead our canners to take an interest in the tomato pack across the border. The fact that gives them special interest in that vegetable is the higher price at which it sells in the United States. They naturally wish to see it advance to a point at which exportation to the United States from this country will be profitable. The tariff of the United States will, so far as that country is concerned, continue to confine our canners to this market, if the price does not go higher, but if it goes much further, then our neighbors across the border will be favored with a part of our tomato pack. The American Grocer shows that the United States tomato pack for the year 1892 was 3,223,165 cases, and that of Canada was 143,627. The total pack was therefore 3,366,792 cases. Contrary to the general belief that the United States pack was a short one, Mr. Barrett's figures show that it was the largest but one on record, that of 1891 alone exceeding it, and exceeding it by only a few hundred cases. Moreover, the pack for both countries was not far above the average for the last six years, which is shown to be 3,179,214 cases. The Canadian, as our readers are aware, is not much short of twice that of 1891, that year's output being 83,000 cases, as against 143,627 cases for 1892. The American Grocer's explanation of the strong position of the United States market, with a stock so nearly equal in volume to the largest ever turned out, is that the consumptive demand has expanded very greatly. This is an influence that will ameliorate the condition of our market, if we mistake not, though it may not bring prices out of the Slough of Despond into which they have fallen. There can be no gainsaying the fact that canned vegetables have passed into the sphere of staple foods. Their cheapness and edibility are enlarging the domestic market every year, and it is possible that our people may make room this year for the greater part of the pack on the market. As cheapness is the main factor to be relied upon for this result, its possibility is but faintly encouraging to our packers, who have little to choose between selling without a sufficient profit and carrying over part of their product. To sell in the United States markets our canners would probably have to shade 70c. With the 45 per cent. duty on that, the price would be $1.01 1-2. Freight would bring this above $1.05, the price now quoted for 3-pound tomatoes in the New York market. But the United States market wants quality as well as, or more than, quantity, and it is unlikely our canners could supply choice quality on the low basis necessary for that market. It is also a question if it is not preferable to rely on our own demand for the absorption of all first-class goods, as in that kind our trade report the most business.

The high prices of pork, eggs and poultry are likely to brighten up the fresh fish market. The stocks of frozen salmon trout and white fish are now in a very good position to stand a run on the demand, if they should be favored with one. While they are ample for the requirements at present indicated, it is not to be forgotten that Lent begins in a month and that there will be no relaxation of the rules of the church regulating its observance by abstinence from meat. The weather is cold, and if it remains so, stock can be carried and handled without deterioration. Added to these circumstances in the seller's favor are the chances for a transfer of the demand from pork, poultry and eggs, upon which at present the prices are very high. In cured fish the market is still more decidedly in favor of the seller, particularly in Labrador herring, in which the catch has been short. Grocers and general merchants should cultivate a fish trade. This year's fish sales ought to be a good source of revenue, and it comes in at a time when it is most acceptable. The butcher's loss if the fish seller's gain, and the grocer should aim to be the fish seller.

The intensely cold weather of the last fortnight has been not only uncomfortable, but to some traders it has been unprofitable as well. Unless there is a constant supply of heat circulating through shops there is danger from loss through the freezing of certain descriptions of goods, notably apples and some liquid goods. The latter may be none the worse of the freezing if they can be retained in their packages, but these, being usually glass, are liable to burst and allow their contents to escape. In cities most grocers find it necessary to attend to their stoves or furnaces through the night, both on account of the goods and the danger of the water pipes freezing. In some cases the latter have been guarded against by the keeping open of the taps. This, however, is a source of waste, and, in the present predicament of the water-works department in this city, such waste cannot be afforded. There have been some fines imposed upon Toronto grocers for wasting the water in this way. The retail trader will find it a good thing to keep his store cosy these cold days. Nothing is more grateful to the half-frozen customer than a genial fire in the shop of her grocer when she calls on him. In many instances customers run in on the way past, not to buy, but to break the hardship of a longer journey. They turn their trading connection to account in this way, and it pays to receive them warmly. Even if a customer is warm, the influence of a comfortable shop upon the salesman impresses her favorably. It takes just a little coal to make all the difference between a shivering, cowering, silent attendant and a bright, pleasant one. Which draws the more trade will soon be apparent in the drift of the custom.

TEA TESTING.

To be first-class at anything a man must abstain. A man to be a first-class tea-taster denies himself many things. He must only eat certain kinds of food and drink certain drinks; he must eat or drink nothing which will have a tendency to blunt his taste. A man cannot be a habitual smoker nor a habitual drinker, nor given to eating anything which is in any way flavored with essences. If he does he will be unable to detect the finest points in the character of certain teas. It is amusing to see some young travellers with their samples of teas under their arm starting out to try and sell them, puffing away with all their might at a cigar. Perhaps they throw the cigar away before they enter the store, but some of them take the butt end of it in with them. Now they have to compare samples. Their hands smell strong of tobacco, but they open up their samples, draw their hands through it several times, and the deed is done. "Look at that," they say, "for a fine tea," and the purchaser looks at it, puts his nose to it, perhaps he liquors it; but the tea is spoiled. Instead of the flavor of tea, it is a mixture of the flavor of tea and tobacco. If the buyer is a smoker himself he will not notice it. If he is not a smoker he will detect something wrong very quickly, and another man will come in with perhaps an inferior tea and make the sale. A man also who is in the habit of tasting intoxicating liquors of any kind is incapable of being a good judge of teas. There are many smoking tea-tasters who sell lots of tea, but that is sometimes because the men who buy from them have confidence in them, and never think to try their teas against others, and they run an account with the house. There are plenty of men in the city even yet who do not liquor their tea, but take its quality for granted; whereas, if they did liquor it they would find how far they were out. The tea taster who smokes before tasting his teas is not to be depended upon, and the man who wishes to excel and does excel as a tea taster is the one who leaves it alone. There are some men who have had such good training in this line that it takes a lot of drinking and smoking to blunt their keen sensibility entirely, but it gets there just the same.

THE COOK TAMPERS WITH THE SUGAR.

"Hello, Corrie! I wrote down to your house the other day." "Oh, did you; what for?" "To tell them that their icing sugar was not pure." "And what did they say?" "They said that it was absolutely pure, and I should be careful about making such statements as that." "Well, what then?" "I sent some over to H. and told him to analyze it. He did, and said it was absolutely pure.

Then I tasted it myself, and it seemed all right." "Oh, well, what made you think it was not pure in the first place?" "You see I used to sell it to the confectioners and they used to make icing for cakes, and they had some cakes sent back because the icing was bad. When I tasted the icing it seemed funny. I put a piece of it in some water and it began to fizz. I thought that funny for icing sugar. I tasted it again, and it tasted like carbonate of soda, which it turned out to be. The cook said she thought it would improve it, so mixed it, hence the mistake. Perhaps someone else was after their custom; I don't know. Sometimes they do funny tricks when it pays them better to deal one place than another."

A STRONG TEA MARKET.

The tea market is a decidedly interesting one at present, and it looks very much now as though holders who held off in the fall in the expectation of better terms were to be doomed to disappointment. In fact, the indications are all the other way, and it would seem from the large wholesale turnovers of the staple that have occurred at Montreal during the last three or four weeks, that buyers are at last convinced of the fact and want to provide themselves against future wants. This is the only way to account for the rush which led to sales aggregating from 5,000 to 6,000 packages, principally Japans, at Montreal, and the fact, coupled with the strong news from primary markets, has induced an appreciation in prices all round, so that it is doubtful if an order could be placed now except at an advance from 1c. to 2c. on the basis possible a fortnight or three weeks ago.

Cable news recently tends to confirm the strong position. For instance, recent advices from Japan state that the settlements for the season show a decrease of 25,000 piculs, or 3,000,000 pounds, and the fact has led to considerable speculation on the New York market, a lot of teas which had been held in Montreal on New York account being ordered to that centre, the owners having procured a better figures than the agent could procure in Montreal. This lot comprised 5,000 packages, and further reduces the stock of tea held in first hands in Montreal, so that holders now manifest extremely independent views as to the value of their property. In fact, the stock of low grades there is very small as compared with former years, and, as the market is now closed in Japan, there will be little or none of this class of tea coming forward. It is worthy of remark also that several round lots have been taken from Montreal on Chicago account, demonstrating a want in that section also.

At all centres the position on tea is remarkably strong. A letter from an English correspondent to a firm in Montreal, said: "Everything points to a hardening market. We have expected it, and are now looking back to old bought standards. Those who know anything of the subject must feel surprised at tea ever being allowed to go at such prices. It is only a short time since that useful Pekoe Souchongs were going begging here in London at 5-8-4d. per lb., and the cry was, 'We don't want common tea,' but it is curious that at the advanced prices the same tea does not look nearly so common. The position regarding low-priced tea is stronger in the case of Ceylon than others, as the quantity to be dealt in at the present time is ridiculously inadequate to the wants of the trade."

The tone of the letter indicates a pretty strong feeling across the water in England, and it may be argued that the shortage in the supply of tea is pretty general.

MONTREAL AS A FRUIT CENTRE.

The superior merits of the St. Lawrence route for the shipment of perishable fruit are receiving recognition. THE GROCER has pointed this out before, the chief advantage that it possesses being its coolness as compared with New York, and with proper attention by the trade in Montreal it should be the means of making that centre one of the leading auction marts of the continent. At any rate, this is the future predicted for the port during the season of 1893, a well-known New York wholesale jobber of fruit being the prophet in the case. He is willing to wager that there will be as many lemons and oranges auctioned at Montreal during 1893 as at any other centre. The marked success of the sales at Montreal during the two previous years has shown the fruit growers and exporters at Palermo and Messina that Montreal is the only port on this continent, the voyage to which benefited the fruit, and enabled it therefore to command a higher price all round. All the talk that is sent out from New York every summer about damage to fruit by frost, etc., on the St. Lawrence, can be set down to pure fiction, and to the increasing fear of Montreal competition on the part of New York firms. All such reports are due to jealousy of the Canadian route, and are not likely to divert any shipments from it. In fact, it is anticipated as more than likely that the season's sale will reach a quarter of a million boxes, three large cargoes having been chartered already, which are expected to reach Montreal early in May; in fact, eight, or even ten, cargoes may come to the port during the next spring and summer.

Another new feature in the growing fruit trade will be the regular weekly sales of bananas by the car load, which was started last summer and will be continued throughout the next; also regular daily sales of California fruit at the depot just as they arrive from the Sacramento valley. In fact, if all the expectations are realized, Montreal will be a big fruit centre in very truth.

The Michigan Wholesale Grocers' Association has adopted the equality plan for the sale of sugars, it going into effect January 3, 1893.

T. A. Vickers, Owen Sound, was in Toronto this week endeavoring to purchase a bankrupt stock. He has made some very successful hits in his purchases of this kind.

C. A. Smylie, of Young & Smylie, Brooklyn, N. Y., is on a short trip to Canada. He has a great many warm friends in Toronto, Kingston and other cities on this side of the line.

[This department is made up largely of items from travellers and retailers throughout the Dominion. It contains much interesting information regarding the movements of those in the trade. The editor will thank contributors to mail copy to reach the head office Tuesday.]

The United States chewed 85 tons of tobacco last year.

The store of J. C. Price, general merchant, Dutton, Ont., was destroyed by fire on the 15th inst. Mr. Price's loss is estimated at $4,000.

A deputation of the Winnipeg Board of Trade waited on Superintendent Whyte the other day and urged that the rule prohibiting commercial travellers from riding on freight trains be rescinded. No answer was given.

A number of fellows have recently been scouring the county of Essex in search of white turnips. The sharpers grind these up, season with fluid extract of horseradish, white mustard and vinegar, and then place the stuff on the market as first-class horse-radish for table use. An ordinary white turnip will yield the swindlers about 50 cents net.

At the annual meeting of the Ottawa Board of Trade held last week the president, J. M. Garland, who is wintering in California, sent an able review of the year's work, in which he suggested that the board co-operate with similar bodies in Canada for the reorganization of the Dominion Board of Trade, with headquarters at Ottawa, where it would be in touch with the Government.

The People's Almanac, prepared as a supplement to The Montreal Gazette, is issued for 1893 by the publishers of that paper. It is a convenient and well-filled repository of facts and figures, well chosen with an eye to the greatest benefit of the greatest number. Portraits of the Ministers, Provincial Governors, and other men prominent in politics, intersperse the reading matter. A very useful feature of the almanac is the list of events of 1892, presented in chronological order.

On the 11th inst., at noon, at the residence of the bride's mother, Mrs. Catharine German, Mary street, Picton, Ont., George Edward Boulter, of the firm of Boulter & Sons, eldest son of W. Boulter, was married to Miss Helen Blanche German, by Rev. Dr. McDearmid. Frank Boulter, brother of the groom, was best man, and Miss Alice Conger, of Hollowell, acted as bridesmaid. After the ceremony and congratulations the company sat down to an elegant repast. The happy couple left by the afternoon train for their wedding trip, followed by the good wishes of their host of friends.

At a recent meeting of the Victoria, B. C., Board of Trade, the question of Dominion legislation regarding insolvency was brought up, and a letter read from the Vancouver board. J. H. Todd said that the Attorney-General would have a bill brought before the Legislature framed upon the Ontario and Manitoba Acts. Robert Ward wished the matter placed in the hands of the Dominion members. He did not think this would interfere with local legislation. J. H. Todd having moved that the Dominion Parliament members insist upon the passage of a Dominion Act. Colonel Prior, M.P., reminded the board that the matter has often been brought up in the Dominion House but there was no unanimity about the contents of the bill. There was great need of such an act. He would urge, not insist; the Government could not be driven.

The Commercial Travellers' Mutual Benefit Society held their annual meeting at the rooms of the association on Yonge street, Toronto, on Saturday afternoon. The attention of the meeting was directed chiefly to the election of officers and the revision of the by-laws. The officers elected were as follows: President, James Greenfield; vice-president, Thomas Dunnet; treasurer, Warren Kennedy. Trustees, T. M. Bayne, W. B. Dack and Joseph Taylor, for three years; H. Goodman, H. Lamong and John A. Ross for two years; R. L. Patterson, Robert Crean and S. R. Wickett for one year; E. A. Dailey and W. M. Bremner, Hamilton; T. C. Fleming, Brantford; C. Huber, Berlin; N. D. McArthur, Belleville; M. R. O'Laughlin, Winnipeg; J. W. Dillon, London; and M. S. Sutherland, Kingston. The association has paid out $16,700 in death claims, and the reserve fund now amounts to $15,573. The membership of the society is 1,954.

On Saturday, at noon, George M. Wilkinson, senior member of the grocery firm of Wilkinson & Sons, Kingston, died, aged 69 years. He was a very successful man, wealthy and influential. He was a native of Kingston. For three years he had been incapacitated because of nervous affection, and from its effects he died. Two sons, Henry C. and George, conduct the business. The deceased built many substantial blocks in Kingston.

At a meeting of the Patrons of Industry in Forest, Ont., Mr. Mallory, the president of the order, repudiated the notion that there is any antagonism between Patrons and storekeepers. The buying of goods at a reduced price was, he said, no part of the Patron constitution. Any number of neighbors can join and make a bargain with storekeepers for goods at a percentage on invoice prices. It requires no charter to do that. But the P. of I. have become an incorporated body for far higher purposes than buying sugar and tea. If Patrons have been benefited by getting their goods cheaper, that is simply an outcome of the organization.

C. H. Peebles, Hamilton, has a useful attachment to his front door that should be put on every shop door in the country. By it your door can be opened by any of the employees from behind the counter. A rope is attached to the latch of the door and run up to the top along the outside panel. From there it is carried diagonally across to the ceiling, and from there to a point behind the counter. Then by pulling a rope the latch is lifted, and the door opens wide. A spring attached to the door closes it again. "You don't know how useful and labor-saving an invention this is," says C. H. Peebles to THE GROCER'S representative last week. "If a lady happens to enter the store with parcels in her hand or even without, how nice it is to open the door for her. It saves a lot of time in running to and from the front door, and, as there is always someone behind the counter, we are always polite in opening our door for our customers. I saw this device in Buffalo some months ago, and it works to perfection."

ASSOCIATION ITEMS.

A paper was presented at the last meeting of the Grand Rapids, Mich., Retail Grocers' Association recommending an amendment to the present exemption laws, allowing delinquents only $1 per day exempt from attachment, instead of $25.

The Fort Wayne, Ind., Sentinel is responsible for the statement that the Retail Grocers' Associations of the state are preparing to march upon the general assembly with a large force to secure the passage of a bill to protect them from "dead beats." The measure proposed is on the principle of the mechanics' lien law, and will compel men to pay their grocery bills. It is claimed that with such a law in force the cost of groceries to consumers who are now paying the percentage on losses from "dead beats" would be greatly decreased.

The Retail Grocery Clerks' Mutual Benefit Association of Pittsburg and Allegheny, entertained its friends at a ball and reception at Armory Hall on Tuesday evening, January 3. The affair was well attended and was quite a success. The clerks' association is in a flourishing condition, and is doing a great deal of work.

About a year ago a resolution was passed by the New York Retail Grocers' Union, asking that all clerks applying for situations, of drivers and other employees of those who supply the retail grocery trade of this city, should be referred to the New York Retail Grocers' Union, Clerks' Department, where a proper entry of names and references could be made, thus aiding the work of ferreting out those who were dishonest, or incompetent. Letters were sent to all the large bakers and others, notifying them of the union's action. From the replies received it was understood that in the future the wishes of the union would be acquiesced in.—Retail Grocers' Advocate.

At the last regular meeting of the New York Retail Grocers' Union a resolution which is to be submitted to the State Board of Trade, and which is worded as follows, was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we, the State Board of Trade, condemn the limited price system now in vogue among manufacturers and jobbers, and urge the enforcement of all laws for the suppression of the same.

A. H. Gunn has re-entered the employ of the Dunwich Co-operative Association, Dutton, Ont. Mr. Gunn had withdrawn his services from that association, as was mentioned some time ago in THE GROCER, but his old employers have made it worth his while to re-engage.

THE TARE IN DATES.

TORONTO, July 17, '93.

DEAR GROCER,—Will you please ascertain for the subscriber what is the customary tare allowed by the grocery and fruit trade on dates. If we mistake not it has been customary for the grocery houses to allow the retailer 8 lbs., but evidently the fruit dealers are only allowing 7 lb. We have tared several lots lately and find that 8 lb. is the about proper tare, and any merchant receiving only 7 lbs. from wholesale fruit dealers is just 1 lb. out on every box. It might be well for fellow retailers to know the proper tare when purchasing these goods.

Your kind attention will oblige,

Yours truly,

"QUEEN ST. WEST."

[THE GROCER has look into the matter in accordance with the wish expressed above and finds that though the usual allowance is 8 lbs., there are instances where 7 lbs. are allowed. In one case 9 lbs. was given as the regular tare. EDITOR GROCER.]

A CAUSE OF FAILURE.

Among many causes of failure in business none is more common than the impatience of individuals. The average man, coming to years of discretion, after working for a salary, feels able to manage for himself, and embarks in a venture of one kind or another with more or less capital. He is sanguine of success, or he certainly would not risk his time and money, but it is seldom that he realizes the length of the journey before he can feel certain that he has an established connection. Some men acknowledge to themselves that there are such things as bad debts, dull seasons, and losses of all sorts to be faced, but even these men do not realize the time that must elapse before a business advertises itself, as one may say, or brings in money solely by reason of its being well conducted.

Through not considering how long it takes to make a business, many get discouraged and sell out at a loss, or fail wholly, when, if they had been satisfied with the day of small things, they might have lived to see them grow larger. The hare and the tortoise of Æsop's fable exist to-day in trade, and the business hare is just as confident of his ability to make a trade in a day as his congener was of outstripping the hard-shell conservative who went slower, but got there first in the sequel; for it is not so much brilliancy that is wanted as sturdy sticking to trade through thick and thin. It matters not what calling, or what line men take up in any one of them, certain qualities must be manifested, and ordinary business faculty will succeed with perseverance, where the erratic, can't-wait man misses every time.—Commercial Enquirer.

THE CURRANT SITUATION.

The immediate future of the currant market is considered in doubt at the present time, owing to the liberal quantity with which the situation appears to be burdened. During the past week three cargoes have been landed in port, the R. F. Mathews with 5,100 bbls., 500 half do. and 12,500 half-cases; the Southwold with 3,800 bbls. and 36,800 half-cases, and Persian Prince with 900 bbls., 600 half do., 700 cases and 12,000 half do., or say a total of 9,800 bbls., 1,100 half do., 700 cases and 61,500 half do. The British Prince is the only boat posted on the way, her cargo consisting of 1,200 bbls. and 300 half do. Previous to the arrival of above vessels the market was well supplied with the various packages, and the principal holders sought in vain for sufficient interest from the trade to reduce the quantity upon offer; but buyers, confronted with the heavy prospective arrivals, continued to act indifferently when approached, with the result of a slow distribution into the channels of consumption and sagging prices. By easy stages the value has receded for some time past until now the quotation rests upon the nominal basis of $3\frac{1}{4}$ c for barrels and $3\frac{1}{2}$ c for ordinary quality in cases. These prices it is said, do not cover the average cost of the goods recently landed, the bulk of the stock received standing the importers $3\frac{1}{4}$ to $3\frac{1}{2}$ c. while in some instances the equivalent of $3\frac{1}{2}$ was paid laid down in this market. The condition of affairs is certainly embarrassing to importers, for to recede from their present position means to increase the losses they are sustaining, and to stand their ground is to deprive themselves of orders, as the majority of the trade, particularly at this period of the year, are not pressed for additional stock, hence negotiations are opened only when necessities compel. Though currants are to-day regarded by many in the trade as cheap, there have been times in the past when with a duty of one cent per lb. the value has been as low, or approaching very closely the present quotation of the market. The crop of the past season in Greece is estimated to have been in the neighborhood of 150,000 tons a quantity certainly liberal when to it is added a considerable quantity carried over from the previous crop. In the face of this supply the Greek market has been sustained with remarkable strength during the entire period since the harvesting, and is to-day cabled at a point considerably above the value ruling here. From all accounts there yet remains a rather full supply at primary sources to be marketed, but the Greeks are looking with expectant eyes to the wine-makers of France for relief from their holdings. Should the demand from that country materialize, a firm, if not a higher, market may be counted upon, under which circumstances our importers would be encouraged to maintain their position and take the chances of the market later; but should the stock in France prove sufficient to carry them through the season without additions from Greece, it is more than probable that the firmness now prevalent in the latter country would give place to weakness, and possibly a decline. Upon this feature, therefore, depends entirely the course of this market. Our stocks to-day are large, some estimating the quantity as sufficient to carry the trade through the greater portion of the coming season, but should the market abroad break, the result would undoubtedly be additional quantities purchased or consigned, the effect of which at the present time can only be conjectured. California is beginning to loom up as a competitor with Greece in the production of the higher class of stock. Some few years ago it was said that no country in the world possessed the soil and climate for the production of this berry. The same was once said in reference to Spain and Turkey regarding the growth of raisins, but Yankee push and enterprise, brought to bear upon the soil of California, produced wonderful results with the raisin, and it looks now as if with a few years to propagate the vines the banner State of the Pacific Coast will be putting currants upon this market in the same liberal manner with which she is now dealing out raisins. Samples of the fruit have recently come to hand, indicating that the State is making progress in the new industry, and the quality of the goods submitted compares favorably with the best Vostizza coming from Greece.—N. Y. Commercial Bulletin.

Sneak thieves have troubled Port Hope merchants for sometime back. The culprits always managed to escape, until the other day when two of them were arrested for robbing the grocery store of James Dunfee. Their plunder in that robbery amounted to nearly $100. They also damaged the store and stock in their rummaging search for the more portable and valuable wares. The thieves turned out to be two boys. Part of the property was recovered in a shanty near the home of one of the boys. Both boys have a bad record.

THE ASSOCIATION'S AT HOME.

"The glad circle yield their souls
To festive mirth and wit that knows no gall."

The seasons in their annual round deal out no brighter hours to the grocery trade of this city than those chosen for the yearly At Home of the Toronto Retail Grocers' Association. The spirit in which the guests come together and the felicitous arrangements of the committees, are admirably and always successfully calculated to drive out dull care and make the general enjoyment spontaneous and unalloyed. The evening is always looked forward to with the most pleasurable anticipations, and the fact that these are always realized is the reason that larger numbers are present each succeeding year.

This year's At Home was held on Wednesday evening in Webb's assembly rooms. The splendour of past At Homes in the history of the Association was not only revived but was eclipsed by the magnificent success of this one. The committees to whom were allotted the various divisions of the work of preparation acquitted themselves, or the perfection of their work acquitted them, without a fault. All circumstances that could be invoked to produce a contagion of enjoyment appeared to be happily secured and combined by the forethought of the members in charge, so that pleasure was not a matter of seeking but of enjoying upon offer.

The programme for the concert was all that could be desired to while away the time before the company repaired to the hall-room, the parts being selected and rendered specially with the object of amusing. The committees were named in our last issue. In this we present portraits and sketches of the newly elected officers. They are given below:

D. W. CLARK, PRESIDENT.

Mr. David W. Clark, the President of the Association, is a young man, now in the thirty third year of his age. The fact that this is but the land of his adoption—for he was born of Scottish parents in South Africa—does not make his affection for Canada less ardent than if it were a native sentiment. Twenty-three years ago his family left the Cape, and he has ever since dwelt in this city. Thus the years of his life when he was most open to impressions, most susceptible to the moulding influence of his surroundings, were spent in Canada, and it is small wonder that his tastes, habits of thought and patriotic instincts became thoroughly assimilated to the corporate life of the country into which he was thrown so early. His training as a grocer was begun under Kinnear & Lang, continued under J. W. Lang & Co. and finished under Fulton Michie. His connection with the Association began with the founding of that body in 1885. He is an energetic member, goes in for making the Association of practical use to everybody in it, and is both a thoughtful worker and conscientious attendant at its meetings. He has traded for nine years on the corner of Bellevue Avenue and Nassau street, has built up a sound and extensive business, and will soon put his sign out before a larger store in a more prominent part of the city. He goes upon the right principles to succeed.

J. G. GIBSON, VICE-PRESIDENT.

Mr. J. G. Gibson, the Vice-president, is an Englishman. He was born at Long Crendon, in Buckinghamshire. His training as a grocer he received in Wendover, where he was bound in a three years' apprenticeship. Drilled in the inflexible Old Country school, Mr. Gibson came to Canada eminently fitted to succeed. As well as a thorough training, he had tact, great force of character, and integrity. Upon his arrival in this city, he opened a grocery up Yonge street, where he has carried on business the whole subsequent period of twenty-two years.

Mr. Gibson made a specialty of the tea and butter trade, two of the most sensitive articles kept in a grocery, and his success in these lines is the foundation of the present trade. Mr. Gibson has always been an active member of the Association, and has rendered it good service by his abilities as a financier.

Martin McMillan, Treasurer of the Association, is a very prominent member of the retail grocery trade in this city. He is well known as a sterling unpretentious man. For ten years he carried on a successful business at the corner of Yonge and Gerrard streets, and removed from there because the building was to be pulled down and replaced by another. He bought out the stock of McCormick & Co., on the corner of Yonge and Ann streets, to which stand he transferred his business and a great deal of the custom he had attached in his former store. In four years he has built up a big trade in his present premises. He is a very capable business man and does not know what it is to fail.

R. M. CORRIE, SECRETARY.

The son of a wholesale baker and confectioner, Mr. Corrie was born on the High street, Dumfries, Scotland. Left an orphan in the care of guardians at the early age of five, he was schooled in Liverpool at Liverpool College, Shaw street. At the same time he learned the grocery business from a foster brother who had six stores in Liverpool. The brother failing, R. M. left there, and was engaged as cashier for Dakin & Co., No. 1 St. Paul's Churchyard and Oxford Circus, London, Eng., one of the oldest tea houses in London. This place he filled with satisfaction to his employers for five years. He left there to better his fortunes in Canada.

tion was represented at the At-Home by Messrs. Adam Ballantine and Chas. Bremner, both of whom expressed themselves highly delighted with their friendly reception and paid the committee of management unstinted praise for the unqualified success of the affair.

Among the prominent lights present we noticed the great N. P. Soap Morton. Mr. Simpson's ventriloquial joke at the expense of the Hamilton Soap King was highly appreciated by Mr. Morton.

ECHOES OF THE DANCE.

It would be difficult to say who was the belle of the ball, there were so many.

President Clark is just a bit modest yet, he has the ability and the information, and Mr. Gibson says he should not be afraid to let out.

The opening official set of lancers was made up of President Clark, and Miss Gibson, Mr. and Mrs. A. Dennis, Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Piper and Mr. and Mrs. Sloan; next them was a set made up of Mr. George and Miss Barron, P. C. Larkin and Miss White, W. W. and Miss Park, Mr. and Miss Taylor; next them came sets formed by Mr. and Mrs. Butcher and Mr. Saunders and Miss Bradley, Mr. Shields and Mrs. Shields, Mr. Kempton and Mrs. Kempton, Mr. Gordon Crean and Miss Butcher.

Orillia was represented by Miss Moore, daughter of Chas. Moore, the well-known merchant of that town.

The "green grocer" was represented by a gentleman with a green tie.

The ventriloquist got off several capital hits. One of his dummies was Irish and the other colored. "Where's Henry Wright?" said the Irishman. "I want some Surprise Soap to clean the nigger." Again, "Ah, there, Larkin, I see you; Have you joined the combine?" "Kinnear, do you want a city traveller?" "Mills, how about the peddlers?"

Among those present we noticed:—

Mr. W. R. Armstrong, Mrs. Andrews, Mr. and Mrs. P. Andrews, Miss Adams, Mrs. A. S. Anderson, Mr. James Austin, Mr. J. Adams.

Mr. and Mrs. Adam Ballantyne, Hamilton; Mr. P. Baigent, Mr. and Mrs. E. Y. Barker and Miss Barker, Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Booth, Mr. and Mrs. John Butcher, Miss Butcher, Mr. A. A. Beard, Mr. D. DO YOU SELL IT?

DRY GOODS.

The past week has seen very few buyers on the market, as most of the retailers are either stock-taking or preparing for it, and hence are not visiting the markets. Travellers' orders are coming in quite satisfactorily; in most cases they are ahead of the same period last year. Winter stocks are being steadily lightened by retailers, and this gives a more animated spirit to spring ordering.

Remittances are fairly good. They are better than at the close of the year and are fully up to the average for this time of the year. The North-west and British Columbia, which were slow in December, were very good the first ten days of the new year, but they are slacking off again.

Chadwick's spool cotton has advanced another 10c. to $3.40 for regular and $3.50 for special labels. It is not improbable that there will be advances in other makes in the near future. The Chadwick spooling factory in Montreal, though running night and day, is unable to catch up with their orders, the demand being so large and increasing.

Some makers of Canadian braces have advanced 20 per cent. on the figures at which they sold in November last.

A number of agents selling Japanese goods have been on the Toronto and Montreal markets this month showing novelties in embroidered, initialed, and hem-stitched handkerchiefs. Prices will be lower than last year, owing to our increasing trade with Japan. One agent came direct from Tokio, Japan; he is a gentleman of German birth, but has lived in Japan for 20 years.

Mufflers have sold well this season. Dark patterns took the lead, with a tendency towards a better class of goods.

NOTES.

Wyld, Grasett & Darling are showing some special lines in negligé shirts. These come in flannelettes of lowest grades, very effective patterns in Bedford cords, and silk striped Madras shirts. In regatta shirts they have some neat lines, including short stiff bosoms, with attached collars; soft bosoms with stiff collar and cuffs, colored pique bosoms with soft white body, as well as the staple lines. They have received another very large shipment of neckwear. This about completes their regular purchase of neckwear for the spring and summer trade. They claim to show very special value in block neckwear of all kinds, and carry a well assorted stock. They are showing a line of English braces with saddler's ends, a feature which makes them very strong and durable without losing the stylish appearance.

Mr. Begg, buyer of the woollen department of John Macdonald & Co., sailed on the 13th for Great Britain. His mission is to find the leading lines and patterns for the fall trade.

John Macdonald & Co., are receiving large shipments of their spring woollens. Their range this year in both domestic and imported is ahead of previous seasons. Serges in hop-sack and diagonal weaves will be very fashionable this season. They are making a specialty of black worsteds in all the best makes, and they aim to have a full stock of these goods all the year through. Their stock of tailors' trimmings is also very complete at present; every thing in this line that can possibly be required is being shown. They carry a neat range of mantlings for the spring trade, in serges, box-cloths, fancy brocades, in all the latest colorings.

Gordon, Mackay & Co., are receiving their spring importations of neckwear. In knots, the newest thing is the Dude, being a very small tapering knot, with a wide, flowing end. In four-in-hands the width is about the same as last season, namely, 2 1-2 to 3 inches. They come in handsome dark and light effects. In wash ties, their range of piques and Derbys is very attractive, and the designs are new. In ladies' Windsor ties they have an almost endless variety, including cottons, pongees and surahs. They run in self shades, polka dots and fancies. In their curtain department they are showing a strong range of fancy art muslins in the latest colorings, with and without borders. In chenille curtains they have an extensive range, both in plain centres, with dado at top and bottom, and in clever combinations in all figured goods.

HYMEN IN THE PURE GOLD.

Cupid has been very active lately among the staff of the Pure Gold Manufacturing Co., of this city. Two of their number, James Litster, chemist, and Geo. Stacey, their popular young Manitoba traveller, have fallen victims to his art, and both have passed over to the Benedicts. Mr. Litster was married in Old St. Andrew's church here to Mrs. Bell Pollie, of Kingston, and started off the same day to spend his honeymoon in a tour through some of the American cities.

The office of the company presented an unusually lively appearance on the previous Saturday at noon, when 40 of the employees trooped down, and Mr. Litster was called in and presented with a handsome walnut secretary and book-case combined. He afterwards entertained Mr. Jardine and the heads of departments to a sumptuous lunch at the Dodega, when speeches were in order, and many congratulations and much good advice given the groom elect.

At the same hour on Tuesday, Mr. Stacey was married at his old home, St. Thomas, to Miss Mary V. Wood, daughter of A. J. Wood, of that place. Miss Weltha Haight attended the bride, and Arthur Wood supported Mr. Stacey.

After the ceremony the happy couple started for Winnipeg, where they will make their future home. Among the many handsome and valuable presents to the bride was a beautifully bound set of Sir Walter Scott's works, sent by express from Toronto by the Pure Gold staff.

Both weddings were very quiet, only the immediate relatives being present.

TORONTO MARKETS.

TORONTO, Jan. 19, 1893.

GROCERIES.

The distinguishing feature of this week's grocery trade is a more active business in sugar. The conviction that the price may go higher is sufficiently widespread, and coupled with the means to buy in advance of present requirements, to support a fairly strong demand. Tea has not fully opened out, mainly because a tentative policy is relied on to bring advantages to buyers. Dried fruit is dull, and Malaga raisins are plentiful enough to be a cause of anxiety to some holders. Canned goods are in better shape, and in good present demand. The trade in miscellaneous goods is reasonably active. Taken all in all, the wholesale grocery trade is much better than it was a year ago. In nearly everything prices are in better tone. Doubtless the abundance of snow and the continuance of weather hard enough to maintain sleighing, have been favorable factors. Milder weather might have done more in the way of improvement, as it is probable the reaction from extreme mildness may have over-shot the mark. Collections are generally satisfactory as collections go. Out-of-town dealers are probably making fewer renewals than they were. The farmers are realizing good prices for butter, eggs, poultry, pork, and the grain market is looking up. These conditions are favorable to collections as well as to current business.

COFFEE.

Upon this market the conditions are rather constant. The demand fluctuates but little on either side of the line of a medium trade. The variations in price outside very slightly affect the volume of business done here. The market for Brazil coffees is still strong, and on spot the quotation runs from 20 to 21c. Mild coffees are as firm as ever. Green Java coffee is quoted at 25 to 30c. Padang coffee is 28 to 35c. Colory V.O.G. Javas are quoted at 40c.

DRIED FRUIT.

The amount of custom now presenting itself for business in dried fruit is very limited. There is no excess stock of staple goods in any local hands. Prices are for the most part steady. The views expressed by reports of the outside current market show that New York is selling on a lower basis than the fruit could now be bought at in Greece. The only easing in price is, therefore, on the part of New York holders. From Patras the latest advice reports an advance of 6d. The price of barrel currants here is 53-4 to 6c., according to quality. Heavy deliveries due at New York, along with liberal stocks already in store there, tend to the expectation of easy prices here, as nobody is heavily stocked, and if future buying can be done at a comparative advantage, retailers will probably reap the benefit. Valencia layers are not in free movement, but jobbers are not tempting trade by any offers below 5c. for acceptable fruit. The majority hold out for 51-4c. London layers are quoted as low as $2.25, but there are lines not openly quoted, but available to the retailer at advantageous prices. It is possible to buy London layers and black baskets at a very slight advance, or probably without the encumbrance of any advance, on cost. Prunes are unchanged. They are firm, and appear to be in scant supply locally. Offers made some time ago by Toronto importers were turned down, and no subsequent overtures have been made, the standing-off attitude being resorted to to see what it will yield. B's are quoted at 81-2c., U's at 71-2. There are some cheap bag figs offering, 41-2 being susceptible to buyers' influence. Nuts are inactive and call for nothing but quotations, which we give in Prices Current.

RICE AND SPICES.

The rice trade is a small and featureless one. B rice is steady at 37-8 to 4c., Japan rice at 5 to 51-2c., according as the latter is home or foreign milled.

There have been some slight advances outside in pepper, ginger and cloves. Upon this market there has been no change. The range for pepper is 10 to 15c., for African ginger 16 to 18c., and for cloves 14 to 20c. The spice trade generally is considered good for the month of January.

SUGAR.

The quantity of sugar leaving the refineries for distribution throughout the country is said to be the largest ever known for this time of the year. This indicates the state of the market, and shows that buyers are impressed with its strength. The quotation now made by jobbers is 43-4 to 47-8c. for granulated. Yellows quote from a basis of 1c. lower than this. The firmness of the beet market gives the key note to the whole sugar situation, and the estimates of the shortage in the beet crop bring up the market. The refiners are steadfast in their restriction of present prices to strictly present business, and offers for future delivery on the basis of current quotations are not accepted. Among jobbers there appears to be unusual unanimity in the maintenance of prices. They have evidently concluded not to urge business any faster than it will move under the impulse of essential market conditions. If the market promises to advance, retailers are supposed to be prompt to secure stock in anticipation of such advance, and wholesalers are just now in a temper that does not regard it as part of their duty to stimulate business by shading.

Willett & Gray, New York, in their Weekly Sugar Statistical, say:

Raw—During the week the market has not varied in quotations at New York or Philadelphia, but for Boston an advance of 1-16c. has been paid for a cargo of centrifugals. A strong tone has prevailed, and all invoices offered have been freely taken. The transactions in the local market, however, represent only small amount of the actual business, which includes large purchases made in the Cuba and other markets. At the close the limit of bids is 37-16c. for 96 centrifugals and 8c. for 89 Muscovados, with light offerings, but with no indications of any immediate advance. The Cuba crop will soon be fully under way, and with more pressure to sell. Its size is not yet determined, but less is said about a 10 per cent. deficiency. The Brazil crop is being used more largely than usual at home, and shipments to the United States will be much curtailed. Accounts from the West Indies generally are of good average crops.

Refined—A strong market and increasing demand most of the week kept refiners pushed to the utmost extent of present production to deliver orders without delay, and caused a moderate advance in several grades on which the demand runs most largely. Towards the close the orders fell off somewhat and the week closes quiet and steady. There is more or less enquiry all the time for foreign refined, which can be landed at 1-8c. per pound below American, but buyers do not seem willing to take the risk of importation without a larger margin. There are no indications of any change in quotations except as to certain grades of soft sugars subject to special demand.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES.

The sale of syrups is rather limited. The market has nothing that can be bought in a jobbing way at a lower price than 2½c. From this to 3c. the grades in most request are quoted.

Molasses has no special circumstances in its favor this week, and the trade is therefore confined to the fitful minor business that is characteristic of it on this market. West Indies stock is sold at prices ranging from 30 to 35c. New Orleans molasses is 30 to 50c.

TEA.

The tea market presents the same unbroken front to the buyer, despite the prolonged suspension of business on wholesale account. There was an idea that the figures of sellers were too high to stand neglect. Orders were sparingly submitted, and some jobbers allowed themselves to run low, in the hope that they would be able to establish a bear influence by the time the demand should begin on retail account. But for the past three months the market has been steadily ascending. The position of Japan teas has improved remarkably, and stocks held in this country have been withdrawn to supply wants that have developed in New York and Chicago. There are no Japans of the last crop now available to the retailer at a lower price than 15½ to 16c. Lower prices are not quoted on anything but 1891 crop tea, which is obtainable at 14c. Congous are steady, and far from plentiful in low and medium grades, at from 15c. upwards. Young Hysons are in stock at prices ranging from 15c. upwards. Indian and Ceylon teas are in a very strong position. Higher prices are quoted at Calcutta, and the shipments from Colombo were unexpectedly short in December. The droughts of Southern India are reported to have extended to Ceylon; there are fewer flushings of leaf, and consequently a smaller crop is looked forward to. The cheapest Indian tea now on the speculative market is quoted at 8½c. in London up to July. Nearly all Indians and Ceylons are now held in London. A price below what Indian tea would cost laid down here is still quoted by jobbers, namely 17c. This is the lowest figure going for Pekoe Souchnings in Indian and Ceylon teas. In common Pekoes 25c. is asked, for choice Pekoes 32 to 35c., for broken Pekoes 30 to 40c., for broken orange Pekoes 35 to 50c.

The following are McMeekin & Co.'s notes on Indian and Ceylon teas for the month of December:

INDIAN—The offerings were 92,000 packages, against 109,000 packages in the same month of 1891. The quality generally was of a useful character, and above that of the corresponding month in the previous season. The auctions in the second week were heavy, and at that time the better sorts did not meet with so ready a demand; but, with this exception, all grades were distinctly firmer, and the month closes with higher prices, especially for all teas under 1s. per lb. The average of public sale prices for the month was about 10¼d. per lb. against 8¾d. per lb. for the corresponding month last year. The imports were 17,353,000 lbs., and the deliveries 9,595,000 lbs., leaving in stock on 31st Dec., 46,069,000 lbs. Although the imports in December show a very heavy total, and there is at the close of the year an unusually large quantity of tea unprinted in importers' hands, the available supply does not appear to be in excess of the probable requirements.

CEYLON.—The offerings were 42,000 packages, against 47,000 packages in the same month of 1891. The high level at which the month opened rather tended to discourage buyers, and, in consequence, the course of the market was slightly irregular throughout, and prices showed a downward tendency; but any decline observable was not material. The quality generally was not equal to that of earlier arrivals. The average of public sale prices for the month was 10¼d. per lb., against 9¾d. per lb. for the corresponding month last year. The imports were 5,735,000 lbs., and the deliveries 4,202,000 lbs., leaving in stock on 31st December, 12,738,000 lbs.

4,600 packages of Java toas were offered, and met with good competition, there being more enquiry for them from the home trade owing to the higher prices for common Indians and Ceylons. For China teas, quotations were very firm for all the lower grades.

MARKET NOTES.

[Importers, wholesale merchants and manufacturers should send any items intended for this department so that they may reach the head office not later than Wednesday morning. The editor will always welcome such information.]

Davidson & Hay have Brooke's Crystal soap in stock.

Smith & Keighley are offering a line of bag figs at very low prices.

Sloan & Crowther have just received two more car loads of Little Chief tomatoes.

D. W. Port & Co. have received a car load of splendid white fish from Manitoba.

The prices of Japan teas have advanced in New York 11-2c. since the first of December.

The St. Lawrence Starch Company has advanced prices of Canada laundry to 4c. The discounts remain as before.

W. T. Harris, Chatham, N.B., dealer in general merchandise, offers 200 cases canned lobsters, also dried cod of finest quality.

A Toronto wholesale house received an enquiry from Chicago on Tuesday for a quotation on 3-lb. tomatoes. In the latter city the price is $1.10.

The lobster market is firm. It is reported that one large packer in the Maritime Provinces has sold to English buyers the whole of his output for 1893.

Eby, Blain & Co. have a few packages left of No. 1 fresh water herring. As the market is rapidly becoming bare of this fish, orders should be forwarded without delay.

James Turner & Co. find the sales of Ram Lal's teas steadily increasing. The P. C. Larkin & Co. report their Salado package tea to be meeting with exceptional success, telephone and mail orders coming in freely from all parts every day.

It is quite fashionable to serve Burnham's Clam Bouillon at afternoon teas, same as cocoa. Instantly prepared with hot water. It is very nourishing and strengthening.

Eby, Blain & Co. are advertising in this week's GROCER Chase & Sanborn's "Seal" brand condensed coffee and milk. The reputation of these manufacturers is a guarantee of its quality.

J. T. Sturgis, representing Francis D. Moulton & Co., New York, is visiting Ontario in the interests of Eureka Salt. Mr. Sturgis attended the creamery convention held last week in Harriston.

W. H. Gillard & Co., of Hamilton, are offering new "Sair" dates very low, viz., 4 3-4. These goods were shipped in error to Canada, and are being sold much below market prices.

At London J. W. Jones on Friday sold the stock of R. Weatherell, of Oil City, general merchandise, insolvent, to W. T. Trapp, of that place, for 50 1-2 cents on the dollar. The stock was valued at $6,757.87.

The manufacturers of canned meats have advanced their prices. The prices of the Canadian Meat Canning Co. have been put up 10c. on one's and two's, but jobbers continue to sell at former quotations to the retail trade.

The Pure Gold Manufacturing Co. are putting on the market a new blend of coffee named the Golden Crown, which is likely to meet with a hearty reception from the trade. It is put up in an attractive and saleable form in 2-lb. tins only.

Perkins, Ince & Co. are offering some genuine bargains in London layers and black baskets.

Samples of new crop Japan rice now at hand are generally described as of very excellent quality and calculated to attract prompt attention. Advices from primal points of late have shown some irregularity, and the last cable communications report ruling rates at about 5c. per 100 pounds under the cost of previous export deals, but that was due mainly to reduced freight charges and irregularity in exchange. Holders of rice in Japan were sustaining full former figures.—N. Y. Commercial Bulletin.

Representatives of the Halifax and Moncton sugar refineries have protected to Mr. Bowell, Minister of Trade and Commerce, against the abolition of the discriminating duties upon sugar and molasses imported through the United States. They say the action taken by the government in abolishing those duties is contrary to the genius and designs of the national policy, and will divert a large amount of trade from Halifax and St. John to United States ports. The sugar men say it is wrong to allow foreign cities to be built up by means of Canadian trade. The complaint of the United States Government against the duties in question is the only reason given by the Ministers for abolishing them.

CANNED GOODS.

TORONTO.

A slightly better feeling is perceptible in the canned goods market. Orders for current needs are numerous and of a good average magnitude, showing that consumption is stimulated by the easy prices going. There is a pretty well defined belief that the unusually big pack will be crowded down by our population before renewal from the factories is due, and the very low prices are depended on for this result. An inquiry from Chicago this week points to the possibility of the difference between Canadian and United States prices affording relief through exportation. It is almost a temptation to our packers to sacrifice on that market to raise prices here. Assorted vegetables are steady at 85c. to $1. Gallon apples are mostly held at $2, but as the fruit in its natural state is still cheap and plentiful, there is little demand for the canned product. Salmon is quiet but firm, most jobbers wanting $1.50, but $1.45 is known to be not unacceptable if a sale of any importance is involved. Lobster is firm and unchanged at from $1.80 upwards.

MARKETS—Continued

PETROLEUM.

A steady market, with a slight decrease in business, incidental to the growing daylight, is about all there is to take note of in a market report. The quotation for Canadian refined continues to be 14 to 14½c.

BUTTER AND CHEESE.

Large rolls are in declining supply and are appreciating in value. The price paid now is 17 to 18c. for first class stock, while a cent lower is touched for anything that is not of prime quality. The country is turning out a very limited supply of butter in any form. Tubs of good table butter are worth 18 to 20c., and grades of dairy tub that are in request for bakers' purposes worth 15c. Cold weather, though favorable to delivery in good condition appears to be unfavorable to production and to marketing. The capacity of this market is much beyond the compass of the supply even at current prices, for all the really good butter goes very rapidly, and lower qualities are taken very often in sheer default of a sufficient supply of choice stock.

Cheese is very firm. Late fall makes are selling in a jobbing way at 11½ to 12c., and for late summer and early fall cheese the quotation is 11c.

COUNTRY PRODUCE.

BEANS—Variety in quality still causes the range between lowest and highest prices to be a wide one. Choice handpicked are jobbed at $1.35. Lower grades are quoted all the way down to $1.15.

DRIED APPLES—Buyers are paying 4¾c., and the jobbing price is 5¼c.

EVAPORATED APPLES—The market is brighter, but prices do not ascend. The price paid to sellers is 7¼c., and in a jobbing way re-sales are made at 8c.

EGGS—Strictly fresh eggs are 25c. a dozen, and are very scarce. Lined eggs are 16c. Cold storage eggs are firm at 19 to 20c.

HONEY—There is no change in the dull honey market, which is well stocked with extracted to sell at 7 to 10c. The price of sections is 13 to 15c.

HOPS—The price at which business has been done this week is 18 to 20c. for last crop stock. Buyers are not eager to pay these figures, and are not anticipating future wants.

ONIONS—Cold weather has reduced trade almost to the vanishing point. The price quoted is still $2.25 to $2.50.

POTATOES—Offerings are few, as well on account of hard weather as on account of firm views on the part of growers. Cars are 75 to 76c. Out of store lots are 85c.

DRESSED POULTRY—Receipts are almost nil. Turkeys bring 12c., geese 8½ to 9c., chickens 45 to 60c., ducks 70 to 90c.

GREEN FRUIT.

The extreme cold of the last week has had a very adverse influence on the fruit trade. Sales of every kind have been rather few, small and far between to satisfy the jobbers. Prices are as follows: Oranges—Valencias $4.50, Jamaicas (boxes) $2.75 to $3, Floridas $3 to $3.50, lemons $3 to $3.50; Malaga grapes, nearly done, at $8; bananas not in stock; cranberries $10.50 to $11 for choice, $1 for Canadian baskets; pineapples 20 to 25c.; cocoanuts 5½ to 6c.; apples $1.50 to $2.85; grape fruit 6c.

HOGS AND PROVISIONS.

The almost unparalleled value of hogs has had the effect of closing out the demand on packers' account, and for the time being none of the hogs that come to market are allowed to go to the butchers. The price rose as high as $8.90, and of course that figure for raw material would almost certainly preclude business in products. All hog products are very high and firm.

BACON—Long clear 10½ to 11c. Smoked backs are 12½ to 13c., bellies 13½c., rolls 10c.

HAMS—Are 13c.

LARD—Pure Canadian is 11c. in tubs, and 12½c. in pails. Compound is 10 to 10½c.

BARREL PORK—U. S. heavy mess is $20 to $21. Canadian short cut is $21.50 to $22.

DRESSED MEATS—Beef forees are 5 to 6c. hindquarters 7 to 8½c., veal 6½ to 8c., mutton 6½ to 7c., lamb 7c. to 8½c.

SALT.

The sale of salt is not up to the volume of corresponding periods in former years. The pork packers are unable to render the same strength to the demand as it used to have, for the packers will be obliged to curtail their output very much on account of the shortage in hogs. The break in the salt combine affects the price of barrel salt more than any other line. The following are present prices in car lots:—Barrels $1, coarse 65c., dairy $1, quarter sacks 40 to 45c., common 75c., rock salt $12 per ton.

FISH AND OYSTERS.

Trade in fish has not yet rallied as it was expected to do since hogs rose in price and the cold weather supervened. Stocks of fresh fish are full enough for all requirements that are signified or appear to be in prospect. The prices are as follows: 7c. for trout and ordinary whitefish, 7½c. for Manitoba whitefish, 4c. per lb. or $2 to $2.25 per hundred for Lake herring, 10c. for mackerel, 13c. for B. C. salmon, 7c. for smelts, 5 to 5½c. for haddock, 4 to 4½c. for market cod, 7c. for steak cod, 4c. for flounders, 6½c. for skinned and boned codfish, $6 for Labrador herring, $5 to $5.50 for shore herring, 11 to 12½c. for Digby herring, 4c. for boneless fish, 7 to 8c. for boneless cod, oysters $1.25.

MONTREAL MARKETS.

MONTREAL Jan 19th 1893.

[As there is often inequality in the prices of the various sellers on this market, owing to differences in buying conditions and other circumstances, and as prices are modified by both quantity and quality, the quotations given below, and in our Prices Current, necessarily take a wide range.]

GROCERIES.

The grocery market has shown a satisfactory degree of activity during the week, and although the volume has not been of such wide dimensions as the previous week, the movement is still large and far more general in its character. It was jobbers who were buying before; now it is the retailers who are making their wants felt, and everything makes it plain that their supplies are very light. With this demonstrated therefore, and the light supplies of leading staples in first hands here, it is natural to look for a firm tone to values, and this is the case. In fact, the general tendency of the grocery market is to a higher level of volume on almost everything. Molasses and sugar have already advanced; tea is stiffening under remarkably light supplies, so that there is nothing but firmness to report. Payments are somewhat unsatisfactory, but after the first couple of weeks of the new year better things are expected.

SUGAR.

The improved demand noted for sugar in our last report has been well maintained, and if refiners were willing it is likely that they could book orders a considerable way ahead. The position of the raw sugar market, however, predisposes them against doing so, and they are following a conservative course in this respect. A fair quantity of refined has been moved, however, from the refineries at 4 5-8, while round lots of bright yellows have been sent out at 4c. to 4 1-8c., and lower grades at 3 1-2 to 3 3-4c. A gratifying fact also is the good demand that jobbers are receiving both on local and outside account, the movements in this connection being of fair proportions also. Advices from all primary centres continue firm.

SYRUPS.

The advance referred to last week in Barbados molasses is firmly maintained, and we hear of a round lot of Barbados changing hands at 34c. Stocks here are as we have pointed out before, very light, and holders consider their property very good, with the prospects in the immediate future of still higher prices.

Syrups have been moving fairly well also, at a range of 13-4c. to 21-4c. per lb., according to quality. American stock has changed hands at 22c. to 23c. per gallon.

TEAS.

Jobbers report orders from the country as showing a better volume, and everything points to the fact that stocks in retailers' hands throughout the country are exceptionally low. With the light stocks in first hands here, therefore, especially of low grades, a strong market is the natural sequence, and the tea market is certainly strong. In addition to the round lots that were moved last week, we hear of further business of the sort, so that it is evident that jobbers also are urgently in want of fresh supplies. Low grade Japans in straight wholesale lots have changed hands at 12c. to 14 1-2c., according to grade, and a round lot of mediums brought 17 1-2c., while fine to finest has sold all the way from 22c. to 31c. Chicago buyers took two or three lots, and a quantity comprising 160 packages were placed in Wisconsin. On the whole the week in tea has been brisk and encouraging.

COFFEES.

Coffee has shared in the attention devoted to tea, but owing to light supplies here the movement has not assumed large dimensions. The indications all favor prices being maintained, so that holders are very independent in their views. We quote Jamaica 18 1-2 to 20c., Maracaibo 22 to 23c., Rio 20 to 21c., Java 26 1-2 to 29c., and Mocha 27 to 30c.

SPICES.

Spices are strong and upward in tendency also, while a fair demand has been experienced. We quote black pepper firm at 7 1-2c., cloves 7 1-2 to 8 1-2c., and nutmegs 50 to $1, according to quality.

RICE.

The rice market is shady and unchanging, and we quote standard $3.85 to $4.25, higher grades $5 to $7.

DRIED FRUIT.

Business has not shown much change in dried fruit during the week, but a few straight wholesale parcels of off-stalk Valencia good seconds have sold at 4 1-2c., and prime 5c. net 30 days. The common stock offering here is not wanted and cannot be given away, so that it looks very much as though the fate predicted by THE GROCER at the time of its receipt here would be verified. Valencia layers have furnished quite a few

FLOUR AND FEED.

TORONTO.

Rising ideas on the part of millers are not productive of an increase in business, as sellers have resorted to this course to influence the market but have only succeeded in diminishing their sales. The export trade is now at a low ebb. Prices are as they were for flour, but have advanced on bran and shorts.

FLOUR.—City millers' and dealers' prices are: Manitoba patents, $4.60; strong bakers' $4.25; white wheat patents, $4.50; straight roller, $3.40; low grades, per bag, $1.25 to $1.50.

Car prices are: Toronto freights—Manitoba patents, $4.30 to $4.40; Manitoba strong bakers' $3.75 to $4.90; Ontario patents, $3.25 to $3.50; straight roller, $3.15 to $3.30; extra, $2.60 to $2.70; low grades, per bag, $1.00 to $1.25.

MEAL.—Oatmeal is $3.80. Cornmeal is $3.50.

FEED.—Bran is $12, shorts is $12.50 to $13 mixed feed $22, feeding corn 57 to 58c., oats 30 to 31c.

HAY.—Baled timothy is $9.

STRAW.—Is steady at $5.50 to $6.

MONTREAL.

There has been a larger business in flour all round, and although holders are asking somewhat higher prices they do not care to let a sale go past them. Local dealers and brokers are quietly laying in stocks, and show a disposition to anticipate wants much further ahead, which shows plainly that they think values are down to bed rock. We quote the following:—Winter wheat $4.25 to $4.50; spring patent, $3.25 to $4.50; straight rollers $3.55 to $3.75; extra $3.20 to $3.25; superfine $2.65 to 2.90; city strong bakers' $4.10 to 0.00; strong bakers $4.00 to $4.10.

ST. JOHN, N. B.,

The higher prices for flour has caused a little more activity for that commodity and as the market is likely to be firm, a still better demand is anticipated, it is selling here now for less than it can be landed at. Quotations given are Manitoba $5.20 to $5.30; High Grade Ontario $4.35 to $4.50; Medium Patents $4.20 to $4.30; Oatmeal is reported higher; Corn Meal steady at $2.75 to $2.85; Feed an advance of $1 per ton is reported.

sales at 6 to 6 1/4c. in round lots, a parcel of 500 boxes fetching that range.

Currants are quiet and firm at 5 1/4 to 6c., according to quality. The great bulk of the stock here is controlled by one firm, and anyone who wants supplies have to pay the price.

NUTS.

Business in nuts has been moderate, but prices are nominally unchanged. We quote: Pecans 11 to 12 1/2c., Terragona almonds 16 1/2c., Grenoble walnuts 13 1/2 to 14 1/2c., filberts 10 to 10 1/2c., Ivica 14 1/2c., Brazil 15c., marbots 12 1/2c., cocoa nuts $3.50 to $4.50 per bag of 100 for old, new $5 to $5.50.

FRUIT.

The demand for oranges has been somewhat better this week and prices are steady at the following: Fancy Floridas $3.25 to $3.50 Valencias $4.00 to $4.25 Messinas $2.50 to $2.75 Jamaica in barrels $5 to $6. Mandarins $4 in boxes and $2.25 in half boxes.

The continued cold weather has improved the demand for lemons and a fair business has transpired at the following: Messina $3.30 to $3.50, prime $2.75 to $3.00, common $2.00.

There is a fair call for figs and the market is steady to firm at 5 1/2 to 6c. in bags.

Dates meet a good demand at 5 1/2 to 6c. in boxes.

Spanish onions are steady at 80c. to $1 per crate, red and yellow stock in barrels, $2 to $2 25.

FISH.

The fish market generally is firm, both for pickled and smoked fish. We quote: Haddock 4c., cod 3 to 3 1/2c., steak cod 4 1/2 to 5c., lake trout 7c., white fish 7 to 7 1/2c., pickerel or dore 8c.; dried cod, $5.50; No. 1 green cod, $5.50; B. C. salmon, $13 per brl.; Labrador salmon, $13 to $14; No. 2 mackerel, $14 per brl.; do. $7 per half brl.; Labrador herring, $5.25 to $5.50 per brl.; C.B. and N. S. herring, $5.25 per brl.; tommy cods, $2 to $2.25 per brl.; fresh herring, $1.85 per hundred.

APPLES.

The apple market fails utterly in developing any improvement. Stocks both here and in the west are ample and holders hardly know what to do with them. That they will concede a good deal is attested by the fact of sales made to California buyers at $3 delivered, which is less than first cost at the orchard. On spot here $2.25 is certainly the extreme figure obtainable for a car lot.

POTATOES.

Potatoes are firm, two cars selling on the track here at 90c., and we quote round lots firm at 90 to 95c. per bag.

DRESSED POULTRY

The market has been firmly maintained, all receipts being steadily absorbed. We quote: Turkeys, 11 1/2 to 12c. for choice, and ordinary 10 1/2 to 11c.; dry picked chickens, 8 to 9c.; fowls, 5 1/2 to 6 1/2c.; geese 6 1/2 to 7 1/2c., and ducks 9 to 10c. The last named are very scarce.

DRESSED HOGS.

Dressed hogs continue firm and in light supply, in fact the special reference made to the situation last week is as apt to-day as it was then. We quote $8.75 to $9 as a range for car lots. A case is reported where $8.75 was offered for one car and refused, the holder wanting $8.77, while quotations from the west to operators here now are nearly equal to $9 laid down in Montreal. The ordinary jobbing demand is good on a basis of $9 to $9 25.

PROVISIONS.

There is a fair business doing in provisions but the market on the whole is quiet. The tone is very firm however. Canadian short cut is very strong, being now held at 21 to 22c. We quote as follows: Canadian short cut, per brl. $21 to $22; Mess pork, Western, new, per brl. $21 to $22.00; Hams, city cured, per brl. 12 1/2 to 13c.; Lard, Canadian, in pails 10 1/4 to 10 1/2c.; Bacon, per lb., 11 1/4 to 12c.; Lard, com, refined, per lb., 9 to 9 1/2c.

EGGS.

A brisk export demand on American account has sprung up for eggs since our last, and the market is very firm in consequence. Some five car loads go out this week to New York and Boston, but stocks here are too small to permit of much more being shipped, as it is all wanted on home account. Montreal limed are now quoted at 20 to 21c., while held fresh are firm at 23 to 24c. No southern American eggs are expected here for some time yet, as the receipts at the western and southwestern markets are light and dealers say that none can be brought to Canada until prices drop considerably.

BUTTER AND CHEESE.

Butter continues quiet but firm, with a moderate demand on local account. We quote creamery, 22 to 23c.; Townships 20 to 22c.; Morrisburg and Brockville 18 to 19c.; Western dairy 17 to 18c.

Cheese has been brisk in an export way, and now holders want fully 1/4c. more. About 10,000 boxes have been moved during the week, making some 20,000 since the first of the year, and now 40,000 is an outside estimate for the stock remaining on spot. We quote export prices from 11 to 11 1/2c.

ST. JOHN, N. B., MARKETS.

ST. JOHN, N. B., Jan. 19, 1893.

GROCERIES.

Very little if any change in groceries. Retailers report an improvement chiefly on account of better travelling, as the recent snow has greatly improved the roads and given our country cousins a chance to do their buying here, which also helps the wholesaler. Collections are quite up to expectations, and prospects for further improvement encouraging.

SUGAR—The very firm tone of the sugar market has caused a more general demand than for some time, and dealers are not very anxious to give quotations, which at present are: Granulated, 4 40 to 4 5/8c.; yellows, 3 1/2 to 3 3/4c.; extra, 3 3/8 to 3 7/8c.

TEAS—A better demand is noticed for fair to medium grades.

DRIED FRUITS—Are without any special feature, a fair trade and no change in values. Off-stalk 5 1/4 to 6c., Valencia layers 6 1/2 to 7c., dates 4 1/2 to 5c., prunes 7 to 8c., dried apples 6 to 6 1/2c., evaporated apples 9 to 9 1/2c.

EGGS—The market is firm, but small quantity offering, which is quickly bought up at prices from 21 to 23c.

BUTTER—A very limited supply, and prices likely to be higher, is selling at 19 to 21c.

CHEESE—Steady demand at regular prices 10 3/4 to 11c.

FISH—The condition of the market is unaltered, large stocks are held with small inquiry for all kinds of dry and pickled fish. Fresh smoked Haddies are higher at 6 1/4 to 6 1/2c.

In his inaugural address before the last meeting of the Toronto Retail Grocers' Association President Clark strikes the keynote of progress. He has our congratulations and best wishes of success for the course he therein briefly outlined. If he is well supported by his fellow-members—and the hearty acceptance of his views by the meeting indicates that he will be—the current year will be a bright one in the history of the Association. There is a large amount of latent usefulness in each member which can be developed by the plan Mr. Clark recommends—that is, the preparation and reading of papers upon matters of moment to the trade. It will be educative in two ways, both to those who give and to those who receive, the exercise of the observing and investigating faculties being of mental value to those preparing the papers, while the diffusion of the information so imparted will enlarge the general stock of information. The idea of a question drawer broached by Mr. Clark is also an excellent one, in fact one of the very best that could be adopted. If it is made liberal use of it will be a fertile source of enlightenment upon obscure or doubtful points, and will be a means of unifying the action of members in many ways. The practice of inviting wholesalers to address the Association upon special subjects cannot but tend to draw more closely together the wholesale and retail branches of the trade in this city, and that feature of it is as valuable as its educative purpose. THE GROCER will do all it can to further these and other useful objects of the Association, by keeping track of association movement in this country, the United States and England, and by publishing from the proceedings of other bodies whatever is analogous to doings here or is worthy of imitation. For THE GROCER believes that the more the Toronto Association improves, the more the general trade of the country will be benefited by this paper's reports of its meetings.

While the year is young it is a good time for the members of the Retail Grocers' Association, both as individuals and as a body, to insert punctuality as one of the unwritten principles of their constitution and their undeviating practice. The adoption of 10.30 p.m. as the hour of adjournment of all meetings puts it out of the question to make up by lateness of sitting for lateness of assembling. There should be a unanimous purpose on the part of members to come early. The delays in waiting for the arrival of a quorum at meetings of committees have been a cause of annoyance to such members as are usually on time, and prove that the lack of punctuality at the regular meetings is not chargeable altogether to members not in office. At the last monthly meeting, Mr. Gibson, the Vice-president of the Association, who is chairman of all committees, declared upon taking office that he would not give any indulgence to this practice during the current year. He would make it a point to be on hand promptly at 8.30 on the evening appointed for any committee meeting, and if his colleagues were not there at that time he would not remain. Let all be prompt to the minute of meeting, and business will be lighter and brighter. When the proceedings are dragged out to late hours they partake of the dull spirit of sleepy men.

* * *

A partially disabled pumping service, the upheaval of the steel conduit that carries Toronto's water supply across the bay, and the fractures at several of the joints of that conduit threatened at one time to leave the city with an empty reservoir. The week before last indeed the pressure was so feeble that people living on the higher levels were without water for domestic uses, hydraulic elevators could not be run and the city was left almost without fire protection. This last condition was the most serious. The apprehension of such danger caused some disquietude, as the most trivial fire, which could be quenched by a few pails of water, might be the beginning of a terrible conflagration through the want of a pressure sufficient to throw a stream on the flames. The fire insurance companies looked upon this state of things with some alarm, and the Board of Underwriters showed an inclination to raise the rates. This would have been most heavily felt by the business men of the city, just at a time too when they would be most likely to avail themselves of insurance protection. The city underwriters had the reservoir and pumping station inspected the other day, and as they found a great improvement in the supply, it is supposed the inspectors will not report for an increase in the rates. They will, however, recommend that the city at once secure two large steam fire engines. Until the waterworks system is in better shape, merchants in this city will need to be very careful to take no chances from danger by fire. Carelessness as to matches, stoves, furnaces, etc., may be the beginning of a disastrous ending.

The Markets and License Committee of this city has blotted itself out of existence. The question which its self-effacement brings before the interest of the local grocery trade is : Upon what authority shall its duties devolve ? It is pretty certain that they will be divided up. Some of the aldermen are apparently in favor of putting all licenses under police control. The inspection of fruit and provisions is proposed to be added to the functions of the health department. Both of these changes would probably be satisfactory to the grocers. They have long recognized the difficulty of enforcing the observance of the pedlars' by-laws, with so small a staff as the license inspector has at his command. On the other hand they look upon the police as the fittest persons to be the guardians of these laws. At present a pedlar may have a license or may not ; he may display his badge or conceal it ; he may have more assistants than his license calls for ; and may be trading irregularly under the noses of a dozen police men, and remain unmolested. The offering of diseased and contagion-spreading fruit by unwashed Italians is a matter that should be checked by the Board of Health, and long ago THE GROCER recommended that all pedlars' fruits, etc., and the conditions of storage be regularly examined by health inspectors. This would lead to the condemnation and destruction of much of the cheap and dangerous trash that now is so injurious to the trade of rent-paying grocers. The pedlars have their friends, however, in the new council. Ald. Stewart, the chairman of the committee that has just extinguished itself, has a motion before the council to remove the restrictions confining pedlars to particular streets, and another one providing that no increase be made in pedlars' licenses. Ald. Frankland has declared the licenses in many cases tyrannical. He is the mover of a resolution requiring that the license department be abolished and that the business of issuing licenses and weighing of potatoes be done by the City Commissioner's department ; that the outside inspection be done by the police, and the inspection of meat, cattle and fruit be done by the Medical Health Department.

The accident insurance companies will no doubt look with satisfaction upon the change that is proceeding by degrees in the street railroads of the country from horse cars to electric cars. The change ought to be a good thing for their business. Traders who place any value upon their delivery service will find it a prudent thing to get horse and wagon under an accident policy, and the intrepid man who has the driving of the horse had better advise with himself if it is not wiser to drive more carefully and look to safety rather than despatch in landing his parcels. People on the street report some hair-breadth escapes of reckless drivers who have tried to take precedence of trolley cars at crossings. Owners should caution drivers that this is dangerous to situation as well as life.

It is not altogether certain that the grocers of Toronto will have pure ice for their refrigerators next summer. Ice dealers, in disregard of the by-law, are cutting on the Don and other forbidden places, and the brewers are supporting them in doing so, the latter claiming that they can better afford to pay the fine than to pay the difference in the cost of ice brought from outside points. Charges have been laid before the Police Magistrate, but he has adjourned all cases until a pending appeal decided. In the mean time cutting goes on. The Grand Trunk Railway Co. has further complicated matters by withdrawing the special rate it had allowed to ice dealers, on the understanding that ice would be brought from Lake Simcoe. It now returns to the rate of 85c. a ton. Its reason for cancelling the 55c. rate is the action of the city in granting permits to cut ice on the Don and elsewhere. Another element in the caldron of trouble the ice-question is involved in has been added by the Grenadier Ice Co. A member of that company has issued a writ against the city of Toronto claiming $30,000 damages by reason of the medical health department condemning and prohibiting the cutting of ice on the Grenadier pond. The plaintiff claims that analysis has shown that the water of the pond is absolutely pure.

It is now time for Canada to stand upon her rights in the British market. There may have been a time when it was prudent to keep the term "Canadian" in the background, when either the quality of our products or the prejudice of British consumers stood in the way of a consumptive demand in the United Kingdom for goods bearing Canadian labels or brands. In those circumstances British shopkeepers found it to their interest to represent our goods as of domestic or foreign production. Thus, not so long ago, our butter was not much to our credit, and both Canadian shippers and British retailers were content not to obtrude the name "Canadian" upon consumers. Now, however, our butter is rising in the esteem of the British people and we begin to want the advertisement that should accompany its better standing. Prof. Robertson, in the report he has prepared of his visit to England, draws attention to the fact that our cheese is to a very large extent retailed as "best English." The retailers who thus deprive us of our rights are of course reaching out for high prices, but they could get them just as readily if they would give us our due. They could easily show that "best English" is no better mark than "choice Canadian," and if they would lend their influence to make the latter the distinguishing term for the best cheese they would make as much money. We object to United States shippers using the name "Canadian" to cover inferior cheese. We just as logically and as strongly object to English sellers suppressing our merit.

* * *

A reader draws our attention to the advertisement of a retail competitor in a local paper, and asks if this is legitimate business. There can be no two opinions about whether it is or not. The advertisement announces that a list of prices therein given will hold for but two hours, on Saturday evening. The prices are marked down forty to fifty per cent. below regular quotations. The advertiser takes the precaution to say the supply of goods is limited, and that therefore they will not be sold in large quantities, nor sold to other merchants. This sort of offer is used as a crowd bait. People are expected to muster in droves and make a lively two hours, not only in the lines sacrificed but in other goods as well. It is on the other goods that the salesmanship will be concentrated and the profit will be made. There will be no forcing of business in canned corn and peas at 5c. The warning of the advertisement that the stock of these cheap goods is low will come in handy to cover a timely retreat when orders are too numerous. The goods will run out, but that is no reason why the crowd should be allowed to go. They will be plied hard with offers of something else, and will probably be induced to buy liberally and pay liberally too. Such trade has its disadvantages. It does not build up public confidence in a man, and is therefore not a stable basis to go either far or long upon.

SUN-DRIED AND EVAPORATED APPLES.

The course of the dried apple market has this year been peculiar. Though the supply was large it had the benefit of a demand of unusual capacity. This latter favorable condition was due to shortage in the crop of raw material in the United States, a shortage which occurred in spots, the spots coinciding with the districts convenient for the production of dried apples and always connected with that industry. United States exporters consequently had to cast about for supplies, and that brought them on this market. Of course the price in that country ever reached a point that the people of the United States could afford to consume our apples. The duty would prevent that. But there was an unusually large quantity of sun-dried fruit bought here by United States shippers, and carried through in bond for export. Though the demand was a roomy one it did not favor any price-nursing policy on the part of holders. If the fruit could not be got at a price that would leave the shipper a margin it would be left with the holder. The bulk of the purchases have been made from country holders at $4\frac{3}{4}$ to 5c. There is still a good market, but stock appears not to be offering freely. The very large quantities already handled by buyers would indicate that this backwardness is due to the want of stock, and not to any rise in the ideas of holders. Of course the supply can be replenished. There is undoubtedly a good deal of whole fruit in the country, for which, unless it is superior stock, there is not an inviting market. It will depreciate with holding, and can be sold at about \$1 a bushel if made into dried apples. This is the most profitable way of disposing of it, and this plan will almost certainly be followed. The buyers of green fruit last fall, who had such bright visions of the future export market, often purchased at prices that could not be realized. Many of these, though they had paid their forfeit, allowed the contract to lapse and left the apples with the growers. In this way it comes about that there are considerable quantities of raw material in the country that holders had expected to get rid of at high prices early in the season. The demand will widen in spring, and it is likely there will be a place found for every quarter that can be picked up.

The call for Canadian evaporated apples has likewise been strong and steady, and has swallowed up an unusually large pack, for this year's output has been a very large one and there is a very small remnant of it left unconsumed, or at least unshipped. Its speedy absorption is also owing to the shortage in the United States crop. The price has ranged from $7\frac{1}{2}$ to 9c. But the demand has drawn a sharp distinction between old and new stock. Nobody wants old fruit, and it would be no trouble to collect five or six cars of it at easy prices, some of it being purchasable at $5\frac{1}{2}$ c. This oldstock is reminiscent of the dreary failure to effect a corner in evaporated apples a year ago. Operators bought a good deal of stock, but found that their fiat could not make the price it was to be again sold at. Exaggerated ideas spoiled the market and spoiled some of the fruit too, some of the residue now offering being rather sour smelling stock.

Dried apples have been a satisfactory line this year to the general merchant. He may not have realized a big margin of profit upon them, but they have been more readily convertible into money than most other lines of produce. Where he has taken them in trade or on account, this is no small consideration, as it enables him to bring a barter trade pretty closely to a cash basis. The fruit being marketed in the fresh state, and not held for high prices, its value was always obtained and the market was always receptive.

THE COUNTER TEA MIXER.

W. H. Gillard & Co., wholesale grocers, Hamilton, are introducing to the trade an article that certainly has not appeared before its time. It is the Counter Tea Mixer, an indispensable adjunct of the retail grocery trade. The need of such an article has been strongly felt for a long time, and it is that need which has summoned this particular Mixer into existence. It is an entirely new thing, it is admirably adapted for its purpose, a well-defined want awaits it, and it will soon over-run the whole grocery trade. The grocer now rightly looks upon his tea business as the mainstay of his trade. His customers' taste, happily run towards mixtures and thus in the direction of his own profit. People are becoming more and more sensitive to the odor and flavor of foreign substances in their tea, and the handling of fish, soap, onions, tobacco, oil, and like goods is fatal to the cleanly intermixture of different kinds of tea by the hand process. These facts have created the conditions which called for the Counter Tea Mixer, and very fully the Mixer corresponds with all the circumstances of the want it is intended to fill. Everywhere that Gillard & Co.'s travellers have shown the Mixer, it has commanded an order, though it has been but a matter of days since the travellers had samples to show.

The Mixer is made entirely of hard brass (highly polished), and with ordinary care will last a lifetime. It is handsome in appearance and an ornament to any counter. It can be placed on the scale with a counter weight and the tea weighed in the Mixer. It saves time—a pound of tea can be mixed perfectly in two seconds. A few revolutions of the Mixer and the tea is better mixed than if mixed by a scoop or by hand for half an hour. It attracts attention and increases sales. It pleases customers to see tea thoroughly and nicely mixed. The verdict of present users is, that it is the handiest article ever placed on a counter, and a grocer using it a few days would feel lost without it. Sent by express to any address on receipt of $1.50. Nickel-plated 50c. extra. Readers are referred to the advertisement on another page.

THE CHEAP VALENCIAS.

THE GROCER has referred from time to time, both specially and in its regular market reports, to the offerings of cheap trashy Valencia raisins to the trade this season, and the likelihood of importers who were tempted by the low offers and bought the goods losing money. This becomes more and more of a certainty as the season advances, for the fruit is offering for almost anything, and the unfavorable reception that it has got must be disheartening to interested importers. The fact that the fruit has to be sold, if possible, is working an immense amount of harm to business, for buyers in the country who hear of low offers at the big markets like Montreal and Toronto don't stop to consider the pros and cons of the subject, or realize thoroughly what such low figures mean, in the face of comparatively high prices on sound fruit. If so they would see at once that a seller could hardly afford to sell merchantable goods at 4c. and under with seconds regularly quoted at $4\frac{1}{2}$ to $4\frac{1}{2}$ c. in round lots from first hands in Montreal.

A comparison of the range of prices on this cheap fruit since it was first offered, considered in relation with the regular course of the market, is another argument for careful discrimination. Valencia raisins have ruled in light supply throughout the fall and winter, and the basis of value on seconds to firsts has been a pretty steady one, between $4\frac{1}{2}$ to $5\frac{1}{2}$ c., according to quality. Yet in the face of this, offers of this cheap stock have been made at steadily declining figures. On its first appearance it was offered at $4\frac{1}{4}$ c., and some were sold, but the quality was so disappointing that the buyers would not accept delivery. This was followed by offers at steady fractional declines—first to $4\frac{1}{8}$ c., then 4c., and now less than 4c. would certainly be accepted to effect a sale. It must be something very special that induces this spirit of concession, especially as several consignments of good seconds have been received and turned over between the 20th December and the present time in Montreal on a basis of $4\frac{1}{2}$ c. from first hands. Buyers no doubt can argue for themselves on these premises, and although the market cannot be called active, the moderate but steady volume of business that transpires in good to prime fruit on a fairly steady basis, infers that a good number have made up their minds and are acting accordingly. The reluctant ones will no doubt follow suit and in this event a still lower offer on the poor stock may be expected.

A BIG JUMP IN EGG PRICES.

The egg market is a decidedly interesting one at present, and some Montreal operators who got control of respectable supplies earlier in the season are correspondingly happy. The past week was one of the most successful of the season, and the wholesale turn-overs have had a very satisfactory effect on prices. A jump of from 4 to 5c. has been made. This is due principally to the demand on American account, which has averaged over 400 packages daily for the past fortnight, which means a respectable aggregate. As high as 22c. has been paid for Montreal limed, in lots, and 23c. has been made on single cases. The light supply is another strong factor for arguing higher prices, Montreal picklers claiming that they have very little more than enough to meet actual requirements. Of course the local consumptive demand is somewhat restricted on account of the advance in prices, but this does not bother holders at all, as they are confident in view of the condition of the market, of realizing their own prices.

MOLASSES A GOOD THING.

The available supply of Barbadoes molasses in Montreal at the present time is smaller than it has been in years, and holders have a correspondingly high idea of the value of their property. At the end of the year it is doubtful if there was much over 2,000 puncheons to be had. Since that time the absorption on account of the regular consumptive demand has pulled stocks down materially, so that everything will be wanted to supply the trade between now and next spring. In fact 1,000 to 1,200 puncheons is given as the stock, and as it is all in second hands and principally controlled by two French wholesale houses, it would take a considerable inducement in the shape of an advance to make them deprive themselves of supplies for the benefit of others. Accordingly no offer for a round lot will be considered now, as the steady jobbing demand to fill actual wants on the basis of 34c. is quite satisfactory to holders. In fact, there are some who calculate on the possibility of a shortage between now and the time new supplies are received in the spring, and look for higher figures. This position of affairs means some handsome profits to some Montreal dealers who bought when prices were around 28 to 29c., and the word "molasses" brings a complacent smile from some and a disappointed grimace from others. Reports differ of the margins made, but they ran all the way from $3,000 to $8,000.

ASSOCIATION ITEMS.

Here are a few of the questions asked at a meeting of a grocers' association in Michigan:

How many grocers in the city know how to run a good grocery?

What would be the result to our association if we would all change to the cash system, and not take orders?

Do grocers, as a rule, give a treat to a customer each time he pays his account—say weekly?

Is it profitable for dealers to take orders?

What makes cleaned currants worth from three to four cents per pound more than uncleaned?

What benefit does a grocer derive from cutting prices?

An agent has been employed by the Minneapolis Retail Grocers' Association to work among the grocers, to see that agreements are lived up to, and to work for the general interests of the association. So many grocers of the city appeared indifferent to their own welfare that the association found it necessary to resort to something like heroic measures to bring about a better state of things. The whole time at the last meeting was taken up in discussing the question of giving the special agent method a fair trial, and it is hoped good results will follow.

The Boston Retail Grocers' Association had a big reunion at its twelfth annual dinner last week.

A new grocers' association has been started in Brockton, Mass. The members have signed an agreement to stop giving credit to chronic dead-beats. If any member trusts a blacklisted consumer, that member is fined $25.

THE INDIAN AND CEYLON TEA CROP.

In all probability, says The Englishman, the Indian tea crop of 1892-3 will not exceed that of the previous season, and even the most sanguine can only look for an infinitesimal increase. With the prices ruling at the opening of the season such a falling off in the anticipated increment for the season of 10,000,000 of pounds would have meant ruin to many planters, but fortunately the home market during the past three months has awakened to the fact that the supply from India will be far short of that anticipated, and with Ceylon equally deficient, and China showing its annual decline in export, prices have risen. The averages realized at the last few public auctions in Calcutta must have gratified managers as well as shareholders. It may be said that the rise in price has more than compensated for the falling-off in out-turn, and that prospects for the coming season are brighter than they have been for several years past. The supply of tea is certainly not equal to the demand, and stocks at home will be depleted before the next crop can be placed on the London market. In former years, when Ceylon had not entered the arena as a serious competitor, the prospects would have been more than bright, but with this vigorous competition the spring season at home is no longer what it was for Indian planters. The new Ceylons now reach the London market at the very time when India is barely beginning to manufacture for the new season, and of necessity it will benefit first from the depleted state of the home market. But India must also gain with every pound of tea sent forward early in the season. Under the circumstances the question of pruning will occupy the serious attention of the planter during the next two months, for he must know that as he prunes so he will reap, either early or late. This is specially true of those parts where the China plant predominates. The fact to bear in mind is that in the coming season the race will be to the swift, and the advantage will rest with those who get their teas first to market. Darjeeling and the Duars are to a certain extent favorably situated in this respect. Although the heavy prices that are now being realized will more than compensate for the shorter out-turn, the remark must be taken in general sense. There are districts such as the Darjeeling Terai, where, owing to the ravages of mosquito blight, no rise in price can cover the disastrous yield of the present season. So serious, indeed, is the situation in some parts that there is nothing for it but abandonment, and that means instant sacrifice of invested capital. In many instances not a third of the estimated crop has been gathered. Mosquito blight set in unusually early, and with its appearance many gardens ceased to yield. It is no exaggeration to say that the many lacs of rupees that have been spent in opening up the Darjeeling Terai have been practically thrown away. All endeavors to deal with the blight have been unavailing, and in many instances it has been decided to allow the garden to run into jungle for a period of, say, two years. So far, the low China plant has succumbed to the attack of the pest, but in some cases even the best plant has begun to feel its effects, and the neighboring district of the Duars has this year found it spreading. Mosquito is as deadly as the leaf disease in Ceylon, and it is but poor consolation to learn that other districts have so far escaped the blight. It would surely be worth while if the Tea Association were to secure one of the abandoned gardens in the Terai, and institute at the general test a series of experiments with the object of discovering a cure for the disease. This very blight at one time threatened North Assam with ruin, and it is said to have disappeared after a few years, but nothing certain is yet known as to the causes which led to the sudden migration of this terrible pest. It is indeed lamentable to see a model tea garden, otherwise healthy and well cultivated, and to know that every shoot that appears is doomed by this plague. An expert is now in the country from the Tea Association analyzing the various soils, and this may lead to some good. But so far his services have not been directed to the district where blight is so prevalent, and which is now on the point of being abandoned wholesale. Obviously that is the point to which the investigations of the expert should be directed, for it is the latest battle-field upon which this pernicious insect has inflicted a serious reverse on human industry and enterprise.

DINNY CALLAHAN AT THE TORONTO RETAIL GROCERS' "AT HOME."

"Oi wuz to the Groshers' 'At Home' lasht noight, Moike, an' such a tolme ez Oi had—yez niver saw the loike. Oi wuz invited be the boss. Sez he, "Dinny, me bye, would yez loike to go to the ball this evenin'?" "Fwhat Ball?" sez Oi. "Why, the Toronty Retale Groshers' Annual Consert and Ball down to Mishter Harry Wibb's Atin' House," sez he. "It will be a grand trate fer yez, Dinny, Yez will see all the grate min an' mashter moinds o' the thrade there, an' the purty gurls—think o' that, Dinny; an' the atin' an' drinkin'."

"All roight," sez Oi, thinkin' o' the purty gurls an' the lushins an' that, "much obloiged to ye, Oi'm shure," an' wid that the Boss raches me out a pashteboard wid some writin' printed on.

Win Oi had the ould horse comfortably tucked away for the noight in the barn an' grabbed a bit o' tay, Oi goes to me room above the shtable an' drisses me self in me besht clothes, me softesht brogans on me fate, wid a high rollin' shtand up collar around me shwan loike nick, an' an illigant green nicktoil shpotted wid rid, an' a pair o' brown mitts on me fingers, an' shteps on the throlley an' down Oi sails to Wibb's.

Win Oi raches the Atin' House Oi walks through the dure an' up to a table where a foine lookin' gntleman wuz sittin' shtrokin' his flowin' moustache an' lookin' purty, an' whisperin' funny things to a dark haired son o' Paistoline by his soide. Ez Oi walks up the foine lookin' gntleman shtops me, an', lookin' me up an' down, sez, "Oi think yez hev mish-taken the place, moi frind, this is not a fancy driss carnival, or are yez lookin' fer yer brother freaks at the Musee?" "Bad cess to ye ye grinnin' shpalpeen," sez Oi, "d'yez know who Oi am? Oi'm Dinny Callahan as drives the delivery waggon for Patrick Doolin, the Queen shtreet grocer, an' here's me card," an' wid that Oi shlaps down the pashteboard Mr. Doolin hed given me, an' marches up wid a lot o' other fashionable ladies an' gntlemin just coming in.

Win Oi gets to the back part o' the room another illigant arishtocrat shtops me and sez, "Lave youre ulsther an' fur cap down here before interin' the ball room." "All roight," sez Oi, wid a wink. "Fhwat interist d'yez charge for four months on me coat an' cap?" He looks at me wid olys loike two saucers an' sez, "This is not York shtreet, moi frind; yez don't see three balls here—only wan," an' wid a grin loike an alligator he hands me out a shlip o' paper wid a number printed on it, an' thin Oi sees at wance it wuz a new game.

Ez Oi wint up the shtairs a'feelin' noice all drissed in me besht clothes Oi runs agin me ould Hamilton Boss, Mishter Adam Ballantine, whose beautiful shtore is the pride of John shtreet south and an ornament to the rsidents of Corktown. Wid Mishter Ballantine wuz a ladin' grocer o' the Ambitious City, Mishter Chas. Bremner. Oi wuz plazed beyant exprission to see me ould frind, an' loike the gntleman he is, he introduces me to all the grate groshers, green an' dry (an', judgin' by their looks, mosht o' them wuz very dry indade), drissed in shwallowtail coats, white gloves, an' a whole billed shirt all visble to wanst. Ah, Moike, they wuz illigant gntlemen, but they didn't seem to know fwhat to do wid their hands an' fate, they wuz shquirmen' round so an' feelin' o' their white necktoils an' shtand-up collars an' pressin' out the crases in their new shtore pants.

There wuz Mishter Booth, the re-toiled ex-president, and Martin McMillan (bless his honest sowl) sittin' on the table in the hall, handin' out programmes an' pressin' out the wrinkles in their new pants an' pressin' fresh wrinkles in the tails of their cutaway coats, both of them tryin' to look "At Home," wid the odds agin 'em tin to wan. An' then Oi wuz presented to President Clark, an' a foine gntleman he wuz, indade. He wuz a troille nervous in his new suit, but had a shmoile fur ivirbody, an' although his new kid gloves wuz two soizes too shmall an' burstin wid "suppressed feelin'," (moind the joke, Moike), he niver moinded it wan bit.

Mishter Clark took me into the concert hall an' prisinted me to His Honor Judge Gibson, the celebrated butther, eggs, an' dairy expert. Sez Oi to the Judge, win he had prodded me in the ribs, "It's a foine noight to-noight, an' it's a foine crowd yez do be havin' here." Wid a couple o' licks o' his rosy lips an' a dozen or so winks o' his ristless olys, he sez, "Yes, it's foine, very foine, an—" (stoopin' down an' wishperin' in me ears so ez Clark couldn't hear him) an' Oi did it, me an' Mills over there lanin' up agin the lunch counter. Wid a wink at Mills that gntleman comes over to us, an' Mishter Gibson introdushes me to the distinguished missionary to the pedlars.

Ah, Moike, it wuz wid feelin's of satisfaction an' proide Oi grasped the hands of the different distinguished merchant princes, an' Oi wur wizhin' yez had been wid me. But, Moike, me heart nearly burst wid joy win Oi looked around the ball room, an' me oiyes rested on the picture of beauty forninst me. Ah, Moike, yez may brag about the gurls in the west or the east or inywhere, but the shweet gurls of Toronty thet wuz at this ball war the prittlest the sun shines on. They wuz purtier than pictures in gilt frames, wid their purty drisses an' flow-ers an' plisant shmoiles.

Then there wuz the illigantest shweetest music by Glionna's (divil a bit can Oi pronounce the nagur's name) Oitalian band. Oi niver took much shtock in them Dagos, but, Moike, them fellers can make a corpse dance. Me feet wuz ristless at the ind o' the second bar.

Oi could tell yez much more o' interestin' things o' this grate ball, about the concert, the singin' of Mishter Cowan's Dimmock, the radin' an' recitin' of Mishter Smiley, and the wonderful ventriloquistic performances of Mr. Simpson, but Moike, I know yez would loike to hear about the distinguished company more than anything.

Oi wuz lookin' around the room whin me oi risted on Mishter Kinneer (Tommy) for whom yez used to travel in the city till yez asked him fur a raise, whin he foired ye to break in another unsuspectin' duck like yourself. Oi had me oiyes on him, an' thought Oi saw him lookin' about in the crowd fur a new traveller, but Oi wuz mishtaken; he wuz lookin' round for his bosom frind, Mishter Lang. Thin Oi saw Mishter Larkin in the corner of the room wid wan hand on Mishter Butcher's shoulder an' the other in his trouser-pocket, an' I knew then he wuz lecturin' on Salada tea.

Genl John Shioan wuz there an' cast-in' his beamin' shmoiles around in his usual happy manner, an' Oi noticed ivirbody wuz tryin' to shake hands wid hi to wanst. Oi did not see his partner Mishter Crowther, but wuz towld later in the evenin' that that gntleman wuz tryin' to foind the profits they had made in canned goods lasht year, but the hopeless tashk wuz loikely to make him walk more stoop-shouldered than iver.

Oi heard a frightful noise from a corner of the room an' then a breakin' o' the bass fiddle in the band. Percy Eckhardt had laughed. Mishter Eckhardt wuz relatin' to a blvy of friends how he had shtuffed Mishter Kinneer wance about the travellin' expinses of his min, how they could thravel illegantly on wan dollar per day, and Mishter Kinneer had gone right to his shtore an' charged up all back expinses, including postage on orders sint in an' car fare of his city traveller as well.

An' thin there wuz Mishter Willie an' Mashter Jamie Ince hobnobbin' wid Quartermaster Adams of the 48th Highland Regiment. Mishter Adams wuz drissed this noight; he had on his breeks—he wuz not wanderin' round in dishabile. Oi notished Mishter Adams was dancing ivery dance an' perspiring loike it wuz July 1st an' he on parade.

Thin there wuz Mishter Harry McCuaig, bither known among the byes as the "Monsoon" brand of pure Indian tay. He troid for half an hour to make me belave he wrote Ta-ra-ra-boom-de-ay. He left early in the evenin'. He intinded goin' to Brantford.

Mishter Boomer, like Mishter Crowther, wuz conspicuous by his absence. He was at the Athenaeum Club practishin' a new walk, but Willie Warren towld me it is a hopeless job; he had been tryin' to inshtuct him for several years. Another prominent gntleman, whose prisence I noticed by his absince, was Joseph Fisher Eby, but Mishter John I. Davidson towld me at supper time that he wuz out huntin' up votes for the Board of Thrade election in the interests of Mishter E. B. Osler.

Moike, it wuz a grate soight to see Mishter Gibson arrum in arrum wid the grate Kurnel Davidson of the 48th Regiment, introducing the grand warrior to the ladies an' gntlemen, an' gainin' reflected honor in the transaction. It wuz a grate noight fur Mr. Gibson; he wuz makin' himself solid wid ivirbody—the nlt ilections are comin' on.

An, Moike, yez ought to ha' seen the liberality o' the Toronty Biscuit and Confectionery Co. The whole gang wuz there, up in the shmokin' room, lookin' at the purty picture cards Mishter Wibb had forgotten to take off the tables, an' how the progrissive young hustlers wuz dalin' out cigars, at their own expense, too, d'ye moind that. They handed me wan, but Oi wuz sober an' didn't shmoke it. Oi'm kapin' it fur you, Moike, yez hev a strong shtomick.

But, Moike, the greatest soight of this mimorable noight wuz win Mishter Tommy Kinneer and Mishter J. W. Lang wuz sittin' at the table together in the dinin' room, atin' so ppaceable loike an' frindly. Think o' that Moike. It wuz a touchin' soight, an' Oi had to lave the table an' go out into the hall an' shld tears o' joy. Thin there wuz Archie Hutchinson, wid a package of St. Lawrence Corn Starch stickin' out of his trousers' pocket. Oi wuz kapin me oi on Archie; he's a loikely lad, win there's purty gurls about. Archie was tryin' to thrade a package of cookin' starch for a bar o' Surprise Soap with Mr. Wright, but Henry towld him it wouldn't wash—manin' the soap, af coorse.

Ah, Moike, Oi could kape yez interested all noight, there wuz so much to see an talk about, but whin Oi see ye agin' next summer at the Groshers' Picnic O'll tell ye all about the greatest and best At Home iver held by the Toronty Retale Groshers' Association. Yure frind, DINNY CALLAHAN.

P. S.—Oi wuz nearly forgotten something v'ry important. Mishter Richard Donald, jr., wuz there, too, but in a very inconspicuous attitude, and not wanst durin' the whole blessed evenin' did Oi hear that basement voice o' his castin' the pearls o' his wisdom before the assembled thousands. An' thin, ez I wuz lookin' pasht Mishter Donald Oi sees Mishter Stephen Hustwitt, the great tea reformer, down on his knees, down on his knees before Mishter W. G. Campbell openin' up a tea debate wid prayer. Ah, it wuz very touchin' indade.—D.C.

CHOOSING A COST MARK.

Ever since the storekeepers bought at wholesale and sold at retail, it has been a time-honored custom, to make the cost and selling price upon articles for sale. That these marks, or at least the cost mark, might be clear and enlightening to the merchant and his employees, while baffling and untranslatable to the rest of the world, considerable ingenuity is sometimes employed, but the average man is content to take some easily rememberable word having ten letters to represent the ten Arabic numerals.

The choice of a cost mark is an easy matter. The most common thing is the first ten letters of the alphabet. Next to that the last ten. But these are quickly guessed. Better than these are words (one or more) which have ten letters. All that is necessary is to be careful to choose a word in which there is no duplicate letters. For instance:

1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 0

will not do, because 2 and 7 are represented by the letter R. Substitute Quick for Brisk, and the cost mark will be all right.

1892 was presidential year, and a political cost mark was appropriate. Here is

1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 0
R E P U B L I C A N

That's a good one, easily remembered, and all right if capitals are used to express the cost. If small, or, as printers say, "lower case," letters are written, there may be some confusion, unless care is taken to make a distinction between the "e" and "i" and between the "u" and "n."

If your predilections are for the opposite party you might use

1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 0
D E M O C R A T I K

You will notice that this is spelled with a "K." That saves the word, for a repetition of the letter "C" would destroy its usefulness for this purpose.

If you are leaning toward the Prohibition party this might suit you:

1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 0
B A D W H I S K E Y

Here are a few words or phrases which are used for this purpose. A merchant must be very particular if he cannot be suited in such a list. You might get a Snng Profit or a Cash Profit. If you keep a Gainful Job, you must stick to the Big Factory. If you are a Big Scholar you should be an Elucidator of what is Profitable. Keep in mind the Importance of attending to your own business. Keep away from the law. Don't be So Friendly with the disciples of Blackstone as to get upon the wrong side of the Prison Gate.

Don't Be Lazy. Bear in mind the Importance of Industry. My Wife Joan, who formerly lived in Charleston, but whom I married in Cumberland, says: "Now Be Sharp. Don't neglect your store unless You Are Sick. Don't let your Fish Tackle draw you away from your business. If you do, you will find that your Corn Basket will be empty, that you cannot even afford Brown Sugar in your coffee, and that Cigar Smoke will be an unattainable luxury."

A shoe dealer can easily remember Kip Brogans or Tan Blucher. A horseshoer can readily recall Blacksmith, and he frequently shoes a Black Horse. If he is a negro he would be a Black Shoer. A poker player is familiar with a Big Jack Pot, but he cannot use a Faro Bank without changing one letter and adding one. Wall street operators may remember Blue Friday, and Bucketshop proprietors likewise.

The question, Can You Swim from Perth Amboy to Leavenworth? contains three cost marks. The Christian Endeavorer may make use of the phrase He Is My Rock.

When it comes to proper names, one can readily be found which will answer the requirements. One of the largest dry goods stores in the Union uses the name James Worin.

More than one firm uses the name Jane Bishop or Bishop Jane. The writer knows a David Wilson who uses Wilson Dave, and also another whose name, John Bagley, is his cost mark.

Better than any of these, however, is a lot of letters which will not spell anything. Such a cost mark is a little more difficult to memorize, but once learned it is better, as it lessens the chances of guessing or making it out. I have heard of Wig Bui Kymp being used for this purpose.

Another way is as follows: If an article cost $3.50 the cost is made by adding one to each of the numerals, and placing 1 each side of it, thus:

1 4 6 1 1

This is quickly legible to the initiated, but baffling to the guesser.

A very good plan is to draw two upright lines, with two across them, thus making spaces for the nine numerals, thus:

The figures can be arranged to suit. The symbol that surrounds the figure is used to represent that figure. For instance, a figure like U with square shoulders would represent 4, and one like L would mean 6, the square would stand for 9. Either an O or an X could be used for the cipher.

This scheme may be modified by turning the figures cornerways, in which case the hieroglyphics would resemble V or A or portions of a diamond. Such a list should satisfy the demand of any reasonable person in need of a cost mark. There are thousands of others, but enough have been given to show what can be used. If there are none there which suit the reader, he is invited to hunt one up, or make one to suit himself.—Ex.

OLD STOCK.

Some stores never have any. Their owners have found that it pays to keep clear of unsaleable or unseasonable goods. There is no money to be made in carrying goods from one season to another. Just now the columns of the daily papers are loaded with announcements of reductions in the price of winter goods. Clearing-out sales are the order of the day. The knife goes in regardless of cost, and prices are made that will be certain to draw purchasers. Fortunately, grocers are not so much troubled with goods getting out of style, as are dealers in articles of wear but many do have more or less stock of unseasonable goods.

It frequently happens that when certain articles are in season and selling briskly, the dealer forgets that the demand is limited, and so in the full flush of a brisk trade he orders largely, to find later that the demand has suddenly stopped and he has a liberal quantity of merchandise to carry for six months or a year. That means a loss unless they can be pushed into consumption at a reduced price. Look out that a stock of domestic dried fruits is not on hand when hot weather sets in. Have the canned goods well reduced by the time fresh vegetables and fruits are generally consumed. Avoid an overstock of farinaceous goods in summer. Look out that olive oil, sauces, pickles and other goods liable to injury from heat are not exposed to the direct rays of the sun, nor placed on high shelves subjected to a high temperature. Unsalable stock is made in that way. Avoid selling goods at any figure, that are so damaged as to be worthless. For instance, yeast cakes. We recall a firm who thought it smart to place a pile of stale yeast cakes on the counter, labeled at half price. They sold quickly, but there went up a hue and cry from their customers, of spoiled batches of bread which made havoc with their flour trade.

In placing new purchases in stock see to it that they are not put in front of stock on hand. It frequently happens that goods on the back of a shelf stay there for months and become unsaleable, through the custom of not bringing the earlier purchase to the front and keeping the later goods in the rear.

A constant supervision of the cellar, the storeroom, out-of-the-way shelves, underneath counters and out-of-the-way places is imperative if the quantity of unsaleable stock is to be kept at a low point. Interest adds to the cost of slow-selling stock without remorse, as it does to fresh goods. The moral is, keep stock fresh and moving.—American Grocer.

The order issued by the Canadian Pacific railway some time ago prohibiting passengers from travelling by freight trains is disapproved by the Winnipeg Board of Trade. It is claimed to be a hardship to commercial travellers, who are thus compelled often to drive from one town to another, and the effect on business is already felt by the wholesale houses.

TO INCREASE THE SUPPLY OF HOPS.

Hon. Messrs. Bowell and Angers were waited upon on Tuesday by a deputation representing the pork packing interests of Ontario, and consisting of J. W. Flavell, of Toronto; F. W. Fearman, of Hamilton, and C. G. Wilson, of Ingersoll. They represented that the pork packers of Canada are not able to obtain a continuous supply of hogs of Canadian growth for the purpose of keeping their factories running all the year round. In fact, this point was recognized by the Government some years ago, and in order to meet the needs of the pork packing interests a concession was made by which they were enabled to import hogs from the United States in bond and ship the pork out of the country on the basis of 60 pounds for every 100 pounds live weight on hogs up to 200 pounds, and 65 pounds on hogs over 200 pounds. About six months ago an inspector was sent through western Ontario on the report of the prevalence of hog cholera in the United States to see that the quarantine regulations were strictly enforced, and object of the deputation to the Ministers was to urge some relaxation of these regulations in order to enable them to keep their establishments running during the winter. They promised that every care would be taken that the animals would be properly handled, and be put through their establishments with the least possible delay. Both Ministers promised that the request would be taken into consideration.

THE SITUATION IN PRUNES.

All the indications point to a high market for prunes during the remainder of the crop year, the stock of all varieties being small, with primary sources advising very limited quantities available for market purposes. The year 1892 goes upon record with very poor crop results in all producing countries. Bosnia and Servia, the heavy producing districts of previous years, comes to the front with a very small surplus, and packers there have elevated their ideas to such a point that the former common article that was sent out from that section of Europe is now looked upon in the light of a comparative luxury. Up to about three years ago, the bulk of this the Turkish crop, was sent to the markets of the world in the unwieldy casks, but since that time the packers of that country, stimulated by competition from France and California, have used their best endeavors to raise the quality of their goods in the estimation of consumers, and in this they have proved very successful. In previous years there was little or no attention given to the size of fruit, the crop being collected and packed into casks regardless of quality, but assorting the various sizes has now been adopted, and in marketing the crop purchases and sales are made wholly upon this basis. Boxes are found to meet with most favor in the trade, and under the name of Sultana a very considerable portion of the crop is now packed, assorted in sizes running from 60 to 100 to the pound. Bags are also a popular package with many in the trade, but in putting the goods up in this way the importance of sizes is kept well in mind, as upon such depends the value of the fruit in the eyes of importers. The old method of casks is, in fact, rapidly giving place to the smaller and more convenient packages, and in time the former will drop out entirely as a means of conveying the crop to this or any other market of the world. Going back to the visible supply of this class of fruit we would say that the quantity upon spot and afloat, so far as the cables have advised, includes 14,000 boxes, 10,000 bags and 500 casks, the latter including a line of 300 carried over from the previous season.—N. Y. Commercial Bulletin.

THE MAN IN HIS OWN LIGHT.

The mission of the trade press and the mercantile organizations—what they might accomplish—is thwarted by the large percentage of men who have drifted into business who cannot be brought to see advantage of the most advantageous plans and lines of united effort.

There are two classes of men among the ranks of this detrimental influence in our mercantile circles. One is that pitiable class who would do better if they knew better, or, in other words, that deplorably ignorant element who are simply business machines, continuing in the groove in which they were started by long superintended practice in a clerkship, and, consequently, men who have not sufficient breadth of intellect to comprehend a progressive idea. Then we are cursed with another class who either from a purely selfish or a mulish, stubborn motive, refuse to be convinced of what their better judgment tells them is the proper course to pursue. The first we pity, but for the second we can only have contempt.

Men are in business for legitimate profit, yet many times they throw an impassable barrier across the shortest route to success by taking the most absurdly foolish and boyish views of their own work. A hundred little jealousies arise to prevent the unity of action which should exist. This man is afraid that if he should enter into any compact or agreement it might deprive him of his personal liberty. While he has no conception of the grandeur and sublimity of thought, the scope of freedom and ennobling influences contained in the idea of a manly man in the enjoyment of personal liberty, yet somewhere he has absorbed in a spongelike manner, from contact with others the dimly defined concept of a curtailed personal liberty, whenever he allows himself to agree to any proposition which will help others as well as himself. Hence it is that we find this man blocking the wheels of progress to the most plausible plan of enterprising procedure. His neighbor has read somewhere that a monopoly is not quite the thing, and, consequently, with the heroic flourish of a martyr to the right, he refuses to act in accordance with the desire of the majority because it might appear as a monopoly working against the few. So we will find all these characters doing their little to prevent the most desirable outcome to any question at issue.

Men who stand in their own light. How well this homely old proverb expresses the action of many of our professed business men, whom we would naturally suppose possessed sufficient common sense to lead them to change their position when they found that their own shadow was casting darkness and a prophecy of failure along their business path, or at least making it more difficult to travel. No matter what you bring before a body of men you will invariably find these "kickers." Take the most simple cases for illustration. Start out in your own city, and work continuously from now until the middle of next summer, when the thermometer stands at 100 degrees in the shade, trying to get every man in the grocery business to see the advisability of and to sign an agreement promising to close at a seasonable hour during the warm weather, and just as sure as you make the trial in this or any other city, or even in the village containing ten merchants, you are sure to find the usual percentage of "sore heads" who will refuse, upon one pretext or other, to agree to the most reasonable proposition.

It is only necessary to pay one visit to any mercantile organization in our city upon any regular meeting night to hear a "holy howl" go up regarding poor profits, cutting of prices, etc. This discordant yell of dissatisfaction is about the most unanimous expression you can get out of the assembly. Every man agrees that it is an evil that should be corrected, but when you come to discuss ways and means, and lay plans before these same men for their consideration, plans which would, if adhered to, to a large extent obviate the existing trouble, it is quite a different thing, and the man who stands in his own light, and is always present at these meetings, is sure to come to the front with his nonsensical ideas on his narrow, contracted, selfish prejudices, and do all in his power against the accomplishment of the very result he claims to desire. If his influence stopped here it would not matter, but it does not. Take, for instance, a case like this. The members of a mercantile organization, or, rather, a majority of them, agree to fix a certain selling price upon some article handled by every one of them. This the majority thinks the best method of regulating an evil which is depriving each of his legitimate profit for handling the goods, whereupon Mr. Sorehead rises to state that he will not agree to such a proposition, as it will deprive him of his personal liberty. He wants to fix his own prices, and is going to do it if he chooses. Of course, he wants it understood that he is not one of the foolish merchants who "cut" the living profits out of business, but he wants his liberty, and if he wants to sell Mrs. B. one article below what he should, in hopes he can sell her another at an exorbitant profit to make up, he is not going to enter into an agreement which will prevent him doing so. This is the character who makes utterly worthless the effort of the others to do business on a business basis. He sells his articles at the price he desires, and while he is doing this his neighbor sells the very article he gets a good price for at a cut rate. Now, the result is very evident, for in the near future Mrs. B. informs her friend, Mrs. A., that article number one can be had at a much lower price of her merchant, while Mrs. A. in return gives the information that she knows where she can buy article number two for half the money, and our "cutting soreheads" reap the harvest.

The only remedy possible in the case is for the wholesaler and manufacturer to protect the majority by refusing to sell to the few who persist in standing in their own light.

Aside from this, however, the mercantile organizations have a work to perform. What is the use of organization if it counts for nothing in actual results? If a resolution is passed by a majority and a minority refuses to be governed by it, then the sooner the organization respectfully requests the resignation of these "sorehead" characters the better. Let our business men who profess to be united for mutual advancement, act like men in the transaction of their business and be governed by the voices of the greater number.—Merchant Sentinel.

The business men of Sarnia are trying to organize a board of trade.

George M. Wilkinson, one of the oldest merchants in Kingston, died last week.

W. W. Ogilvie has been unanimously elected president of the Montreal Board of Trade.

The first lot of lobsters from down the bay of Fundy, arrived by schooner in St. John from Musquash last week.

Frank W. Smith, with the wholesale grocery firm of Smith & Burton, Brandon, Man., is on a visit to his uncle, S. D. Biggar, Hamilton.

Fire broke out on Friday morning in Thomas Doyle's grocery and liquor stores, Halifax. It and the contents were totally destroyed.

Old people with impaired digestion are exceptionally fond of Burnham's Clam Bouillon; its continued use gives them new life and vigor.

It is understood that large quantities of British Columbia canned salmon, the anticipated pack of '93, have been contracted for at good prices.

D. Weismiller wants to sell his Kippen business. His new venture at Hensall has grown so rapidly that it gives him all he can do to manage it.

B. Tibbetts & Son, of Alymer, have purchased the grocery business of J. E. Morrison there, and will take possession at once. Mr. Morrison will remove to Brantford.

The editor of the New England Grocer may not have noticed it himself, but it will be apt to strike his readers that the N. E. G. of the 13th inst. is a specially good number.

John Curtin, for many years bookkeeper in the grocery store of Frank Smith & Co., and the London successors of that firm, John Garvey & Co., died at his home north of Toronto on Friday last.

If those people who have been obliged to discontinue using tea and coffee will take Burnham's Clam Bouillon instead, they will enjoy it quite as well if not better, and it will tone up your stomach in a short time.

At the annual meeting of the Edwardsburg Starch Company, the following board of directors was elected: Richard Bolton, Warden King, Robert Anderson, Wm. Strachan, George F. Benson, W. E. Cheese and John Fairbairn. Mr. Richard Bolton was elected president and Mr. Warden King vice-president.

The Norland mills Norland, Ont. were reduced to ashes last week. The origin of the fire is supposed to have been from the chimney in the top storey of the flour mill. The loss on flour mill, about $6,000.

Robert Millar, merchant and postmaster of Millarton, Ont., died the other day after a long period of illness. Mr. Millar belonged to one of the oldest families in Bruce county, and was highly respected by all who knew him.

There appears to be considerable dissatisfaction among importers in Winnipeg at the tardy manner in which entries are passed through the Custom house. There is said to be a good deal of friction between the Customs clerks.

A farmer from Elora writes to the Guelph press warning farmers to be on the outlook for sharpers who are operating in that section of the country. They are shoddy cloth peddlers, and it is said they can fleece the farmers before their eyes.

A gang of counterfeit coin-makers are at work in the neighborhood of Lancaster, near Kingston, and have succeeded in floating a good deal of "stuff" around. They are making quarters and half dollar pieces, and it is said they have a dollar piece out.

A fire broke out at Miami, Man., at 2 o'clock, Jan. 11. Collins & Munro, general merchants, building and stock were all destroyed. This firm carried insurance to the amount of $4,500 on building and contents. Loss about $3,000 on building, and $6,000 on stock.

The nominations for the Montreal Board of Trade officers have been made. The following were declared elected without opposition:—President, Mr. W. W. Ogilvie; 1st vice-president, Mr. J. A. Cantlie; 2nd vice-president, Mr. W. C. Munderloh; treasurer, Mr. Edgar Judge.

D. R. Wilkie was unanimously elected President of the Toronto Board of Trade to succeed H. N. Baird. Hugh Blain, of Eby, Blain & Co., was also re-elected first vice-president without opposition. William Ince and John I. Davidson are among the nominees to the Council.

A large number of the business men of Wingham met A. C. Strathdee, agent of the G.T.R., at the council chamber there the other day, and presented him with a kindly worded address. Mayor Clegg occupied the chair, and the recipient made a neat reply. Mr. Strathdee has been removed to Brantford.

In the Quebec Legislature last week Mr. Auge moved a second reading of his bill respecting the early closing of shops, but just as the Speaker was putting the motion to the vote, Mr. Martineau rose and moved the six months' hoist, seconded by Mr. Kennedy. Mr. Martineau was about to speak to his motion, when Mr. Auge raised the objection already made that his bill was not printed in both languages. He therefore asked permission to withdraw it. Leave was granted and the bill withdrawn.

Price & McKay, general merchants, Estevan, Assa, have sold out their stock, plant and buildings to Lindsay & Patterson, of Stonewall. They found that owing to their large ranching business they could not devote sufficient time to this business, hence the sale.

Charles P. Hebert, of Hudon, Hebert & Co., wholesale grocers, Montreal, declined the nomination and the certainty of election to the first vice-presidency of the Board of Trade of his city, owing to his intention of being absent the greater part of the current year.

Norwich, Ont., came close to being wiped out by a fire on the 16th inst. Among the sufferers were C. Henderson & Co., general merchants, who had their plate glass windows badly damaged. None of the other numerous losses belonged to the general store or grocery trade.

The boys who robbed the grocery store of Mr. Dunfee in Port Hope are now reaping their reward. The older one, Lowe, 17 years of age, was sentenced to a year in the Central Prison. The other, a boy 15 years of age, named Black, gets five years in the Penitentiary Reformatory.

James Rodger, manufacturers' agent, Amherst, N.S., was here this week. He represents D. S. Perrin & Co., confectioners, London, Can.; W. A. Bradshaw & Co., Ammonia Soap; Simcoe Canning Co., Simcoe, Ont.; Joseph Burnett & Co., extracts and toilet soaps, Boston; also Wright & Copp, Toronto, for the sale of MacLaren's Imperial cheese, and the T. A. Snider Preserve Co.'s soups, catsups, etc.

firms, the Hawaiian Commercial Company, some time ago found it necessary to levy an assessment of $5 per share, where in former years it had paid dividends. A very large number of the shareholders have refused to pay this assessment and a movement is apparently on foot to resist its imposition.

An old mercantile house of St. John's, Nfld., H. & L. Tessiers, have assigned, with liabilities stated at about $800,000. Their London agents will be the heaviest losers. The Newfoundland creditors, it is said, will not be seriously embarrassed by their losses. Speculations in the fish trade are given as causes of the heavy losses. The house has been in existence upwards of 50 years.

Mr. Devitt, grocer, Berlin, Ont., has discovered how he was losing money. A boy was the culprit. He would go the grocery store every day while either the proprietor or the clerk was alone in the store and ask for coal oil. As no oil was kept in the store the person who was in charge would go over to a hardware store next door to get the oil. Being left alone in the store the boy would have full access to the till, and he never lost an opportunity. Mr. Devitt thinks he stole at least $50.

Discussing the proposal to pass a Dominion insolvency law, the St. John Telegraph remarks that by it Toronto and Montreal wholesalers and manufacturers hope to be placed in a more favorable position with respect to maritime debtors than they now are. This, says the Montreal Gazette, about describes the situation. The western wholesalers hope, by an insolvency law, to secure the same share of a maritime insolvent's assets, when he owes them money, as his local creditors obtain. They do not ask any more, and they ask this because as the law now is they very rarely can obtain it.

Dawson & Co., wholesale fruit merchants, of this city, held an auction sale of fruits on Tuesday last, comprising lots of oranges, lemons, and Spanish onions. The oranges were large sizes, some being wasty stock and therefore not of the value of good smaller sizes. They sold chiefly to the wholesale trade and brought from $1.85 to $2.85. There were fifty boxes of lemons on the catalogue for sale, and two small lots brought $3 to $3.05 respectively. The remainder was withdrawn because of the sales being below value. One lot of Spanish onions, 5 boxes, brought 55c.; the next was withdrawn on account of sale being below value.

THE GROCER acknowledges with best thanks the receipt of a very handsome pocket memorandum book in maroon-colored, pebbled leather binding, bearing on the cover-flap the impress of the Pure Gold Manufacturing Co., of this city, whose compliments accompany the gift. Merchants who are favored with this memento of pleasant business intercourse will find it as much designed for service as for show. It is a compact little book, its fine, liberal-sized pages lying closely together and affording store-room for a good budget of notes. The paper is so firm that the friction of page surfaces will not easily efface entries. A pencil is attached.

Owing, doubtless, to the abolition of the sugar duties, the importation of this commodity in its various forms shows a large increase compared with 1890, the last complete year in which the duties were in force. The comparative figures are:

	Lbs.	Value.
1890.....	189,282,237	$5,580,574
1892.....	258,642,211	6,913,553

During the year 9,929,616 pounds of tobacco, snuff and cigarettes were manufactured in Canada, about the same quantity as in 1891; and 107,927,813 cigars were manufactured, an increase of 7,000,000. The following table shows the annual consumption, per head of population:

Year.	Tobacco.
1890.....	2,143 lbs.
1891.....	2,292 lbs.
1892.....	2,291 lbs.

The Halifax Retail Grocers' association held a meeting the other night, which was largely attended. They decided to have their sleigh drive (sleighting permitting,) on Monday, the 23rd inst., starting from their rooms at St. Mary's hall, at 7 o'clock, sharp. The committee having the matter in charge are Edward Fenton, J. J. Skerry, Jas. A. Gass, E. R. Wright, Andrew Hubley and W. E. Crowe. An enjoyable time was put in. This committee had charge of the first annual drive and they made it an unqualified success.

Speaking recently with a grocer about the evils of the trade, etc., he remarked that customers' dogs were about the biggest nuisance he had to contend with. Said he: "I lost two customers last week because I would not allow their pet dogs to do just as they pleased in my store; I kicked them out, and out walked the customers." Hereafter he will have a plaster of paris dog on his counter labelled, "This is the only dog allowed in the store." Some of the grocers would do well to keep their own cats and dogs out of the store. Dogs in grocery stores can be dispensed with.—National Grocer.

It will be remembered that last November it was cabled from England that a family in Bradford had been poisoned by eating canned Canadian lobsters. Hon. Mr. Tupper, anxious for the credit of the Canadian pack, requested the High Commissioner to investigate the case. Sir Charles Tupper has done this, and has now reported that the tin of lobsters which caused the trouble was of the Star brand, packed by D. M. Loggie, of Chatham, N.B. It was found that there was nothing whatever the matter with the solder or other material used in the can, and there was no arsenical poisoning. The fact of the matter was that the lobsters were putrid and should not have been used as food at all. The can had in some manner become punctured and air had been admitted, which, of course, spoiled the fish and it should not have been used. No blame at all appears to attach to the packer.

A fire broke out in Caledonia, Ont., on the 19th inst. Hull & Old, flour dealers, lost their stock, which was barely covered by $1,000 of insurance.

G. J. Troop has been elected president, and James Morrow and Michael Dwyer, first and second vice presidents respectively of the Halifax Board of Trade.

Thos. Campbell, of the old established firm of Campbell, McNeil & Co., Keene, Ont., died suddenly at his residence on Monday, after a short illness, aged 67 years. Death was due to heart failure.

The Sydenham Valley Canning Company's factory, owned by Skinner, Ayres & Co., of Wallaceburg, was destroyed by fire on Monday morning. Loss $13,000, insured for $9,000. Cause of fire unknown.

The Western Milling Co., of Regina, N. W. T., favors THE GROCER with two very handsome office hangers. In one, the picture is "Sweet Violets" in the other it is "We'd Better Bide A Wee." There is no danger of these pictures being put on one side. There is sure to be a rush for them as soon as the company begin to distribute, for they are certainly fine shop ornaments.

We regret to record the death of William Isaac Palmer, one of the founders of the celebrated biscuit firm, which occurred on the 8th inst. at Reading, England, from peritonitis after an illness of only a few days. Mr. Palmer, who was in his sixty-ninth year, was a member of the Society of Friends and a generous supporter of temperance and philanthropic movements.

Co-operative stores have been found from police court prosecutions, to be as guilty of illegality as private traders, and though during the year, allegations have been made by interested persons that such concerns were more honest and showed better value than those of the legitimate shopkeeper, facts have proved distinctly to the contrary. During the year, the public have also had plenty of illustrations of the unsound commercial methods of these stores. Several of them have gone into liquidation, owing to the dishonesty of officials and the lack of public support, whilst the exposure of the high prices charged by the stores, as compared with those of the private trader, have no doubt told in favor of the latter. Some of the limited liability concerns that have assumed the title of co-operative stores, have also during the year collapsed, bringing disastrous results to shareholders, although enriching that commercial vampire—the swindling promoter.—Manchester Grocers' Review.

Competition is keen and active and the only way to meet it successfully is to buy from the best houses, and at lowest prices.

A PLACE FOR EVERYTHING.

One of the best things in any store is order. If everything is out of order it will be hard to find what is wanted when the dealer comes to look for it. He may look as he will, but in a disordered store he will have a hard time to lay his hands on the article sought after.

This is particularly true in the case of articles for which there is not much call. They have been put away because they are not in active demand and they are put away so effectively that the dealer can't find them—especially if he is looking for them. If he does not look for them they will probably be bobbing up all the time.

It is a very good idea to be methodical in all things pertaining to store management. By this it is not meant that a dealer should get into a rut and never get out, but that all things should be kept in even running order. Every piece of machinery should work in unison with every other piece, so that the whole mechanism is perfect.

Have "a place for everything and everything in its place," and then there will be little friction. Fix in the mind the places in which certain articles are kept, so that you can remember whether in the store or not. If this rule be always observed, there will be no hunting at random all over the store to find what a customer calls for.

However, very few dealers are so careless about the management of the goods on the shelves and in the show cases where they can find them readily as they are about keeping their papers in order. There is perhaps nothing that is more important and nothing that is so much neglected.

First, in regard to business letters. A small country merchant may not get a great many letters, and for that reason he thinks there is no use in being systematic about keeping them in order. Maybe he carries them about in his pocket until that gets full, and then he puts them on his desk or table without filing them at all. The letters may not seem of special importance at the time, but they may prove very important at some future time.

After a letter has been carelessly thrown aside it is very easy to have it lost. It may be brushed off the table accidentally or it may be blown off by a gust of wind. It is then swept up with the refuse paper and that is the last of it. It may be very important for reference, but that does not bring it back again.

If a merchant does not have enough correspondence to need a file—which is improbable—he should at least have a box, or a receptacle of some sort to put all his letters in. Then if anything comes up in which the letters may be of use they are easily referred to. They should be just as carefully kept as notes and receipts.

And letters are not the only articles that should be filed and kept track of. There are circulars of some sort coming every day. Now, I feel sure that half or two-thirds of these find a resting place in the waste basket. This may be all right in a great many cases, but there are cases where the circulars should be preserved. If they relate to anything handled by the merchant or anything pertaining to his line of goods they ought to be kept, in case he should want to refer to them again. He may not want anything described in the circular at the time it comes, but after it is gone beyond his reach he may have use for it, and will not remember the address so that he can get another. If it is preserved the merchant may find it very useful at some future time.

Then there is another class of mail which ought to be cared for even more carefully, and that is the catalogues that come from manufacturers and jobbers. They are prepared and published at great expense and are expected to give information which will save a great deal of correspondence.

It is a good plan to make a place for these catalogues and price lists on some shelf where they will be easy of access and still not be in the way. Some of these lists are very valuable and give information not obtainable elsewhere, so that their loss would be a source of regret. "Oh, well," some may say, "if I lose this I'll send and get another when I want it." Yes; that is all right, but it is sometimes easier said than done. I've had a little experience in that line myself and I have been disappointed a few times, in not being able to get another catalogue when I wanted it, and wanted it badly, too.

I think that we dealers are too apt to think that the wholesalers and jobbers exist solely for our convenience, and we sometimes take too many liberties. We must remember that they have greater risks and more capital at stake than we have, and their interests ought to be respected once in a while. So all dealers ought to take care of lists of goods which are sent to them, and when they want to ask questions about articles handled or want some information about ordering, terms, or whatnot, let them go to the catalogue, and ten to one they will find what they wanted printed therein.—Ex.

MEND YOUR WAYS.

Some business men spend so much time in growling over the trade situation and outlook that opportunities continually slip by them. If they would hustle more and talk less, the causes of their complaints would soon disappear.—Merchant's Review.

The advice contained in the above paragraph is applicable to a host of men in every section. The biggest growlers always inhabit the most demoralized establishments. Their stock is in poor shape, methods slovenly, business habits destructive. They are never prompt, never take account of stock, and, in all human probability, never advertise.

One way to win custom and sell goods, is to keep—always keep one's merchandise in a neat, clean and saleable condition. A stock so kept recommends itself.

Another way, an auxiliary to the first, is to receive one's customers with ready smiles instead of frowns, and show them one's goods confidently, anticipating a sale, as it were. Cheerful good nature, backed by a well-conditioned stock and a known reputation for enterprise and fair-dealing, keep the brow furrowless and relegate "hard times" to the indefinite backwoods. Many a man's downfall is due to slovenly business habits. The world loves indications of prosperity. No matter how dull the times or slack the trade, keep the stock in shape and whistle for fairer winds.—Commercial Tribune.

POINTS FOR CLERKS.

"It would be well for the young men of to-day to take my recipe for becoming prosperous," said a Boston merchant. "I began life at the very bottom rung of the ladder, but with a determination that I would succeed if such a thing were possible with the talent that I possessed. Early in life I came to the conclusion that economy was the first great essential in establishing a fortune, and that labor was the second. I banished from my mind all other considerations when I began to work upon the road that I felt sure would lead to the goal of which I was in search. I remember very distinctly going down Marshall street one day and having my attention attracted by a most tempting display in a confectioner's window. I had what is known as a very sweet tooth, and I brought up standing before the sweet collection as if suddenly arrested by some irresistible force. My hand immediately found its way to the pocket that carried my meagre hoardings, and, before I really knew what I was doing, I had invested two cents in butterscotch. When I got back into the street I began to have a full realization of what I had done, and it is safe to say that no candy ever entered a boy's mouth that was so little relished as was my butterscotch. I regretted that investment for years, and whenever the temptation again came upon me while passing the store, I put it away instantly. Keeping on with this line of strict economy, I found myself at last in a position to go into business. Then, however, I commenced to feel that capital alone was powerless in the attainment of success, unless it was seconded by untiring labor. Here also I met all the necessary requirements, frequently devoting twenty hours of the twenty-four to my business. Gradually I found that I was amassing a fortune, and finally I established the house which now bears my name. After I had accomplished what I started out to do, there came over me an entire change. I had no aspirations to become abnormally wealthy. All that I wanted was a safe guarantee against possible disaster in the future. I devoted a portion of my time to the enjoyment of life, believing that I had earned my right to do so. No, sir; there is no use in filling a boy's head with all the new fangled ideas of getting rich, as they are not practical. Economy and labor are the only elements that enter into the great plan of successful business life."

HUGH BLAIN.

Cocoa, or Cacas, is the kernel of a fruit which furnishes a most nourishing and invigorating beverage, called by the great botanist Linnæus, "Theobroma" or "Food for the Gods." The use of Cocoa is not followed by any of the detrimental effects caused by the excessive use of coffee or tea, viz.: irritation of the nervous system, sleeplessness, weakening of the stomach, etc. To make Cocoa, in every way satisfactory, so that it may be recommended as a nourishing and strengthening beverage even to delicate people, it is of the greatest importance, indeed a principal requirement, that it should be prepared on scientific principles, in order to retain the Theobromine or Volatile Oil.

CANADIAN WINES FOR ENGLAND.

Few people are aware that the cultivation of vines for wine-making is prosecuted to a considerable extent in the Dominion of Canada, principally in south-west Ontario and on the shores of Lake Erie. The growing of the vine and the making of the wine are systematically carried on by French viticulturists by French methods and processes. The Burgundies, Clarets, and Catawba wines, grown on Pelee Island, are well and favorably known in Canada, and have been extensively introduced into the West Indies and other parts. Vigorous efforts are now being made to introduce these wines into the British Isles. A small parcel has just been landed by the steamship Vancouver at Liverpool, and it includes a light kind of Burgundy used for sacramental purposes. It is expected that the results of this venture will be as favorable as those which have attended the introduction of Canadian rye and other whiskies, the shipments of which are annually assuming greater proportions.—Grocers' Chronicle.

BUTTER PACKAGES.

Speaking of the preferences of the British markets in the matter of butter and butter packages, and of cheese and cheese boxes, Mr. Robertson said: "The demand in different centres of large population calls for different qualities in color, body and flavor. All the markets want a butter with the bloom of fresh made flavor still on it. We need refrigerator accommodation on the steamship lines from Canada. The Manchester and Glasgow markets want a rather pale colored butter. The London and Glasgow markets are running on square packages, after the New Zealand and Australian style. We will have some of our winter-made creamery butter from the Government experimental dairy stations packed in square packages this year. I found Canadian cheese still growing in favor with wholesale dealers and retailers. In Manchester district the fat cheese from Quebec has not met with particular favor, and the poor quality of the boxes in which the French cheese is shipped has caused many complaints. The unworkmanlike finish or want of finish, and the wretchedly bad boxes were the worst features of some cheese from that province. These defects could all be remedied in one season by a little more care about taste. The French race have the reputation of putting up goods of all sorts in the daintiest and most attractive form. The French dairymen of Quebec should try to maintain the good name of their people in that regard. The fact that it would pay them handsomely to do so should not be a deterrent."

The business men of Sarnia are trying to organize a Board of Trade in town. They have called a meeting of the business men which it is hoped will turn out in their favor.

Clinton offers a good opening to any who would like to commence a pork packing industry. The town is the centre of a fine agricultural district where hogs are plentiful, shipping and banking facilities are good.

A well-known Clintonian, who occupies the position of freight conductor on an American road, writes to the New Era, of Clinton, as follows: "By the way, one night, not long ago, I picked up a car of flour at Staunton, Ill., a small mining town about 38 miles east of St. Louis, for a large biscuit firm in Toronto, Ont. Now, I have always been of the opinion that there was no better flour made than in Ontario. How is it that this firm buy flour (and of course have to pay the duty on it) in the United States. The mill where the flour was made is about the size of the Clinton flour mill and do a local business, that is, buy only local wheat, same as the Clinton mill. I would like to be enlightened on the subject, and it may also prove of interest to some other readers of your paper.

DRY GOODS.

(From the Dry Goods Review.)

English advices show another advance of 1-8d. per yard in colored cottons.

Wholesalers are ordering their heavy woollen underwear for fall delivery over a month earlier than usual to try to save the advance which is taking place in these goods, and which gives signs of increasing. Heavy orders have already been placed with the mills, and some mills are refusing orders at present prices, hoping to get a better price later on.

Shot silks are in active demand, both for dress trimmings and for evening wear.

The past ten days has seen a large number of repeat orders executed for heavy underwear, blankets, top shirts, and flannels. This is the effect of the prolonged cold weather which we have been experiencing.

NOTES.

Caldecott, Burton & Spence are showing a nice range of colors in shot fall silk. These are scarce goods at present, the shot effect being in great favor in nearly all classes of silk goods.

Fred. Freeman, who looks after the local and nearby trade for Gordon, Mackay & Co., reports the present trip the most trying in his experience. Driving with the mercury at 20 below scarcely comes under the head of pastime.

John Macdonald & Co. have opened up a shipment of two special lines in towel-ling to retail at 5 cents, and also two special numbers in tablings of extra value. They are just opening up case lots of embroideries, which are all job lines, and at specially low prices. A shipment of black surah silk is to hand; these are 22-inch goods at a job price; also coin-spot Scotch muslins, in 30 and 36-inch, and with all sized spots from that of a five cent piece to that of a half-dollar. Another line is printed wool delaines, 30-inch goods, in spots and figures, dark and light grounds.

W. R. Brock & Co. are shipping out their tweeds on spring delivery. They report a strong run on a brown and bluish mixture, which is so prominent in domestic tweeds this season. Lighter colors seem to be discarded, except in very cheap lines. In Scotch tweeds the hop-sack patterns and plain twills are having the best demand. They carry a nice range of each of these. Light colors are not so much in favor as last spring, medium shades being preferred by the tailors at least. In dress goods they are receiving numerous shipments of Canadian, English, French and German. The samples of these have been shown for some time and they commence at once to fill the numerous orders that have been booked.

Gordon, Mackay & Co. are paying special attention to their men's furnishing department. Spring neck wear is now spread for inspection, and a more sumptuous display it would be difficult to imagine. A leading feature is their $2.25 range which they claim is unequalled in the trade. This is the time of year that dry goods merchants aim at clearing out or at least reducing stocks of winter goods, but they have just purchased and passed into stock 2,000 pairs all wool blankets, 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9 pounds. Did the price tempt them or should we look for a protracted winter? They have received an enormous shipment of black cashmere, but they say they are shipping these goods every day in the year and find difficulty in keeping their stock ahead of their orders. They call special attention to their No. 175 at 50 cents, 185 at 52 1-2 cents, and 195 at 55 cents. It is not price, but quality and finish that tell the tale.

A man who went fishing with President-elect Cleveland and Joe Jefferson tells this story that illustrates a trait in Grover's character that some of us would do well to imitate at times: Joe Jefferson got restless before we had been out half an hour; he kept wanting to move around—was sure that it was "better fishing on the other side of the pond." It worried Cleveland a good deal, and by and by, said he: "Joe, when I was a small boy I went fishing with my Uncle Elihu, and I remember that he told me that one of the secrets of success in life was to stick to the place where you'd thrown your anchor out. 'Too many folks,' said Uncle Elihu, 'spend all their time pulling up anchors and rowing around; they don't catch the fish.' As for me," says Cleveland, "when I start in to fish, I set right there and fish, until either the pond runs dry or the horn blows for supper!"

The Montreal Early Closing Association held a special meeting the other afternoon to put the last touch to the organization of the movement in favor of the bill for the early closing of all stores, presented by Mr. Auge at the last session of the Legislature. Mr. C. Fournier presided. He made a few brief remarks, in which he said that the movement in favor of early closing was opposed on the ground that it was an infringement of personal liberty. The liberty claimed by their opponents, however, was only the liberty to tyrannize over their employees. L. J. Dzois, A. Rouleau and O. Legendre were appointed a delegation to go to Quebec to urge the passage of the bill. Copies of resolutions adopted by several organizations have been printed and will be sent to all the members of the Legislature. The meeting was largely attended. Subscription lists to help the cause will be circulated.

A customer secured is a promise of greater salary in time.

If you want books, it is rarely wise to pay double price for them to a travelling book-seller.

The neglect to look after minute details in the factory is a source of great loss to many producers.

The Best Grocers Make
a point of Keeping it always in Stock.

[As there is often inequality in the prices of the various sellers on this market, owing to differences in buying conditions and other circumstances, and as prices are modified by both quantity and quality, the quotations given below and in our Prices Current necessarily take a wide range.]

TORONTO MARKETS.

TORONTO, Jan. 26, 1893.
GROCERIES.

Trade is quiet. In sugar there is some activity, but the movement is probably not above what will become the average for this time of year under the conditions created by the free admission of raw. Until we have a period of several years of freer raw to look back over, it will be hard to say how much an expansion in the demand may be regular or due to some exciting circumstance. Of course there is much more sugar sold than what would be deemed an average quantity two years ago. Tea is moving into current interest, and the price is going farther upward. Canned goods are in more active request, and holders of stock are in a more cheerful frame of mind. Dried fruits are quiet and unchanged. The stock of Valencia raisins is kept down to limits necessary for current business, and current business is small. Syrups are quiet, but are expected to come into practical trade in a few weeks. Coffees lose none of their firmness, stocks are light on spot, and all held here were bought since the market began its upward course. Payments are not an object of much comment. They are probably as deserving of a good report as of a bad one. The reports vary, according as the run of accounts is held against good or bad payers.

COFFEE.

The report of the market for Brazil coffees is like an oft-told tale, it is tediously same. The primary market is strong, and its strength is reflected in New York. The price is steady here at from 20 to 22c. Stocks are light in Toronto hands, the bulk of those held being of rather low grade. There are some choice coffees, however, quoted at 21½ to 22c. Mild coffees are unchanged and firm at 25 to 30c. for green Javas, 28 to 35c. for Padang, 40c. for colory V.O.G. Javas. Mochas are quiet at from 28c. up.

DRIED FRUIT.

Merchants are not sending in orders very freely for dried fruit, and that staple is having a quiet time. The Valencia raisin market is very little changed. There is some off-stalk fruit obtainable at 5c., but it is of very common quality. For good fruit jobbers are firm at 5¼c. upwards. Selected is quoted at 7 to 7½c. The stock of blue fruit remaining unsold is very inert merchandise at this time of year, and although it is offered at a concession on former prices, buyers are not forthcoming. The shading of a price sometimes has the effect of closing off the demand, which becomes mistrustful of the stability of current prices and reserves itself for further breaks. London layers can be bought under $2.25. Currants remain steady at from 5¼c. upwards. There is a large stock in New York, but it is held in pretty firm hands at the moment, holders looking forward to a sufficient development of the demand by spring to take up all they control. Prunes are firm and stocks are not likely to be so slow moving as they were a year ago, the scarcity of dried and evaporated apples being a factor in favor of large consumption. U's are 7¾ to 8c., B's 8 to 8¼c., C's 8½c., D's 8¾c. Figs are steady at 4½ to 5c. in bags, and 11 to 16c. in boxes. The demand for nuts is of small volume, the prices remaining as quoted in Prices Current.

RICE AND SPICES.

The rice market is steady and, as usual, unchanged. Purchases are of the average magnitude on the whole, but they are mostly in the way of small parcels. Common rice is 3¾ to 4c., Japan 5 to 5¼c., and all other sorts are as they were.

Both pepper and ginger are firm just now and in very good demand. Cloves are quiet, but they are firm. In all other lines the spice market is very quiet.

SUGAR.

The sugar market retains all the firmness it acquired with the last advance. Refiners still refuse to book orders ahead on the basis of present prices. Both those that are shut down and those that are still running keep strictly to present business. Wholesalers do not evince much desire to speculate. They doubtless remember the issue of former attempts of this sort and refrain from repeating them and reaping the same experience. Nor do retailers manifest much inclination to get hold of stock at current prices. They find it hard enough to get profits adequate to repay them for handling, without trying to add the cost of carrying to their selling price. There has been a considerable movement of sugar, but it has probably been all called for by the increase in the consumptive capacity which low prices have brought about. Granulated is unchanged at 4¾ to 4½c., yellow at 3¾c. upwards.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES.

The lowest price for good merchantable syrup is 2¼c. Anything offered at a much lower figure is seldom taken twice, and is in nearly every case United States syrup. The demand is limited, but is expected to increase considerably in the near future.

Molasses is quiet. The call for New Orleans stock is probably stronger than for any other description. The price is 32c. upwards. West Indian quotes from 35c.

TEA.

Tea is now receiving more attention than any other commodity handled by grocers. The attention is mostly confined, however, to enquiry, orders, for some unaccountable reason, being held back by retailers. They have nothing to gain by continuing this policy; it has brought them nothing but higher prices up to the present, and it will do them no better service in the future. Jobbers who a month ago would have shaded a cent on large blocks are more likely to go as much in the other direction now. Teas of all kinds, whose value is included anywhere in the range between 18 and 33c., are very desirable property and are firmly held. Inquiry is again cropping up from the United States, and samples of Japan tea held at about 18c. have been forwarded. Other points in the Union have likewise signified a want for teas, and have asked prices on somewhat higher grades. One broker here held a round lot of Japans up till the end of last week for a New York house, to which he has shipped it. The market is likely to be a very bare one by next June. All teas at about 18c. are wanted. The London market has made another advance. The most common China tea, stock that the Canadian trade would not handle, could not be laid down here now under 15c. up to next May. Indian tea that quoted 5½d. last January is now 9d., or equal to about 19c. here.

MARKET NOTES.

[Importers, wholesale merchants and manufacturers should send any items intended for this department so that they may reach the head office not later than Wednesday morning. The editor will always welcome such information.]

The Pure Gold Manufacturing Co. finds an increasing demand for its Pure Gold Baking Powder.

Clemes Bros. have received a car of extra fancy Palermo lemons, of the same description as those that took so well last year.

Tomatoes ranking about equal to Bowlby's Little Chief were sold in London, England, a short time ago at a price equal to 93c.

W. T. Harris, Chatham, N. B., dealer in general merchandise, offers 200 cases canned lobsters, also dried cod of finest quality.

Sloan & Crowther received on Tuesday their first shipment of Aylmer chicken soup. A shipment of Little Chief Faultless tomatoes has also just arrived.

Messrs. Regan, White & Co., of Montreal, are offering a large lot of their well-known white clover brand pure cane sugar syrup. It should prove a seller at this season.

The packers have turned down additional orders recently for "Star" brand canned lobster, 1893 season pack, and give it to be understood that they are "out of the market."

Eby, Blain & Co. are receiving numerous repeat and special orders for five and ten case lots of their Orient brand of package tea. This is due to the self-selling merit of the goods.

Eby, Blain & Co. have received another large consignment of Sphinx prunes. These goods are just now in seasonable demand, and are in especial request owing to the scarcity of evaporated apples.

Seven or more carloads of sun-dried apples have been purchased by exporters during the past week. Prices not transpired. Some parcels of evaporated were taken at 10c. for prime quality.—N. Y. Commercial Bulletin.

Lucas, Steele & Bristol report a very fair sorting up in teas during this month. Their stock is still large and well sorted, and they will be pleased to forward samples at anytime. L. S. & B. do not think there are enough Japans in the country to last until new crops arrive.

The new season's make of Cairn's Home-Made Marmalade is now being offered to the trade by Messrs. Blackstock Bros., Montreal, the Canadian Agents. They report that the official awarding of the title of "Purveyor of Marmalade to Her Majesty the Queen" seems to have drawn the attention of the public very forcibly to this favorite brand. Though for two seasons there had been none available for this market, yet last season's sales were very satisfactory.

A. E. Carpenter, of the Ontario Canning Co., Hamilton, has just returned from Great Britain, where he has been making enquiries as to the probabilities of a market for Canadian canned goods. He is very much taken with the idea that there is a great future ahead for the trade in tomatoes and peas, but not for corn as the British taste has not been cultivated in that direction yet. They are now extensive importers of tomatoes from the States and from Portugal. One firm alone imported 52,000 from Philadelphia. The Portuguese tomatoes are the best and in the green state show better color than Canadian, but in cans the Ontario pack is equal in flavor and better in quality, there being less water in it. Mr. Carpenter sold a trial shipment of 1,000 cases.

PETROLEUM.

In the oil market prices remain unchanged and business quiet. Canadian refined quotes at 14 to 14½c., and other grades at the figures given in our Prices Current.

The Petrolia Advertiser reports: Petrolia crude $1.18 per barrel; Oil Springs crude $1.19 per barrel. A very firm feeling prevails all along the line. Crude continues at $1.18 with very little business doing. The weather has been so cold the past few weeks that it keeps producers busy keeping their wells going, the blizzard having hidden most of them from view. Refined is moving out rather freely, with quotations the same as last week, 10½ to 11c., car lots. As soon as the weather moderates some of the more prominent drillers will have their hands full, as in interviews with several the past week we find them with contracts ahead for close on two hundred wells, with our Oil Springs friends busy right along as well.

BUTTER AND CHEESE.

The market is still sparingly supplied. The price of large rolls is 16 to 18c. for good stock and 14 to 16c. for anything not of prime quality. The deliveries continue to be nearly altogether in the form of rolls. Choice dairy tub butter is very scarce and is firm at 18 to 20c.

The cheese market has taken a strong upward turn in England. Prices are therefore very firm here. Good fall stock is quoted at 12c.

COUNTRY PRODUCE.

BEANS—Are offered out of store at $1.20 to $1.35. The former price is for a very common grade.

DRIED APPLES—The country is quite bare of stock. Buyers are going as high as 5½c., and jobbers are getting 5¼c.

EVAPORATED APPLES—The stock now available is of small proportions. The prices quoted range from 7½ to 9c. for new stock and as low as 6c. on old.

EGGS—Strictly fresh are 25c., cold stored are 19c., limed 16 to 16½c.

HONEY—The demand is small, and prices are steady at from 7 to 10c. for extracted and 13 to 16c. for sections.

HOPS—Jobbing goes on at 18 to 20c., but brewers' orders are held back. The market appears to be in sellers' favor, however, as the stock is unusually good, and there does not seem to be an excess of it.

ONIONS—Not many are to be seen in stock, owing to the difficulty of keeping them in cold weather. The price is $2.25 to $2.50 per barrel.

POTATOES—Are scarce, and not all that are offering can be classed as good. The best is worth as high as 80c. on track, and from that the price ranges down to 75c. Out of store lots are 90c. per bag.

DRESSED POULTRY—Chickens are 40 to 60c. a pair, ducks are 55 to 85c. a pair, turkeys are 12½ to 13c. per lb., geese 8½ to 9c. per lb.

GREEN FRUIT.

The weather has been more favorable to business. Retailers' orders are now both large and numerous, the time of year being considered. They evidently are getting in supplies, not only for present requirements but in preparation for another cold snap. It they are without the fruit when the weather is very cold they usually remain without until the weather moderates enough to make shipping safe. Valencias oranges are $4.50 per box, Jamaicas $2.50 to $3 per box, Floridas $3 to $3.25 per box, Mandarines and Tangerines $3.25 to $3.75 per box, bananas are scarce at $1.75 to $2, pineapples are 20 to 30c., Malaga grapes are $8 to $9, fancy cranberries $10 per barrel, common $1 per basket, apples $1.50 to $2.85 per barrel.

CANNED GOODS.

TORONTO.

There is a better feeling in the canned goods market. All this signifies is that buyers are not hammering so hard at prices as they were awhile ago. They realize that prices are remarkably low, and that success in efforts to depreciate them farther does not beget confidence. Every concession they obtained in the past made them more chary of parting with their big orders. They have consequently been less grudging of their orders recently and have gone out a little farther than the strict measure of the moment's needs. The price is rather steady at from 85c. to $1. No report of the result of the trial shipment sent to England has yet been received. Fruits are in slightly better request. Salmon is rather a slow-selling line, but it is firm at from $1.45 up.

MARKETS.—Continued

HOGS AND PROVISIONS.

Hogs are still scarce, but the rate of delivery has risen above last week's point. Prices are consequently easier, cars quoting $8.40 to $8.60. All products are firm at former prices.

BACON—Long clear 10½ to 11c. Smoked backs are 12½ to 13c., bellies 13½c., rolls 10c.

HAMS—Are 13c.

LARD—Pure Canadian is 11c. in tubs, and 12½c. in pails. Compound is 10 to 10½c.

BARREL PORK—U. S. heavy mess is $20 to $21. Canadian short cut is $21.50 to $22.

DRESSED MEATS—Beef forees are 5 to 6c. hindquarters 7 to 8½c., veal 6½ to 8c., mutton 6½ to 7c., lamb 7c. to 8½c.

FISH AND OYSTERS.

The demand for fresh fish appears to be on the increase, though the outward movement of stock is still too slow to satisfy sellers. Prices of all descriptions remain as they were, that is as follows: 7c. for trout and ordinary whitefish, 7½c. for Manitoba whitefish, 4c. per lb. or $2 to $2.25 per hundred for Lake herring, 10c. for mackerel, 13c. for B. C. salmon, 7c. for smelts, 5 to 5½c. for haddock, 4 to 4½c. for market cod, 7c. for steak cod, 4c. for flounders, 6½c. for skinned and boned codfish, $6, for Labrador herring, $5 to $5.50 for shore herring, 11 to 12½c. for Digby herring, 4c. for boneless fish, 7 to 8c. for boneless cod, oysters are scarce, and the price has been advanced to $1.75.

HIDES, SKINS, WOOL, TALLOW.

WOOL—Fleeces are steady at 18 to 19c. Purred wools are worth 22 to 23c. for super, 6 to 27c. for extra.

SKINS—Sheepskins are scarce at $1 to 1.15. Calfskins are unchanged at 5 to 7c.

HIDES—No. 1 green cows' are 4½c. Cured are 5½c.

TALLOW—Is quiet at 5½c. for rendered and 2c. for rough.

MONTREAL MARKETS.

MONTREAL, Jan. 26, 1893.

[As there is often inequality in the prices of the various sellers on this market, owing to differences in buying conditions and other circumstances, and as prices are modified by both quantity and quality, the quotations given below, and in our Prices Current, necessarily take a wide range.]

GROCERIES.

The grocery trade has furnished a satisfactory volume of business during the week, refined sugar having been placed in fair quantities at the late advance in prices. In fact refiners are compelled to pursue a conservative course about taking orders ahead by the position of the raw sugar market. The product keeps very firm, and those buyers who are waiting for a decline in values before securing the cargoes are not meeting with much encouragement at any of the sources of supply, either in Brazil, the West Indies, Java, or the Philippine Islands. Syrups are somewhat lower owing to lower offerings of American and Barbadoes. Molasses is very firm and stocks are in exceptionally small compass. Teas exhibit marked firmness, and in lines of produce, the same feeling prevails notably in the case of hogs, eggs, and potatoes. On the whole the new year is opening on a strong situation with the prospects of a good spring trade becoming more prominent every day.

SUGAR.

The week has not developed any change of great importance either in refined or raw sugar, but there has been a fair volume of trade in the former from the refineries at a steady range. In fact buyers show more and more disposition to operate ahead, but the state of the market for raw material calls for a conservative course, and refiners are following it at present and booking orders only for a very short time ahead. Buyers of raw stock have been hoping that the market will shape itself to permit of cost and freight business for spring delivery on a lower basis, but it refuses decidedly to be accommodating in this respect, and no cargoes can be booked either at Java or the Philippine Islands at the reduction which buyers wish. Advices from New York to brokers here cite a very firm disposition on raw, a part cargo of Muscavado leaving first hands there at an advance of 1-16c., at 3 1-16c. for .89 test. Two other small cargoes of China and St. Domingo centrifugal stock were sold at 3 7-16c. for 96 test. The tone on the whole, therefore, is very firm, and we quote from the refineries here in straight lots as follows:—Granulated, 4½c.; bright yellows, 4 to 4½c., and lower grade 3½c.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES.

The market for syrups is quiet, but with the approach of Lent a freer movement is anticipated. A fair quantity of Canadian in the wood has been moved at 1¾ to 2½c., while American has been sold lower for poor stock at 19 to 20c.

With stocks of Barbadoes molasses in remarkably small compass holders are firm and will not part with any large quantity, being fully satisfied that the regular jobbing movement from now out will be more than sufficient to absorb the remaining stock. The best figure now is 34c.

TEAS.

There has been a good demand for tea both on home and United States account on this market and the firmness of the previous week is intensified if anything. Japans have furnished most of the sales, a round lot of 1,600 packages being disposed of on Chicago account. We note fair local sales also at 14 to 14½c. for common, 16½c. for medium while fine has been taken at 21 to 22c. with sales of choice goods as high as 30½c. In fact holders are disposed to ask for an advance, and higher volumes are not improbable in the near future in view of the light supplies while it is certain that orders could not be placed now at anything like the figures possible at the first of the year. For black teas a fair demand is reported and a few invoices have been put through on English account at from 7d. to 1s. In fact buyers all round are beginning, as the GROCER pointed out last week—to realize that it is useless to hold off for lower prices.

COFFEES AND SPICES.

A good deal of business has transpired in coffee during the past week, any lots of Rio offering being eagerly picked up at 18 to 21c. as to quality. Maracaibo has sold quite freely at 18¾ to 19½c. in round lots for these figures would have to be advanced upon for jobbing parcels. We quote Jamaica and Rios 18½ to 20c.; Maracaibo 18¾ to 20½c., Java 25 to 27c.; and Mocha 25 to 30c.

The spice market continues strong and buyers show more disposition to operate. We quote black pepper 7½c., cloves 7½ to 8½c. and nutmegs 50c. to $1 according to quality.

RICE.

A small jobbing trade is doing in rice, but there is no movement from first hands. We quote standard $3.85, choice $4.25 and higher grades $5 to $7.

DRIED FRUIT.

The demand for dried fruit has shown some improvement during the week, but only for good sound stock, the cheap trashy stuff going a begging as usual. Almost any price would be accepted for it, and this fact acts as a check with some buyers, and therefore does considerable damage to business. Round lots of good sound Valencia off stock seconds have moved at 4¾ to 4½c., while the offerings of prime are light and firmly held, 5c. net for a straight wholesale lot being the idea. Layers are meeting a fair call, a round lot of Valencia changing hands the other day at 6 to 6½c.

The currant market is quiet but distinctly firm, and we note some sales at 5 to 5¾c. as to quality. Practically all the stock here is in the hands of a leading wholesale firm.

NUTS.

Trade in nuts has been slow, but prices are steady and unchanged. We quote:—Pecans 11 to 12½c., Terragona almonds 16½c., Grenoble walnuts 13½ to 14½c., filberts 10 to 10½c., Ivica 14½c., Brazil 15c., marbots 12½c., cocoa nuts $3.50 to $4.50 per bag of 100 for old, new $5 to $5.50.

FRUIT.

Trade in fruit has been fair during the week, but there have been no specially striking features.

Lemons have met a good demand, and we quote Messina $3.30 to $3.50, prime $2.75 to $3, and common $2 to $2.25 as to quality.

Oranges have furnished a fair business. We quote fancy Floridas $3.25 to $3.50, Valencias $4 to $4.25, Messina $2.50 to $2.75 per box, and Jamafcas $5 to $6 per barrel.

Figs have met a good demand at 5 to 5½c. per lb. Sales of crystalized have been made at $1 per 5 lb. box.

Dates have ruled quiet at 5½ to 6c. for new and 3½ to 5c. for old.

There is no change in dried stock, which we quote as follows: Dried apples 4½ to 5c., evaporated 6 to 7½c.

FISH.

The fish market continues in very good shape under a good demand and very moderate supplies. The feeling is very firm therefore at the following quotations: Haddock 4c., cod 3 to 3½c., steak cod 4½ to 5c., lake trout 7c., white fish 7 to 7½c., pickerel or dore 8c.; dried cod, $5.50; No. 1 green cod, $5.75 to 6$; B.C. salmon, $13 per brl.; Labrador salmon, $13 to $14; No. 2 mackerel, $14 per brl.; do. $7 per half brl.; Labrador herring, $5.25 to $5.50 per brl.; C.B. and N. S. herring, $5.25 per brl.; tommy cods, $2 to $2.25 per brl.; fresh herring, $1.85 per hundred; haddies, 7 to 7½c.; Yarmouth bloaters, $1.25 to $1.50; common do., $1; fresh frozen mackerel, 10 to 10½c. each; No. 1 lake trout, $4.75 to $5 per keg.

APPLES.

The market is quiet and unchanged at $2 to $2.75, as to size of lot and quality. More poor returns have been received from Liverpool.

POTATOES.

The potato market continues firm and prices show a still further advance under light supplies. Car lots have changed hands here at 95c. to $1.05, an advance of 5 to 15c.,

FLOUR AND FEED.

TORONTO.

The flour market is both dull and easy, and shippers are rather depressed with the state of the market, which they had calculated on making a turn in their favor before this. The hopeful tendencies observed some time ago have proved disappointing, however, and now the condition of the market is as bad as it was before.

FLOUR.—City millers' and dealers' prices are: Manitoba patents, $4.60; strong bakers' $4.25; white wheat patents, $4.50; straight roller, $3.40; low grades, per bag, $1.25 to $1.50.

Car prices are: Toronto freights—Manitoba patents, $4.30 to $4.40; Manitoba strong bakers' $3.75 to $3.90; Ontario patents, $3.25 to $3.50; straight roller, $3.15 to $3.30; extra, $2.60 to $2.70; low grades, per bag, $1.00 to $1.25.

MEAL.—Oatmeal is $3.80. Cornmeal is $3.50.

FEED.—Bran is $12, shorts is $13.00 to $15 mixed feed $22, feeding corn 57 to 58c., oats 30 to 31c.

HAY.—Baled timothy is $9.

STRAW.—Is steady at $5.50 to $5.75.

MONTREAL.

There is a very fair local movement in flour with several export enquiries that promise to result in something. Winter wheat $4.25 to $4.50; spring patent, $3.25 to $4.50; straight rollers $3.55 to $3.75; extra $3.20 to $3.25; superfine $2.65 to 2.90; city strong bakers $4.10 to 0.00; strong bakers $4.00 to $4.10.

ST. JOHN, N. B.,

The advance in breadstuffs, which was noticed in our last, has not had the affect anticipated, as, beyond a few sales made at first, very little seems to be moving. Buyers are evidently of opinion that the time is not ripe for higher prices. Dealers still claim they are selling below what can be landed at, and quotations are: Manitoba, $5.20 to $5.30; High grade Ontario, $4.30 to $4.45; Medium patents, $4.10 to $4.25.

Oatmeal—Not much moving, and prices steady at advance $4.15 to $4.25.

Cornmeal—No change. Sales made are $2.75 to $2.85.

Feed is quoted at $20 to $21 per ton.

and jobbing quantities cannot now be had for less than $1.10 to $1.15.

DRESSED POULTRY

Light receipts and a good demand are the features and prices are somewhat higher. We quote turkeys, 13½ to 14c. for finest, poorer kinds selling at 12 to 13c. Chickens have sold all the way from 9½ to 12c. and geese 10 to 11c. Ducks are scarce and firm at 12 to 13c.

DRESSED HOGS.

The market remains firm with sales of car lots at $8.80 to $8.90 per 100 lbs.

PROVISIONS.

The demand for provisions is not large but very fair for this season of the year. We quote as follows: Canadian short cut, per brl. $21 to $22; Mess pork, Western, new, per brl. $21 to $22.00; Hams, city cured, per brl. 12½ to 13c.; Lard, Canadian, in pails 10¼ to 10½c.; Bacon, per lb., 11½ to 12c.; Lard, com, refined, per lb., 9 to 9½c.

EGGS.

The egg market holds very firm under a good enquiry from the United States, but the local demand is slow. We quote Montreal limed 21 to 22c., good held fresh 23 to 25c. and choice boiling 30c.

BUTTER AND CHEESE.

Butter remains as before under a moderate jobbing call. We quote as follow:—Creamery, 22 to 23c.; Townships 20 to 22c.; Morrisburg and Brockville 18 to 19c.; Western dairy 17 to 18c.

The stock of cheese here is now so reduced that the market is fixed practically until the new season.

ST. JOHN, N. B., MARKETS.

ST. JOHN, N. B., Jan. 26, 1893.

GROCERIES.

"Trade is quiet," was the reply to your correspondent in his search for news among the grocers. Everyone seems frozen in, as the very steady low temperature for several weeks has been unprecedented. Old Probs says warmer weather, and hopes are entertained for improvement in the grocery line. Values in all staples are not much changed. Collections are slower than might be expected, while all are preparing for taking stock, which is usually done the last week in January or the first in February.

SUGAR—The market is firm and prices have advanced somewhat, the quotations given are: Granulated 4.40 to 4½c., yellows 3½ to 3¾c., extra C. 3¾ to 4c.

SYRUPS—Are dull and likely to remain quiet.

PROVISIONS—The market is very firm at late advances, and in some lines stocks are decidedly low. Pork is quoted $21 to $25 per bbl., beef $14 to $15. Lard, pure 13 to 14c., compound 11 to 12c.; smoked hams 13 to 14c., rolls 11 to 12c.

TINNED SALMON DANGERS.

Yesterday week the Birmingham City Coroner, Mr. Oliver Pemberton, held an inquest at the Victoria Courts, touching the death of Joseph Mason Robinson (43), who died at his residence in St. George street, St. George's, on December 30th. Mrs. Robinson, the widow, stated that on the 28th ult. she bought a tin of salmon, as several friends were to take tea with the family that afternoon. She paid sevenpence for the fish, which she purchased from Mrs. Butler, in Summer Lane. The shopkeeper opened the tin. When buying it she asked Mrs. Butler if the salmon was good. There was a white frothy substance at the top, and witness said, "I don't care for the looks of this." Mrs. Butler replied, "It's all right," and added that she sold a large quantity of the salmon every year. The deceased, witness and their friends all partook heartily of the salmon, and after tea witness and her husband went out together for a walk. They had three or four glasses of brandy and water, reached home again at half-past ten, and went to bed at midnight. On the next morning deceased complained of illness, and vomited excessively during that and the succeeding days. Medical assistance was procured, but deceased died on the 30th. Albert Slinn, a brother-in-law of the deceased, said he was present at the tea and partook of the tinned salmon. The Coroner: And was there bread and butter on the table? Witness: Yes. The Coroner: And did you eat some? Witness: Yes; twelve or fourteen lengths. (Laughter.) Witness added that he took the largest share of the salmon and felt no ill effects. The Coroner: No; you were wise enough to eat a quantity of other food with it. That probably saved your life. Witness: Well, I felt very hungry, sir. (Laughter.) When we were eating the salmon we all said it was rather cold. After the salmon witness had five or six glasses of ale to drink. The wife of this witness gave similar evidence. She said she felt none the worse for the salmon, of which she took two tablespoonfuls. Further evidence showed that the salmon was purchased by Mrs. Butler a fortnight previously from Thomas Hiram, 365, New John street West. This gentleman was called and stated that he had kept tinned salmon for ten years in order to test it, and found the fish perfectly sound. The tin in question was part of a quantity of 200 dozen he bought from a Liverpool firm. It might have been in his warehouse a few months, or two years; it was impossible to say how long. He had another tin from the same case, and was prepared to open it, and eat part of it in court. The Coroner: No, thank you. The result might be unpleasant. Mr. Astley Prosser, surgeon, Brearley street, stated that he was called in to see the deceased on the evening of the 28th ult. The man was suffering from the effects of irritant poison, and died in spite of the remedies applied. A post-mortem examination revealed the fact that deceased only had one kidney, and that very much diseased. The stomach was distended and ulcerated by a recent irritation. It contained four ounces of yellow thick fluid. No doubt the condition described was due to partaking of animal poison, such as decomposed salmon. Owing to the condition of his one kidney such a man as the deceased would be more seriously affected by unwholesome food. If his kidney organs had been in a natural condition he would most probably have got over the illness. Death was due to exhaustion following the vomiting and purging. The Coroner, in summing up the case, said that no doubt the process of sealing up tinned food was at times faulty, and hence occasionally we heard of people being poisoned as the diseased had been. High game was a great mistake, for it was a poison, a single mouthful of which might poison anyone. Of course, as with any other putrid food, if it was eaten with wholesome food the danger was less. The jury found a verdict that deceased "Died from eating tinned salmon in an unwholesome state, he suffering at the time from organic disease of one kidney."—Manchester Grocers' Review.

BLENDING TEA.

It is sometimes asked by those who are not acquainted with the trade why various sorts of tea should be mixed together before they are offered to the public, any more than it is found necessary to mix different wines together, such as ports with sherries or with clarets. The difference, however, is clear. The public require a distinctive flavor with wine, which can be readily maintained through the skill acquired in centuries of experience in the vineyards. The industry is also conducted on a large scale, so that in reality the ports, sherries, or champagnes of commerce represent, as a rule, a number of blends made before the wines reach this country; but with tea, on the other hand, it is perfectly impossible from the novelty of the industry, and its small scale among the Indian or Ceylon planters who now mainly supply us, to ensure uniformity of quality from year to year. In fact, as is well known, hardly two chests are alike in a parcel of Indian teas when they originally reach this country. As retailers cannot therefore secure continuity in any distinctive flavor from any special growth, they have to obtain it by blending. The remedy suggested by some, to the infinite amusement of those acquainted with the subject, is that the grocers should grow their own teas. The economical value of this suggestion would be only equalled by the grocer being advised to make his own boots or hat. But, putting that aside, such a remedy would only add tenfold to the existing necessity for blending, as the tea crop of any particular estate is, broadly speaking, never alike two years running.

Tea, indeed, varies almost infinitely in flavor, quality and strength, while on the other hand, the public demands almost absolute uniformity in these respects. The produce of any one estate or group of estates is rarely alike two years running, and even were this difficulty possible to remove, little would be gained. The public demand runs upon a sort of neutral flavor in tea, which can only be secured by mixing together the produce of various districts, or even of countries, so far apart as India, Ceylon, China and Java. Further, while the public objects to any pronounced or distinctive flavor in tea, it still more strongly objects to any alteration in the character of the flavor of the infusion supplied. Hence, before the consumer's cup is reached, the leaf must of necessity be very extensively mixed, and in the mixture lies the whole secret of success or failure in the tea trade. Nor is blending likely to decrease, but, on the contrary, it is likely to increase, when teas of such marked different characters are offered as the fine, delicate Congous of China, the strong, flavory Darjeelings, the thick, pungent Assams, and all the varieties produced in Ceylon, in Java or in Japan. When teas came chiefly from China, there were not nearly the differences which now exist, when India and Ceylon supply the bulk of our consumption. If so, there is more than ever room for the skill of the blender. It must be remembered that the old "chops" of 300 or 600 chests of China tea, really represented an extensive and elaborate system of blending, carried out first in the interior, and then at the hong or warehouses at the shipping ports.

The old idea of tea mixing was to mix several kinds of China Congou together, and to add Scented Orange Pekoe and Oolongs in certain traditional proportions. Then came the day of thick Indian tea, and of the infusion which its enemies call tanin. The charge is partly just, but whether it be so or not, if the public like that substance in their tea, those who cater for them must supply it. The result, at any rate, of the new supply, is that the public have to a great degree turned from the old and more delicate flavors and gone on to something much stronger. Those who have not been quick enough to swim with the stream, have suffered materially in their trade. There is also little doubt that a great many retailers who undertake to blend teas, are, to put it gently, not successful in their mixtures, and thus give an opening to more skilled opponents. In these days when specialization is more and more essential in business, such openings are eagerly sought, and the amount of competition in the tea trade has been of late years increased a hundredfold.

In the old days of high duties and small supplies, when the leading retail price was 4s., 5s., or even 6s. per pound, tea was naturally the sheet anchor of the grocer, particularly as it was then the custom to sell sugar at a loss. Now that tea has fallen to a quarter of such prices, the old percentage of profit, even if it could have been maintained, would obviously have yielded only one quarter of what it used to do. But the old percentage of profit, far from being maintained, has probably been reduced by quite one half, so that the grocer probably does not on the average get more than a fourth, or even a fifth, of what he used to get out of a pound of tea; the labor and many other expenses, be it noted, being still the same, or more.

The increased competition is not always of an unskilled nature. A tailor or a bookseller, or even a butter man might not make much of tea blending, but many of the wholesale dealers who have carefully studied the subject are beyond doubt masters in their art. It follows from the above that there is less inducement for the grocers to study the tea trade, and, on the other hand, an increasing necessity for them to do so, if they are to blend successfully the growing varieties of tea, so as to meet the newer forms of competition.

Grocers having a large connection and sufficient capital find no difficulty at all in coping with the new conditions. They can buy at the right moment, and hold their hundreds or thousands of pounds' worth of suitable stocks; they can blend tea successfully, keep it long enough in the bins to assimilate, study the tastes of their locality and defy external competition. But all this has to be done on a sufficient scale and presupposes a relatively large capital and much skill and personal attention.

At the present time the grocer is becoming more a general storekeeper, selling all non-perishable articles of food and drink. This tends to lock up an increasing amount of capital, and to be a severe drain upon a man's time and abilities. Hence, the increasing practice of delivering goods ready for use to the retailer, and no longer requiring preparation by him. The grocer does not now mix his yellow sugar or chop up his tilters, and the infinite variety of ready-packed or bottled goods in a shop would amaze the tradesman of a former generation.

For the reasons named above, the tea trade has begun to undergo a similar change with all but the larger buyers. The blending, and even the packing, are done for the grocer, and the tea is handed to him ready for sale.

We have more than once pointed out in these columns that it seems a serious error for grocers to sell tea in packets, and especially to act as agents for the sale for others. Tea fresh out of the chest must not only be cheaper and better than in packets, but it seems a short-sighted policy for the grocer to abandon his position as the direct caterer to the public and to become a servant to another. Besides, if packed tea at once becomes known by any special mark, it can just as well be sold by the draper, the bookseller, or the chemist, or, indeed, by any other retailer. Blended teas, however, stand in quite a different position. The grocer can buy and sell it while preserving his complete independence of action and of position, and his hold upon the public.

That portion of the trade who do not deal largely in tea, and a good many of those who do, but who do not find it worth their while to take much trouble, and to lock up much capital on this branch of their trade, have, therefore, of late, taken to the purchase of blended tea, and there seems every possibility of the practice rapidly growing. Indeed, the demand from even large buyers for teas ready for use has been so great for some time past that the leading London wholesale dealers have been unable to meet the enquiry. The saving of money is to many a material consideration, for a man can buy his three or six or more chests, when and as he wants them; instead of keeping in stock and incurring rent upon hundreds of pounds' worth of tea at a time. Further, the turning of some part of his premises at intervals into a dust-bin and his men into dust-men, all comes to an end, if tea arrives ready blended. Again, done on a large scale, and by machinery, the blending process is necessarily cheaper, while the product is more even and better matured when dealt with and stored in greater masses. Above all, when the mixing is done by a dealer in a large way of business, with skilled tasters, large capital, and the command of the chief market in the world, the result is better than if a retailer, with much fewer opportunities, attempts the same thing.

As was natural, the new demand for blended teas from the grocer was at first met, not by the larger and older wholesale houses—for the trade is eminently a conservative one—but by smaller dealers, who, having less to lose from any new departure, were more venturesome. The older and larger houses have now entered the field also. In these days every new want has to be met, and while meeting as energetically as ever the old demand for original parcels by those who have the money, skill and time necessary to blend their own tea, there can be no reason why the large wholesale dealers should not sell blended tea to those who want it. The two classes of buyers are to a considerable degree, it is true, distinct, but that is no reason why the requirements of both should not be met from the same source. Some, no doubt, of the older houses may hesitate in publicly taking a new departure of this sort, but it is no secret in the trade that almost without exception they are glad enough to do the same thing privately. For our part we see no reason whatever for any secrecy about it.—Produce Markets Review.

TRADE SALES.

At Suckling's auction rooms, Toronto, on Tuesday afternoon the stock of J. Leaf, general storekeeper, Orillia, was sold to Christopher Moore of that town at 64c. on the dollar.

The stock of J. F. Copland, the Toronto grocer, who assigned a short time ago, valued at $10,000, was sold to R. Peters, Toronto, at 66c. on the dollar.

Dawson & Co's weekly fruit sale was held on Tuesday at 45 front St. east, in this city. They sold about 700 boxes of Florida oranges at prices ranging from $2.15 to $3, or averaging $2.65. Their Jamaica oranges averaged $2.25. About the same range of prices was obtained for lemons as for Florida oranges. About half the stock was taken by local retailers, the other half by wholesalers for out of town shipping. Their next sale will be held on Tuesday the 31st inst.

CANADIAN PORK PACKERS.

Hon. Messrs. Bowell and Angers have been waited upon by a deputation representing the pork packing interests of Ontario. They represented that the pork packers of Canada are not able to obtain a continuous supply of hogs of Canadian growth for the purpose of keeping their factories running all the year round. In fact this point was recognized by the Government some years ago, and in order to meet the needs of the pork packing interest a concession was made by which they were enabled to import hogs from the United States in bond and ship the pork out of the country on the basis of sixty pounds for every hundred pounds live weight on hogs up to 200 pounds, and 65 pounds on hogs over 200 pounds. About six months ago an inspector was sent through western Ontario on the report of the prevalence of hog cholera in the United States to see that the quarantine regulations were strictly enforced, and the object of the deputation to the Ministers last week was to urge some relaxation of these regulations in order to enable them to keep their establishments running during the winter. They promised that every care should be taken that the animals would be properly handled and be put through their establishments with the least possible delay. Both Ministers promised that the request would be taken into consideration.

Before the Dairymen's Association at Kingston, Mr. Taylor M. P. for Leeds, said that through his efforts in Parliament he had got a law passed preventing the manufacture of oleomargarine in Canada and the importation of it into the country. This had benefited the country very materially and they had the local and English markets for good butter. It was the custom of United States dairymen to ship cheese through Canada to England without having the place of manufacture branded on the goods. People in England were led to believe that this cheese was manufactured in Canada and sold more readily in consequence. He had a regulation passed by the Government to the effect that all United States cheese passing through Canada in bond for England must be branded the product of the United States.

H. P. Eckhardt & Co. are offering a shipment of oranges and lemons at low prices. Quality very fine.

H. N. Baird, the retiring President of Toronto Board of Trade, entertained the members of the Board of Trade Council and a few other friends at a banquet in the council room of the Board of Trade building on Tuesday evening.

Brown & Rittenhouse expect a carload of Canada limed eggs to arrive to-day. The shipper has placed a stove in the car and a man in charge, and they will probably reach here free from frost, and no doubt will net a handsome margin notwithstanding the duty of 5c. per dozen.—N. Y. Commercial Bulletin (Monday).

The ample premises of James A. Skinner & Co., on Wellington street, just west of Bay street, in this city, are stored with some of the very finest goods carried in the stocks of wholesale dealers in crockery, porcelain, chinaware and glass goods. The seven floors of the large double building occupied by them are all needed to accommodate the large and varied stock. The appliances and equipment of the warehouse make the handling of vast bodies of goods in and out easy and rapid. They have two elevators—one for passengers, the other for freight—both run by electricity. Their shipping room opens on two well-paved lanes, and is very convenient for loading and unloading. Their wares comprise all staple goods and many of the costly lines carried in special stocks as fancy goods. They show some treasures in French china and Doulton ware. A trip through their premises will open the eyes of buyers to some fine openings for trade. The house has dealt since 1850 with the Canadian trade and knows their wants. James A. Skinner & Co. came from Hamilton to this city nearly a year ago.

MANITOBA WHEAT FOR MACARONI

The manufacture of macaroni is an industry which might be carried on to good advantage in this part of Canada. Macaroni is manufactured from wheat, but only a particular class of wheat is suitable for the purpose, and our northern wheat should possess the required properties to a remarkable degree. Macaroni is made more largely in Italy than anywhere else, and on this account some may suppose that it requires a soft southern wheat to make macaroni. The fact is, exactly the opposite is the case. The Italian and French manufacturers bring their wheat from a province in Russia, which produces a very hard and flinty wheat. The flintier the wheat, the better the quality of macaroni produced. We should be able to produce a wheat here which would excel even the Russian wheat in these properties.

Large quantities of macaroni are consumed in various parts of the world, and the industry is an important one. It would therefore seem worth while enquiring into the possibilities of establishing a paying macaroni industry here. Manitoba wheat already has a wide reputation, and, perhaps, with a little effort, we might be able to secure the same reputation for Manitoba macaroni.—Winnipeg Commercial.

PISTACHIO NUTS---WHAT MAY BE DONE WITH THEM.

There are a great many good cooks and housekeepers who are entirely unacquainted with pistachio nuts or the possibilities in the way of decorative and delightful desserts that may be made with them. The true pistachio is of a pale and beautiful green color. The nut is usually sold in this country, shelled, at from 75 cents to $1 a pound. It may usually be found at the large downtown dealers in caterers' supplies; but even our chief grocers do not often keep a supply of these nuts in any but the bottled form. The nut is considerably sweeter and finer in flavor than the almond, but is also more oily, and for this reason it easily spoils and becomes unfit for use. It is much safer to buy these nuts in a loose condition by the pound than in a bottle, for one can test them and see if they are fit for use. The pistachio nut is very highly esteemed among the Turks, who use it not only for sweetmeats and confections, but are said to employ them in garnishing and stuffing meats.

A pistachio ice cream is one of the most delicious of deserts, especially when served à la neapolitaine, with a layer of pale strawberry and one of vanilla. No cream is more easily made. Taking a quarter of a pound of fine dried pistachio nuts, blanch them, and test them carefully to see if they are sweet and sound. Put them on a tin plate in the oven and let them become crisp and delicately brown. This will take about seven or eight minutes. As soon as they are done, put them in a mortar with two tablespoonfuls of granulated sugar and pound them fine. Mix a large cup of granulated sugar with the yolks of six eggs, add a quart of boiling milk very gradually, beating it in as you do so. Turn the mixture into a porcelain lined pail and stir it continually till it is just scalded up. Then add the pounded pistachio, beating it in carefully, and finally a quart of sweet cream. Beat the mixture well and set it away to cool; when it is cold, and ten drops of spinach green, The French vegetable colors, put up by Breton, of Paris, are generally used by confectioners for this purpose. It is not safe to trust any more ordinary make, though, if you wish, you can make this spinach green yourself. It is, however, considerable trouble to do so.

When the cream is all ready, put it in the freezer and freeze it carefully. It is, of course, necessary to success in making an ice cream to remove the cover. After the beater has been turned for four or five minutes, scrape off the frozen cream that adheres to the bottom and sides of the freezer and beat it into the liquid cream in the centre. Then cover it up, turn the beater for about four minutes longer, and repeat the process of scraping the cream from the bottom and sides and beating it in with the rest. Cover it again, and after turning it five minutes more it will usually be frozen enough to remove the beater. Now scrape the cream from the sides and bottom once more and beat it vigorously and thoroughly, working it up and down to press it into every part of the can, if it is to be left in the can; or into every part of the mould, if it is packed in a fancy mould. Press a sheet of clean white tea-paper evenly over the top of the cream and put on the cover of the can or mould. In the case of a mould, it is well enough to seal the cover with a little butter or tallow, which, however, must be scraped off carefully before the cover is lifted, to prevent it falling into the cream. If the cream is packed in the can of the freezer, all that is necessary is to cork up the cover.

A Bavarian cream may also be made with pistachio nuts, which is a delightful and delicate dessert. Blanch, dry and crisp in the oven a quarter of a pound of pistachio kernels in the same way you do for ice cream. Soak a quarter of a box of gelatine or half an ounce of isinglass in a gill of water for two hours. Meantime whip a pint of rich cream until it is a stiff froth. Then drain it carefully. There will be about half a cup of cream which will drain away and remain liquid. Take this liquid cream, scald it, and pour it over the soaked gelatine or isinglass. Add also about five drops of spinach green, only enough to give a very delicate color. Mix the dissolved isinglass or gelatine with the pounded pistachio kernels; add about four tablespoonfuls of sugar, and pour all these ingredients gradually into the beaten cream, which should be set in a pan of ice. It is best to have two persons to do this, one to heat the cream, while the other pours the ingredients in gradually. Continue to heat the cream until it begins to thicken, and then pour it into the mould and set it away to become hard. It requires a little judgment and experience to know just when to pour the cream into the mould. If it is done before the gelatine begins to show its thickening power, the cream will rise to the top of the mould. If it is beaten too long it will not form a compact mass in the mould, and will be likely to crack when it is turned out.

Pistachio nuts may also be salted in the same way that almonds are salted. They may be cut into strips and used in connection with candied and sliced limes, strips of angelica and candied Malaga grapes to decorate a mould of Flamange. Wherever the almond is used the pistachio may usually be substituted, though it is not worth while to use this more expensive nut in macaroons or any baked dish, where the delicate flavor would be destroyed by cooking.—Ex.

SANITARY GROCERS.

The fact is continually being developed that the retail grocer has it in his power to do great good and get paid for it as he goes along, by calling the attention of his customers to the healthfulness of certain products that he keeps in stock. The grocer who reads and thinks (and every grocer should take time to do both) will find that his various cereal foods, fruits, vegetables, etc., possess rare medical virtues and peculiar healing and sanitary powers, far superior in many cases to drugs; while as accessories to health, and in relation to palatable diet or nutriment, they are always of service.

Often some of the most seemingly trifling substances have virtues that the thoughtless seldom ascribe to them. The latest and most simple of articles the retailer daily handles is chewing gum, the gum trade having reached enormous proportions. Chewing gum (setting aside what may be the abuse of the chewing gum habit) is proving highly serviceable in some cases of dyspepsia, by exciting the salivary glands to action.

Recently the fact has become apparent that chewing gum is serviceable in feverish conditions of the system and plays a part not to be despised in regulating the salivary secretions.

Dr. R. I. Bond, of Hartshorn, I. T., writes to the Medical Record: "The salivary glands play quite an important part in continued fevers, yet they are not considered in the treatment of the case. One of the first and most important restrictions in the patient's dietary is to drop all solid food from the list at the physician's first request, and just then the salivary glands begin to lapse into a torpid condition which very often results in an inflammation and, finally, suppuration, and that disagreeable dryness of the tongue and fauces so uncomfortable to the patient. For the relief of this trouble I have found nothing of so much importance as some nice form of aromatic chewing gum, which relieves the thirst and dry mouth, improves the appetite and digestion, and restrains nausea, if any."—Detroit Herald of Commerce.

The shipping circular of a British Columbia company says: As 1892 was a fourth, or "off" year a small pack of salmon was anticipated and this has proved to be the case, as there were packed about 86,000 cases less than last year, 181,000 less than in 1891. As the shortage is general along the coast, the salmon market has been entirely relieved from previous excessive stocks and is now in a healthier condition than it has been for a long time, while prices are good and show an upward tendency. The entire pack of the Province has been exported at an unusually early date, and stocks on hand will barely suffice for local consumption. The coming season, therefore, will open with very fair prospects of an adequate pack, and a good market for it, at satisfactory prices.

DO NOT BUY POOR GOODS.

In these days of intense competition the country is flooded by catch-penny announcements of goods for sale far below the regular market for such commodities. It is a great temptation to dealers to handle such, as the profits are so much larger. But, like all temptations, they should be resolutely put behind you. The very fact that this is a period of such close competition makes it impossible to offer goods of standard quality and full weight at much less than fair market prices. It is nearly always a foregone conclusion that goods offered at these tempting prices are faulty in some respect. Either they are light weight, they are old and lacking in strength and freshness, or they are adulterated.

We are not looking at this question from the standpoint of honesty, for the thoroughly honest dealer does not come within the reach of the temptation. The man who wants to do the fair thing by his customers will not handle goods on which the margin of profit is too large. It is from the standpoint of common sense that this matter must be discussed. The man of good sense is the man who realizes that his neighbors are generally as well supplied with this quality as he is. The most foolish man is the one who thinks all the rest of the world are his dupes. There may be a large profit in selling poor or light-weight goods—so long as the selling can be carried on. But the time comes when your customers find you out. The careful housewife soon learns that the goods she is using are not rendering the service she expects of them. The results are not what she desires. Her dishes are inferior in spite of all her care, or the purchases she made a week ago are not going to go as far as she knows they ought. It is a sore disappointment to a woman to find her bread bad, or her cake heavy, or her dessert unpalatable, or her tea or coffee taste like "dishwater"—to use a strong expression. It is also a great annoyance to her to find her money is not sufficient to make ends meet, as used to be the case. She seeks the cause and discovers it is your light-weight goods or in your adulterated stuff. Then she goes somewhere else for her supplies, and as your best customers drop off you will find the big profits made on your cheap goods will not make you rich after all. In time your shelves become cumbered up with a lot of cheap trash which no one will buy, and then all your profits on what you have sold are more than offset. Your neighbor on the other side of the street has been dealing with the old house which always sells good, fresh, clean, full-weight goods, and he has all the trade of the town and is prosperous.

Be very careful of the seductive story of the salesman or circular that professes to sell you goods away below the market. The conditions of trade will not permit such practices. If you listen to the temptation to buy goods on which the profits are so unreasonable, you will be imposed upon, and you will find some difficulty in playing the game on your customers. It is not the same game either. You buy the stuff because it is cheap. You propose to sell it at full prices. Otherwise, it is of no account to you. But beware of expecting to humbug your customers. Barnum said that the American people delighted to be humbugged. But do not try to carry out this principle in the grocery store. The people are in the main very intelligent, and do not enjoy at all being humbugged into paying for a pound when you get only fourteen ounces, or into eating meals spoiled by poor materials, which cost as much as good.

A trustworthy wholesale house will never resort to these Cheap John tricks. Such houses will charge fair market prices for what you buy; they will give you full weight of good standard quality. Your customers will get out of these goods full service and satisfactory results in the kitchen, and as long as you stick to the honest house your customers will stick to you and bring new ones to your doors by telling their neighbors of the satisfaction they enjoy in dealing with a storekeeper who knows how to buy goods and sell them at a reasonable price. It is a great satisfaction for a housewife to feel assured that whatever she orders from her grocer will be good, and that she will not be put to the mortification of having her efforts in the kitchen rendered abortive, or of suffering the equal mortification of having to send goods back to the store, and be always complaining to her grocer that he is not sending her what she wants.

The largest profits are made by slow and sure steps, by daily enlarging your business, keeping every customer who comes to your store, and continually adding new ones.—Grocer and Country Merchant.

LAYING IT TO LUCK.

It is a very common failing for many people to ascribe their success of failure in any business or undertaking to what they are pleased to call luck, and at this season of the year when so many changes are made in business houses, employes may be heard to ascribe their condition to luck, just as though their actions and endeavors had nothing to do with it. Observation shows that these devotees of the luck system make it an excuse for their indolence and non-progressiveness. In their superficial manner of looking at events they have neglected those obvious conditions which a more close examination would have revealed as the true cause of any person's condition.

Thus two young men may start in life with apparently equal abilities and prospects. One will succeed in amassing a competence, while the other barely manages, as the saying is, to keep soul and body together. If the course of life followed by these 2 men is closely studied the result to which each has come will be seen to be due to the effort, or lack of effort, shown by each, and there would be no recourse to luck to explain the difference in their conditions. It will probably be found that one valued present ease and pleasure too much to make any sacrifice for the future; He lived only for the good each day might bring him. As time passed and he compared his condition with that of the other man, then it was that his failure was laid to luck, and the success of the other to the same convenient term.

While there may be many strange events in men's lives which seem to need chance as an explanation, it will generally be found that each individual has been the arbiter of his own fortune. It is a failing of human nature to shift responsibility upon others; and from the time of the man who said the woman did it, down to the present, the same sort of excuses are rendered. And in the moral world the same scapegoat system is practiced, and many a sin is laid to the devil by those who need not go outside of themselves for the true source; they desired to do bad deeds, but did not care to shoulder the responsibility. No doubt thousands of people pass through life dissatisfied with themselves and blaming fate for what they themselves are responsible for.—Ex.

HOW FRENCH SARDINES ARE PACKED.

In a paper upon Finisterre, read by F. S. Dellenbaugh before the American Geographical Society, he describes the sardine industry as it is practiced off Pont-aven on the coast of Brittany. At times, he says, there are as many as 1,200 fishing boats collected at this point, where the sardine, while on its northward journey, attains its most desirable size for taking and packing. The boats are about thirty feet long, entirely open, except for a short deck at the stern, and carrying two masts that can readily be taken down. The net, about 20 feet long and six or eight feet broad, is weighted on one long edge, and buoyed with cork floats on the other, so that when it is in the water behind the boat it assumes an upright position like a wall, and in this position is towed through the water by one end as fast as the boat moves slowly along. The captain mounts the little deck at the stern with a bucket of bait called rong, the eggs and codfish, under one arm, and his practiced eye ranges the water. When he discovers the proximity of the fish he scatters a little of the rong on one side of the net and they rise in a school to take it. This is the critical moment. He throws a quantity on the opposite side, and the fish, making a dart for it, are entangled in the meshes. When the sardines are numerous, the boat does not halt to take the net on board; by means of a certain pull the meshes are tightened, and, with a buoy to make it, it is cast off and left until a full catch is made. Another net is put out, and the operation is repeated till all the nets are used.

Then comes the picking up and extraction of the fish, the latter work being performed with great care, because handling the fish injures them. The net is caught up at the ends and see-sawed till all the fish drop into the bottom of the boat, where they remain until the arrival in port. There the fish are counted by two hundreds into coarse baskets, and dipped in the water beside the boat to free them from loose scales and other matter. Thence they are carried to the factories, and thrown upon long, low tables, on each side of which is a row of women and girls, who, with a short knife, prepare them for the salt vats, where they remain for two hours. After that they are placed in coarse baskets and given a bath of sea water under a pump. Then they are put to dry in the open air on wire racks. When the fish begin to shrivel the racks are taken to the oil room, where four or five tanks of oil are constantly boiling. Each rack is plunged for a moment or two into hot oil, and then set aside to drip, after which the fish are selected and carefully laid in tin boxes of various sizes.

When the box is full it is passed along to the oil tap, where the space remaining is filled with oil. The box is now ready for sealing, and passes along to the solderer. After the soldering, a hole is punched in the cover to let out the imprisoned air and immediately closed with solder. Next the cans are placed in a huge iron crate and lowered into tanks of boiling water. If there is still air in the can it will explode or bulge out, and the trouble can be corrected before the final packing in wooden boxes for export to all parts of the world.

HANDLING OF ROLL BUTTER.

In fall and winter when many creameries are not in operation their patrons churn again their cream, and those that cannot make enough butter to fill a tub with one churning make up the butter in "rolls," says the Produce Trade Reporter. The trouble with roll butter, however, is that it often is not properly handled and packed, and from lack of knowledge in this particular the butter assumes a ragged and untidy appearance, and in consequence sells at a low price.

If roll butter could be sent to market in perfect form it would not unfrequently command two to five cents per pound more than when packed solid. Each roll must be wrapped in a piece of white muslin or cheese capping, and it should be large enough to cover the roll entirely. The muslin must be washed in warm water to remove the starch, then soaked in strong brine and put on the roll wet. Never wrap butter in paper, as the paper will stick to the butter and damage the appearance.

It is impossible to send roll butter to market in good order without wrapping it in muslin, and no matter what the muslin may cost, it will more than pay the cost in the increased price the rolls thus packed will bring.

For packing use new tubs or hardwood boxes, but no pine boxes, as this wood has a tendency to affect and flavor the butter. In very cold weather half-barrels or kegs will do equally well, but whole barrels are too large and not easily handled; besides, the weight crushes the rolls. In packing in hardwood boxes and kegs the end intended for the head should be turned down, then take out the bottom head and cut a piece of white muslin the size of the head and place it on the bottom of the head of the package, which will be the head when opened.

Commence to pack the smallest rolls first, taking care to pack each roll on its smaller end. The rolls should be, as much as possible, of uniform color and size. Do not pack the light and fresh made with those that have been colored or with old stock. Be careful and select rolls that will pack tight, so there will be no space for the rolls to shake about; continue packing in this way until the package is almost full; then shake the same well to settle the rolls, and now fill up as snug as possible.

In filling up the last layer pack the rolls on their ends if possible; but if there is not room enough it will not matter if they are packed on their sides, but they must be packed tight and entirely fill the package. Before heading the package sprinkle on a small quantity of strong brine, and cover the last layer with a piece of muslin, and then turn the package over two or three times so as to let the brine work in between the rolls.

HIS BUSINESS METHODS.

A well known Minneapolis wholesale dealer thus describes his business methods: "On the principle that half the failures come from this infernally foolish anxiety to spread out and overdo, I've cut my garment according to my cloth, and by so doing gained the confidence of the banks and men who afterwards became my backers. It's a great thing to be able to discount all obligations, and so far as possible, I've done it, but when I couldn't, I've watched my purchases, and checked up the sales with a carefulness that—well, that you quill drivers never could imagine. My experience in selling to others has been that hell is paved with the promises of slow-paying customers. Unless from some unusual cause, they're generally a slipshod lot. The man who discounts his bills buys far more cheaply, and, of course, sells on a better margin. Another thing, every merchant should take a complete and careful inventory of his stock at least once a year, though twice is better, and draw up a statement as a standard of comparison with the record of former years. In this way he can detect the weak elements, and correct or do away with them. I believe firmly in insurance, no matter what the rates may be. If the risk is great for the companies, it is equally great for the owner, and a business that can not carry a good insurance might better be given up. One other point, I advise those who deal with us to let their goods stay on the shelves rather than sell them to irresponsible or slow-paying customers. In the one case you have something to show for time and money expended, in the other you have less than nothing.—Ex.

INFINITELY SUPERIOR TO EXTRACT OF BEEF.

Johnston's Fluid Beef

Is the concentrated feeding qualities of Beef, deprived of superfluous material, skin, fat or indigestible tissue, and it is the quintessence of the virtues of Beef.

Extracts of Beef, on the other hand, are only the extracted juices of Beef, which, at best, can only stimulate.

Efficiency is the condition that usually characterizes the officers of the Toronto Board of Trade, and the result of the recent contest is a guarantee that there will be no impairment in this particular during the ensuing year. Mr. D. R. Wilkie, as president, will give grace, dignity and capability to that office. In years past he has been one of the most faithful members and painstaking officials of the board, and his elevation, by acclamation, to the highest position in the gift of the members is a just recognition of services well and honorably rendered. It was only proper that Mr. Hugh Blain should be kept in the vice-chair for another term. Mr. Blain is destined, both by order of advancement and by meritorious services, to fill the presidential chair, and when he vacates his present position it will doubtless be to take the one higher. The centre of interest was around the contest for the second vice-presidency, but the lot again fell to Mr. S. F. McKinnon. It is gratifying to see Mr. John J. Davidson again in official harness. When he retired from the presidency a year ago neither coaxing nor coercing could keep him from his purpose of stepping down among the private members. He may be expected to give a good account of himself in the council of 1893. It is pleasing to note that the Board of Trade will not for a year lose the services of Mr. H. N. Baird as it did when Mr.

Davidson vacated the presidency, he having allowed himself to be placed on the council.

Selling sugar at or below cost seems to be a practice confined to no one city, country or continent. In Birmingham the situation has become so aggravated that a mutual desire to bring about a better state of affairs has sprung up. And this desire the other day crystalized into a meeting called by the Grocers' Association of the town to consider the situation. At this meeting it was pointed out that the wholesale price was much higher than a few months ago, and yet the retailers had made no change, although they were selling at an actual loss. It was agreed to advance the price $\frac{1}{4}$ d., and a committee was appointed to make arrangements for giving effect to the resolution. At the same time it was decided to raise the price of bacon, ham and lard 1d. The reason advanced for this was similar to that in the case of sugar. Behold how good a thing it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!

John Burns, the English radical and leader of the labor party in the British House of Commons is not always noted for the wisdom of his sayings. Like too many of his stamp his remarks tend to excite rather than to benefit his auditors. The other day he made a laudable departure and, strange to say, his criticism was not of capitalists or of employers of labor, but of the working people themselves. The occasion was a meeting held in London in favor of the early closing movement. He declared that the onus for the present unsatisfactory condition of trade should rest on the shoulders of the purchasing public rather than on those of the assistants, and he declared that he knew no more disgusting or degrading sight than was to be found in any poor man's market-place between the hours of nine and twelve at night. The waste, the extravagance, the dishonest trading could there be seen. Working people connived at late shopping to an extent neither right nor justifiable. All shopping should be done between sunrise and sunset. He would like to see the shops open for twelve hours only, with the assistants working only eight however.

As long as there is a trout in the stream the angler will fish; as long as there is a customer on the street the average storekeeper will keep his shutters down, or rather, in more modern parlance, keep his window blinds up. In this city, and in fact in this province, much has been done in regard to educating both merchant and customer in the principles of early closing, but there is still much to be done. Better work, and on the whole more work, can be done in a reasonable than in an unreasonable period of continuous labor, for the brain is clearer, the heart lighter, and, consequently, the energy more active. But the wheels of progress move slowly.

The hot contest between Medical Health Officer Allen and the brewers and ice men seems to be cooling down. In the meantime the ice houses are filling up.

The annual meeting of the Board of Trade held a few days ago was more than usually interesting in the sense that before it was delivered two important addresses—that of the retiring president and that of the president-elect. The address of Mr. Baird was devoted largely to the consideration of the question of extended trade relations with the Mother Land. His views are pretty well known in this particular, and during his recent deliverance he did not say much that was particularly new. But a good thing is worthy of repetition, and what he did say was said well. His words were the expressed opinion of a mature mind and the deliberations of a practical business man, and not the verbosity of the average politician; he spoke for his own and for the pocket of his fellow exporters. He pointed out that in spite of a McKinley tariff the export trade of the Dominion had been larger during the past year than before, but, at the same time, he doubted whether the middle man and the producer had "shared to a like degree in this activity and profit." As to how the desideratum of extended trade was to be secured he carefully steered clear of anything that politicians would define as being flavored with partyism. He merely referred to what others had said regarding the advisability of lowering our tariff "on goods imported from Great Britain that we ourselves do not manufacture and on the goods produced by those who have expressed their readiness to compete with outside manufacturers." And while he did not go so far as to unequivocally commit himself he intimated that greater trade interchanges would be the result. "Increased exports and imports usually go together" was his final deliverance upon this question. He referred to the steps being taken to provide an insolvency law, and uttered a truism when he added: "It is proper, however, to remind you that so long as trade is overdone and conducted on unsound principles no law will save merchants from loss by bad debts." The Dominion, he held, had outgrown the present Atlantic service, and he expressed his hearty approval in the efforts being made to increase its efficiency.

Mr. Wilkie also paid some attention to the tariff. He expressed the hope that whatever changes were made "the welfare of the Dominion of Canada as an existing and as a continuing whole will be the one object kept constantly in view." The iron industry came in for some mention and the question was asked: "Is it not possible by an extension of the bounty system and by a reduction in the tariff on iron to fuse the apparently diverse interests of producer and consumer?" He intimates that in his opinion the renewal of the royalty upon the ore would assist in the premises. The slow and indifferent Atlantic service was held to be the means of diverting "the flow of a most desirable class of agricultural settlers to other shores, gives to foreign lines of railway and foreign steamship companies the benefit of a very considerable portion of our carrying trade, helps to maintain high rates of freight, which must be borne for the greater part by the agriculturists and hinder the development of the provinces from Nova Scotia to British Columbia." Mr. Wilkie intimated that the payment of a reasonable subsidy by the Dominion Government towards the maintenance of a fast Atlantic service would receive his endorsement and, he hoped, that of the board as well. The need of better railway communication between Toronto and New York was pointed out and an early revision of the inland postal rates urged. "A subject that should receive the careful consideration of the board was his reference to the extension of the arbitration privileges. Arbitration is more and more coming to the front as a medium for the settlement of disputes of all kinds, and the Toronto Board of Trade, if it is to maintain its characteristic spirit of progressiveness, cannot afford to allow its esteemed president's suggestion to pass unheeded. And judging from remarks dropped here and there it is not unlikely to.

Governor Fowler of New York State proposes to extend the trolley system to the propulsion of canal boats on the Erie Canal. The idea, so far as we know, is a new one, but that is no reason why it should not be feasible. The trolley has proved successful for propulsion on land; why not on water? The Governor thinks the trolley system could be applied to the Erie Canal between Albany and Buffalo with great advantages, including the saving of from three to five days' time on the journey of the boats. The distance is about 305 miles, and it is estimated that by the trolley system it could be covered in about three days. Rapid transit means in the long run cheaper transit, and the result of Governor Fowler's suggestion will be watched with interest by shippers and business men generally.

The Ontario Government has, with commendable, and in fact unusual, promptitude crystalized into law, by order-in-Council, the recommendations of the Provincial Board of Health giving more power to the elbow of medical health officers for regulating the cutting and storing of ice. The regulations were drafted at a special meeting of the provincial board held Tuesday of last week and within three or four days afterwards they were full-fledged legal enactments. The new regulations consist in all of five clauses. Under these clauses the powers of local boards of health are extended to the supervision of the cutting and storing of ice in outside municipalities whenever the ice cut is intended for use within the municipality in which any such board has jurisdiction. Whenever there is any doubt about the purity of ice the Provincial Board of Health shall have the deciding and final voice. For a violation of the regulations there is liability to a fine of from $50 to $500, but the most powerful clause is that empowering medical health officers to enter ice houses and seize and confiscate ice cut and stored which has been taken from a source not approved of by the proper authorities. The regulations are not retroactive, and consequently the ice that so far this season has been illegally taken will be beyond the reach of the law.

An absolutely pure ice supply is essential to the public health, and, in view of the probability of cholera striking this continent this year, it is necessary that precautions more than usually strict should be taken to guard every avenue through which the dread invader might attempt an entrance. Business men cannot be too particular about the class of ice that gets into their refrigerators, for if disease germs may not creep into the provision department they will get out into the store, be inhaled by clerks and customers, and fasten themselves upon the gelatinous and fatty substances exposed to the air. An ounce of prevention is a good thing. At the moment report comes from Cincinnati stating that a disorder known as ice diarrhoea is epidemic in that city, and it is attributed to the use of ice taken from the Ohio river.

The spice market seems to be riding on a bull wave. Ginger continues in the ascendancy and, judging from the exceedingly low stocks on the London market, it looks as if prices are going to favor the seller for some time yet. During the last few days cloves and spices have caught the infection and they too are now advancing.

* * *

The marked advance in pork is beginning to affect, and that materially, the price of canned beef. Higher values are usually looked for about this time of the year, but the manufacturers' advances announced Tuesday were in some respects startling, Clarke & Libby's 14s., for instance, being raised $2 a dozen. In ones and twos of the same make the advance was from 10c. to 15c. a dozen.

A CHEESE DIFFICULTY.

A letter from the secretary of the Bristol provision trade association, in answer to the criticism at the recent St. Therese dairy convention and resolutions adopted at a recent meeting of the Montreal butter and cheese trades association, is causing considerable comment in Montreal. The Bristol people make a pretty good case and seem to justify the course they have taken with regard to "French cheese." It appears that shipments of this cheese were made to Bristol this season under the caption of "French Canadian" by Montreal shippers, and of course did not fill the bill, for although there is as fine cheese turned out of the French district as any other, the factories that do so are the exception and not the rule.

The primary cause of all the trouble is the greed of some shippers to outdo others by making short sales at a price below the market in the expectation of a drop in prices. This was done frequently last year, and as the market did not drop the seller had to get the goods to fill his shipment as best he could. He could not touch finest Ontario stock at the price he quoted, and his only recourse was to go down to the French market boat and bid over everyone else on the stock offered to fill his sales. This cheese was shipped as finest Canadian. But if the shipper was unscrupulous on this side the buyer in Bristol was not entirely blameless. He must have known that the offers he received were below the market and that there was a nigger on the fence somewhere, so if he was stuck it served him right to a certain extent. This is no plea however for a continuation of the practice, and it is to be hoped that the trouble which has arisen this year will effectually put a stop to such business next season. Both seller and buyer will find it pays best in the long run to act straight and above board with each other.

MONTREAL CORN EXCHANGE ASSOCIATION.

The Montreal Corn Exchange held its annual meeting last week for the transaction of the usual business, and the election of officers, there being a full attendance of members. The meeting was short, sweet, and unanimous, the annual report being adopted and the officers elected as follows:

President, Mr. D. A. MacPherson.

Treasurer, McDonald Robertson.

Committee of management, Messrs. John Baird, A. J. Brice, M. A. Hastings, A. G. Thomson, E. F. Craig, and A. Peddie; Board of Review, G. M. Kinghorn (chairman), Messrs. T. A. Crane, John Dillon, C. H. Gould, J. O. Lafreniere and Stewart Munn.

The annual report, among other things, called attention to the question of the canal tolls, and recommended that the Association place itself on record in favor of their entire abolition, so that there should be absolutely free waterways to enable us to compete with United States ports and carriers.

Reference was made also to the negotiations between the Association and the American railway companies with regard to grain in transit via New York; also an approval of the recommendation that all terminal elevators at the lakes and seaboard should be declared and made regular elevators, with the Government inspectors in complete control, all grain to be inspected on entering and leaving.

The report also declared against the revival of the call board system, and endorsed the stand taken by other commercial bodies in regard to the new provincial taxation.

The following have been admitted to membership in the association during the past year:—Mr. Edmond Denis, the Canada Meat Packing Co.; Mr. J. R. Ronald, of Messrs. Harling & Ronald; Mr. Walter Oliver, and Mr. Harold Hampson.

Died—F. H. Warrington, July 26th; D. J. Rees, Sept. 17th; Walter Wily, Oct. 27th; L. P. Duncan, Dec. 22nd; M. P. Ryan, collector of customs, Jan. 15.

THE GROCERS' AT HOME.

Editor of THE CANADIAN GROCER.

DEAR GROCER,—It does one good to take up the GROCER and read its contents each week, there is something always bright and suggestive in its columns. I think last week's issue is particularly good, your leaders are sound and encouraging, the burlesque on the Retail Grocers' At-Home by "Dinny Callagan," is quite funny and in it are some good hits, but I think "Dinny" overlooked one very important part of the programme, viz., the squeaking of the new boots got for the occasion no doubt, and worn by the obliging ushers who so gallantly waited upon the ladies in finding chairs for them; perhaps "Dinny" being so accustomed to the squeaking of the pigs accounts for him not noticing it, at the same time some of those who took part in the programme were visibly annoyed by this uncalled for interruption. The clipping from the Produce Markets Review should be very interesting to all grocers, treating as it does so fully on the subject of blended tea, this article is particularly interesting and encouraging to me, having treated on this subject in the GROCER last summer, I am now well rewarded for my feeble efforts, in reading from such an able and well informed journal as the Produce Markets Review, identically the same views as taken by myself on the subject of packet teas being introduced and sold by the retail grocers. I was taken to task severely by some and called a crank and many other forbidden names, for daring to give my opinion on this subject. It is now very gratifying for me to read that there are some greater "cranks" in the world who condemn the offering and pushing of packet teas by the retail grocers. The advice given by this journal ought to be of some weight, and I have no doubt that the grocers generally are waking up to the fact that packet tea, after all, is not the "satis superque" to success, as they so foolishly anticipated it would be. The article from the Produce Markets Review clearly shows that "dreamers" in business are not a success in these progressive times; indeed, they are not wanted at all, but the thorough practical experience men who, having gained a knowledge of the business in which they are engaged, are the men sought after and are at a premium to-day both in wholesale and retail. Why have we not more of them, dear GROCER, can you tell us?

Respectfully yours,

STEPHEN HUSTWITT.

THE BANANA TRADE.

ITS RAPID INCREASE.

The banana trade of the United States has grown to be enormous. During ten months of the past year the imports of this fruit were valued at over $4,500,000. For the same period the imports of lemons were valued at $4,039,437; the imports of oranges at $1,053,549; and the combined imports of all fruits, fresh and dried—excepting bananas—at $7,801,292. Thus the bananas amounted to four times as much in value as the oranges and constituted over one-third of the fruit imports of the United States.

There are 26 steamers in the banana trade plying between Cuba and New York the year 'round. Between the months of April and July a steamer arrives at this port about daily, and during the busy season each steamer will discharge her cargo—which averages 12,000 bunches—and depart the same day in ballast.

The demand for bananas has increased so rapidly that it is estimated that this year's imports will show a much larger total than any previous year.

BANANA FLOUR.

Some remarkable prophecies have been made according the possibilities of banana flour, and some big stories have been told about the extensive use to be made of it by the German army. But so far the use of the fruit in this way has been confined to very narrow limits and is yet in the experimental stage. This so-called flour is produced in small quantities in some parts of Australia and is said to be very good for making porridge, prepared in the same manner as oatmeal, and can be used for making cakes and puddings, taking one-half of the product to one-half of wheat flour. For producing this flour the fruit is taken when it has attained full growth but while still green and dried in the sun or in evaporators. After it is dried, which process is accomplished very quickly, it is broken up and then passed through a mill that will reduce it to globules—not pulverize it.—Commercial Enquirer.

THE CALIFORNIA ORANGE CROP.

Early in December after a visit to Southern California we set down the orange crop on the trees at 1,800,000 boxes. The Santa Fe Railroad Company a month later, after a careful canvass of the whole southern section, gave details of its work which resulted in an estimate of 1,767,590 boxes. This is the equivalent of somewhat less than 6,000 cars of 300 boxes each. Other estimates set the crop at 6,500 cars and some as high as 7,000 cars. D. W. McLeod, a Riverside grower, complains of these high estimates as being the out-givings of the buying interest and gives his own figure as 5,000 cars.

Whatever may be the disagreement as to the quantity of the crop there is no dispute about the quality. All agree that it is of an excellence never before known in the State. The fruit is of a good growth so that the regular sizes, 128 to 196 to the box will take in nearly all the crop leaving but few extra large oranges and not a large number of "culls." The color of the fruit, too, is very high, and the flavor is that pleasant piquancy which makes the California orange in its prime state so great a favorite. A much larger proportion of the crop will be of the Washington navel variety than ever before.

As to the situation, Mr. McLeod's letter sets it forth better than anything else could do, as Riverside, where the following action was taken, will ship 2,000 cars, or one-third of the crop of the State :

"The growers and packers of Riverside and San Bernardino county have concluded not to indulge in the pastime of Kilkenny cats, but are trying to formulate plans for the better distribution of our crop. It is the intention to stop all consignments and sell all the fruit f.o.b. Riverside, except, of course, culls and second-grade fruit. A uniform system of packing and uniform price will do much to place our fruit in the position it deserves. Indiscriminate consignments demoralize any market. Some of the best commission men in San Francisco and other cities have frequently told me they would prefer to buy oranges if there were no consignments. The demand would then control the supply. While we do not expect exorbitant prices, by concerted action we can secure a fair price for a good article. Prices will be fixed every Saturday for the ensuing week, and by holding back the shipments, merchants never need fear the disastrous effects of a falling market. The f.o.b. prices to-day are Washington Navels $3.50 and Seedlings $2.25 per box, which are very satisfactory.

"There is a growing feeling in Riverside for a permanent organization of every orange grower in the city into a corporation, with a board of trustees of say 11 of the most advanced, best posted men. They are to elect a president and secretary, and thus pave the way to have all the fruit grown in Riverside manipulated by one agency. Hire a man who has the brains and business experience to manage it, if we have to pay the salary paid Mr. Leeds by the Traffic Association, $10,000 a year. This would only be a trifle over 1½c. a box for this year's output, and the expense would rest on the income."

Mr. McLeod, of course, takes the growers' view of the matter. Whatever may have been the prices fixed at Riverside, there has been no day in San Francisco when $3.50 could be had for any excepting most select navels, and the same is true in even a more emphatic sense of the price of seedlings. But the market has not fairly opened here yet. Indeed the fruit is not yet at anything like its best. It is later in the spring when the Florida crop is exhausted that the California orange has its "innings."

PRICE CUTTING A SHORT-CUT TO CONSOLIDATION.

Having decided upon one's destination, the next point to be determined is, by what route to reach it.

The destination toward which nearly if not quite all commercial enterprises are tending, is consolidation of allied branches of trade. As urged in these columns before, it is not a matter of choice or for debate, but of destiny. Newspapers may cry out against it, demagogues may howl of its clamorous foreshadowing, politicians may frame laws in opposition to it, but the same can be done concerning the blowing of the east wind and with the same effect in either case. This much being settled, the pathway by which consolidation is to be reached from time to time, by those immediately active in securing it in any given business or locality, becomes the most interesting question to consider.

Retail grocers have congratulated themselves that, because of the necessary convenience of the neighborhood grocer, the question of consolidating would never affect them. But the extension, cheapening and perfecting of the telephone system are the only things necessary of accomplishment in order to make it possible to reduce the number of retail stores to a small fraction of the present number.

Meantime the malodorous price-cutter is doing much toward forcing the direction of concentration into an unpleasant channel and by methods that are almost certain to force him outside in the cold. Concerning the thing itself, an English contemporary remarks :

It is a terrible evil, the consequences of which have been manifest in the hopeless shattering of many a presumably flourishing business, and in the break-up of not a few homes, where otherwise there might have been content and happiness. Begotten of that fierce competition which year after year has been increasing in intensity, cutting has got such a grip on the grocery trade that nothing seems able to loosen, and with that grip upon its throat the trade may well gasp its very life away. Everybody recognizes its deadly influence ; every speaker and every writer will denounce it until one would think that out of sheer shame the wretched thing would die. But it does not. Speaker and writer, addressing men who know all about the peril they are running, and whose conviction of the truth of what is being uttered has been formed long ago, are still like men beating the air for all the good they do, because, hideous as it is in appearance and effect, the dreadful thing lives on. Many men—we don't say all, because there are honest and honorable men to be found in every walk of life—condemn the practice, and then practice what they condemn, so that grocers' hearts may well faint within them at the prospect which opens out to their view. All the denunciations of cutting avail not one fraction, unless some means can be devised by which a period can be put to its continuance.

The effect upon consumers, of this mania to use the knife, is to accustom them to low prices, and when they have come to associate certain articles of daily necessity with certain prices the large majority of consumers will demand a continuance of the cut price except in cases where the condition of the markets can be shown to absolutely prohibit it.

What, then, must be the result of this popular education in low values ?

Two things. First : the retailer who does only an average business will be forced out of the grocery line as the small margins will not afford him a living on the amount of goods he handles.

Second : In order to meet the imperative demand for low prices, the only houses that can do a successful business will be those that can control large capital, buy in large lots and supply a heavy trade. In a word—consolidation.

The price-cutting retailer has himself to blame for the retailing wholesaler. The cutter has educated the consumer to low prices and the consumer in turn has been set to thinking whether or not he can still further reduce his living expenses by screwing down prices another notch or two. With this object in view he has applied to the wholesaler. The latter, if he is of the same short-sighted breed of humanity as the cutter, swallows the bait and the cutter finds the ground slipping from under his feet more rapidly than even the knowing ones had expected.

Thus the trade leech, or cutter, is forcing the issue unpleasantly and in a much more rapid manner than need be if he would remove his suckers from retail "grocerdom."

If he can be brought to see that he is wasting his own substance as well as that of his fellow tradesmen, there is hope of reforming him before it is too late to benefit a majority of the trade.

The only way to do this is through organization among retailers. In towns and villages where there are not enough grocers to form an effective association it is well to include men and firms in all branches of trade, and even professional men as in the case of a suburban town cited in these columns recently.

Ignore the principle of policy of co-operation and you ignore that which is inevitable as the coming central factor in every branch of commercial activity.—Commercial Enquirer.

BUY WITH GREAT CAUTION.

Such is the advice given to the customers of a firm in London, in connection with their review of the coffee market. It is not our purpose to use it as a text for remarks upon the position of coffee, reserving that until fuller figures of crops are at command. The rule, however, is a good one under all circumstances—Buy with Caution. The temptation continually presented the retailer is to over-buy, he being induced to purchase beyond legitimate requirements through some tempting offer of an extra discount of unusual terms. Frequently there is economy in buying certain goods in small quantities, even if a small discount is sacrificed. The goods may be slow of sale, or of a perishable nature, so that the cost of carrying is greater than any advantage gained by a larger purchase.

There are times when it is wise as it is safe to buy freely and carry a liberal stock. It is always wisdom to buy freely of goods that are in steady demand, but which are not always in market. Thus fancy or new season's tea, favorite brands of canned goods, special marks of coffee. When the market price of any staple is below the cost of production, and as compared with the average price of a term of years is abnormally low, it is wisdom to carry a big stock. This has a double advantage. It affords opportunity for increased profit when the market turns and it stimulates sales. Low prices tend to increase consumption but aside from this a big stock is always an incentive to the owner to turn it as frequently as possible, in order to keep it fresh and to advertise his business. As an illustration take rice—now unusually cheap. The grocer having a large stock will keep it moving at low prices and stimulate his trade to use it with greater freedom than usual, and at the same time keep his stock full. There is no risk, while the chances favor a sudden turn, sooner or later, toward higher prices.

On the other hand a big stock at high cost is always risky. The cautious way is to buy frequently. Sometimes buyers are puzzled to know whether ruling prices are high or low. This can only be determined by keeping thoroughly posted as to the supply and demand, the law of which invariably asserts itself in the long run. This involves a close study of statistical facts, generally a dry study and one avoided by merchants. And yet it is the well-posted man who has the most even record. He may not make money by fits and starts, gain heavily in one transaction and lose largely in another, but he is more apt to make steady progress.

For instance, the buyer who studied the sources of supply of coffee, kept posted as to the condition of crops, has known that the world's production has barely been abreast of its requirements, and that while prices seemed high and were above the average, still they were not higher than was warranted, taking into account the general conditions of business. He noted that manufacturers were prosperous, labor well employed and commerce active, and had the right to conclude that these factors meant increased consumption. As a rule operators do not give sufficient study to facts governing consumption, just as great a factor as production. The time is not far distant when the extension of coffee planting will make itself felt, and then there will come a great reaction; but the posted man will have discerned the signs and be carrying a light stock.

There are men whose operations are wholly governed by their impressions, or as they say—intuition. Said a very successful dealer: "I cannot give any reason for my action, but I buy or sell upon my feeling that the market will go higher or lower. This may come to me as a result of a close daily acquaintance with the market, so that my opinion is the natural and imperceptible outgrowth of every day affairs, but I never stop to consider statistics or formulate a campaign

This probably accounts for the ups and downs of this trader, who frequently makes large sums and oft-times drops large amounts, because his impressions are not always correct.

As one looks over the statistics specially furnished by the American Grocer, relative to canned tomatoes and corn, he finds that the present output is scarcely sufficient for existing requirements, in fact in so far from it as to prevent an accumulation of stocks and to foster a rising market. It is therefore evident that there is the minimum of risk in buying early for next season's delivery. Even a check to present prosperity would not be apt to reduce prices below those now current.

It is evident from these remarks that "buying with caution" is buying with brains and in accordance with facts as they relate to supply and demand. The sources of information are so open and free and trade or special journals so numerous, that there is no excuse for not being posted.

NO POOL ON ALASKA SALMON.

According to latest advices from the Pacific coast, there will be no "pool" of Alaska salmon packers the coming season. In its place will be an incorporated company embracing all the old "pool" concerns, which, according to official programme, will regulate prices and production to suit the management and stockholders. The canners who remained on the "outside" last season have not, as far as can be learned, shown any signs of retreating from their independent position, but they figure as a very small minority in the industry, and apparently have insufficient power to do serious mischief. The combine, it is stated, intend to pack 100,000 cases more than they did last year, and increase their earnings correspondingly, without raising prices above the level of official rates quoted during the past sixty days. This increase, it is figured out, is justified, since not only last season's pack but considerable stock carried over from previous years has passed into the channels of distribution. Efforts are still making to combine the Columbia River packers, but progress in that direction is rather slow, and latest advices indicate that serious obstacles stand in the way of consolidation this year. With the Alaska and British Columbia interests in compact form and inclined to work harmoniously, the "combine" interest seem to be firmly of the opinion that there is no cause for the slightest apprehension as to ability to control the market during the coming season on both sides of the Atlantic, whether the Columbia River interests consolidate or not.—N. Y. Commercial Bulletin.

BOARD OF TRADE ELECTIONS.

The result of the elections of the Toronto Board of Trade is as follows:

President—D. R. Wilkie (acclamation).

First Vice-president—Hugh Blain (acclamation).

Second Vice-president—S. F. McKinnon.

Treasurer—J. L. Spink (acclamation).

Council—William Christie, John I. Davidson, W. R. Brock, D. W. Alexander, H. N. Baird, W. D. Matthews, G. M. Bosworth, Arthur White, Michael McLaughlin, George H. Bertram, A. A. Allan, Warring Kennedy, William Ince, Robert Jaffray, Barlow Cumberland.

Representatives on Harbor Commission—W. A. Geddes, J. T. Matthews.

Board of Arbitration—William Galbraith, J. H. G. Hagarty, J. D. Laidlaw, Thomas Flynn, R. J. Stark, R. S. Baird, R. C. Steele, John Earls, M. F. Brown, J. H. Sproule, Charles Pearson, S. Crane.

Representatives on Industrial Exhibition—James Carruthers, M. F. Brown, W. B. Hamilton.

The successful candidates for the council and the board of arbitration were elected in the order given.

CALIFORNIA RAISINS.

In marketing the last crop of California raisins. Pacific Coast packers have had much to contend with during the past four months says N. Y. Commercial Bulletin. They started out at the opening of the season last fall in the expectation that big returns would be harvested when their stocks were ready for the market, but to insure the profits they were banking on, it was thought best to clinch the situation by an ironclad agreement among themselves to support and maintain prices at a point that was sure to net the results they were looking forward to. Expectation and realization are two and entirely different subjects, as the majority have since found, though at a very heavy cost for the experience. Under the belief that the crop would be considerably smaller than that of the previous year, they started out with very full ideas upon the value of their fruit. They began shipping Eastward in heavy quantities in October, with instructions to their agents in this and other markets that the fruit must net them such and such prices, the value being set in the majority of instances considerably above the ideas of local dealers, upon whom they expected to unload. Accompanying bids of lading, came sight drafts for liberal advances upon the goods, and these were honored upon presentation here upon the assurance that everything was harmonious among the various packers, and that the agreement entered into was to hold through the season. How suddenly changes at times come about! The first shipments were hardly landed in this market before there appeared signs of an approaching storm. Some of the Coast packers, with an eye to business, thought it would be an excellent idea to take advantage of the umbrella that was raised by their brothers in the same line of trade, so they quietly passed the word to their representatives to accept orders for shipments at a cut from the generally understood value, and acting upon instructions some considerable sales were made here before the "leak was discovered." When the information did get out and the treachery exposed, there was a rush to sell, with the result of prices taking a down grade until a point was reached never before touched in the history of the trade. The quantity of stock which changed hands in this market was very heavy, considerable going to dealers in neighboring cities, but of the total turned the largest portion was quietly absorbed by a local merchant, who saw the opportunity and determined to plunge and cover his probable wants of the future. During this period of activity, which it may be said extended to all sections of the country, about three-fourths of the crop of California was marketed, or say the equivalent of a million and a half boxes. By this time the commission men in the East had sold out their consignment to get back their advances, and, in addition, had placed liberal quantities of the fruit to arrive. The wisdom of the slaughter then became a subject of discussion among the packers, and it was finally decided to assume pleasant relations and again smoke the pipe of peace. This resulted in a determination to stay the flow of offerings, and to hold the remaining quantity on the Coast, then estimated at about four hundred cars, or say the equivalent of 400,000 boxes, until such times as the market should recover from their unbusiness-like methods, and rise to a point that would enable them to get some decent returns for their goods. Though this was certainly a wise course to pursue, the action came rather late for their individual interests, as they had placed capital in the shape of stock among large speculative holders who have been waiting the opportunity that is now promised. The principal holder in this market is now calmly awaiting developments. He has supplied himself with stock sufficient for many months, and is now looking to the West for results that will make his venture successful. From last accounts the stock held on the Pacific Coast had been reduced to about two hundred and fifty cars. This is certainly a small quantity, and should be cared for by the requirements of the West and Northwest during the summer months. Already we are informed that the markets at Fresno and other shipping points are showing a hardening tendency, with two crown stock in bags now held at 3c. f. o. b., and three crown 3¾c. In sympathy with the stronger accounts from the Coast this market is gradually assuming a better tone, with in instances a quarter cent advance asked and obtained for bag fruit. There is every reason to believe that bottom has been reached and that the market will continue to improve from this time on, though no greater activity is anticipated until the country crawls out from under its mantle of ice and snow, and consumers come to the fore in search of goods, which in the natural course of events should take place within the next sixty days.

TO FREEZE OUT SCOTCH SUGAR.

A Philadelphia dispatch to the Sun states that since the removal of the duty upon all grades of refined sugar up to 16 Dutch standard, a large importing trade in Scotch sugars has grown up at that port. The Scotch sugar found ready sale, and speedily attracted the attention of the Sugar Trust managers. Among the largest importers of the Scotch sugar is the George E. Bartol Sugar Company of Philadelphia. He says the Trust is trying to freeze out Scotch sugar. His Baltimore correspondent says that all the wholesale grocers there have pledged themselves to sell only the sugar of the Trust. Two hundred bags of the Scotch sugar, which were offered in Baltimore at 3½ cents, found no purchasers.—Merchant's Review.

MALT COFFEE.

The Bavarian process of making coffee from malt is thus described by an exchange:

The malt is first soaked in water at 40 degrees C., and dried in a coffee roaster until the grains assume a glossy brown appearance. It is then sprinkled with hot water and the roasting is continued until the skin of the malt is loosened. A liquid having the aroma of coffee, and prepared as described below, is then sprayed into the roaster, which is kept revolving. When the spray is discontinued, the malt is further heated until it becomes quite dry. The roaster is removed from the fire and, when the contents have cooled somewhat, a little cocoa butter, or some similar fatty matter, is introduced, and the roaster is rotated until the "malt coffee" has become covered with a very thin layer of grease. The coffee-liquid, above alluded to, is made by condensing the vapors which arise when genuine coffee is being roasted. The condensed liquid is concentrated by boiling, and neutralized with a little bicarbonate of soda. Sufficient sugar is then added to make a syrup, when the liquid is ready for being sprayed into the roaster. Instead of going to the trouble of preparing this liquid, the manufacturers sometimes use extract of coffee for spraying into the roaster. The finished product, when ground, is said to be a passable coffee substitute.

'T WAS AN ANTIQUATED FEAST.

"I have eaten apples that ripened more than 1,800 years ago, bread made from wheat grown before the children of Israel passed through the Red sea, spread with butter that was made when Elizabeth was Queen of England and washed down the repast with wine that was old when Columbus was playing barefoot with the boys of Genoa," said a gentleman of a Chicago club the other day. This remarkable "spread" was given by an antiquary named Gorbel, in the city of Brussels, in 1871. "The apples were from a jar taken from the ruins of Pompeii, that buried city to whose people we owe our knowledge of canning fruit. The wheat was taken from a chamber in one of the smaller pyramids, the butter from a stone shelf in an old well in Scotland, where it had lain in an earthenware crock in icy water, and the wine came from an old vault in the city of Corinth. There were six guests at the table, and each had a mouthful of the bread and a teaspoonful of the wine, but was permitted to help himself liberally to the butter, there being several pounds of it. The apple jar held about two-thirds of a gallon, and the fruit was as sweet and the flavor as fine as though put up yesterday."

The Government of Victoria, Australia, has found the system of granting bonuses on the export of butter so successful that it now proposes to extend it to the export of cheese

THE SUGAR TRADE OF 1892.

Throughout the whole of this year prices of sugar have followed a most uncertain and unexpected course. At its opening the values ruling were generally considered safe, and that something approaching the all but regular augmentation, which characterized its predecessor, might be continued to the trade of 1892. And everything seemed to favor this view. The production was supposed to have reached a limit, which afforded little chance for any early or important addition, while the consumption had increased and was increasing in almost every direction. In this position, says The Glasgow Herald, the future stability of the market seemed to be assured, and there was the incentive to action in the feeling that the American refiners would soon need to apply to the European markets for supplies. Under those influences, therefore, anticipatory purchases were freely made towards the close of 1891 and at the beginning of 1892. When the market opened in the early days of January the price of 88 per cent. beetroot f.o.b. Hamburg stood at 15s. per cwt.; but the Americans did not, as was anticipated, appear on the scene, and, there being only a sluggish demand from other sources, values by the end of April had dwindled down to 12s. 9d. This marked the first, as it was also the longest, period of disappointment. The tide ebbed so slowly, and with so much uncertainty, that holders retained their stocks until the depreciation had become serious, and then realizations were effected at considerable loss. After this, and chiefly in consequence of damage to the Mauritius crop by a hurricane, a slight improvement occurred, and during May and June, prices, on more than one occasion, showed a recovery of 7 1-2d. per cwt. on those obtainable towards the close of April. About the middle of July, however, this improvement, and something additional, was lost; but before the end of August the long-looked-for American buyers had appeared, and everything was fully made good by a steady advance to $14s. At the beginning of September the price was 14s. 1 1-2d., but the appearance of cholera at the port of Hamburg now interfered with the American shipments, and in consequence prices again began to recede until the middle of October, when 13s. 3d. became the value. After this the movements were more rapid. Mr. Licht had longer than usual withheld his estimate of the crops, and, as it was to this all minds turned, his deliverance, which was given on the 22nd of that month, roused them to activity. His estimate gave a total production (beetroot and cane sugar together) of 6,250,000 tons, or 130,000 tons less than that of last year, and the first effect of this was to strengthen the market to the extent of about 6d. per cwt. This shortage Mr. Licht attributed principally to a deficiency in the Russian crop, but, as it was regarded in many quarters as being under the mark, fluctuations became the order of the day. Opinions concerning the safety of the entire estimate became as divergent as they are usually found to be with reference to all manner of forecasts; but, founded on the unsatisfactory character of the periodical tests which had been made during the development of the crop, the balance largely lay in the direction of a deficiency far beyond his limit. This was seen in the greater feeling of confidence which manifested itself, and in the fact that "bear" operations almost entirely ceased. By Mr. Licht's latest statement, he estimates the beetroot crop at 3,365,000 tons and that of cane at 2,775,000 tons.

The total imports of raw sugar into the United Kingdom for the eleven months ending 30th November last have been, according to the Board of Trade returns, 740,257 tons, against 729,406 tons for the corresponding period of 1891. These imports have been made up of 379,803 tons cane sugar and 360,454 tons beetroot, against 320,962 tons of cane and 408,444 tons of beetroot last year. The excess of cane sugar over beetroot, which is observable in the importations this year, recalls a feature of the trade which has been absent since 1889. In the latter year there were 18,369 tons more cane than beetroot sugar imported; this year an excess of 19,349 tons shows, from an English point of view, a still more satisfactory state of affairs. Last year the imports of beetroot sugar over cane sugar were 87,482 tons; this year this large difference has not only been lost, but cane sugar has surpassed the other to the extent, as has been said, of 19,349 tons. For the past eleven months there has been an increase in the total imports, as against those of 1891, of 10,851 tons, and, adding the probable receipts for December as 75,000 tons, the full total of the year will bring up the quantity to about the level of 1891; 30,000 tons over 1890, and 62,000 tons under 1892. The imports of foreign refined sugar during the eleven months have been 480,391 tons, against 503,842 tons in 1891 and 444,308 tons in 1890. While, therefore, the quantity imported this year is 36,083 tons over 1890, it marks a falling off of 23,535 tons when compared with last year's imports. This decrease in these imports is, it is believed, likely to continue, and to assume greater proportions as the progressive reduction of the foreign bounties, which begins with this year, widens in extent. There is, indeed, a feeling gaining ground that, perhaps within no distant date, there may be from this and other causes, some significant surprises in relation to the values of all descriptions, but especially to those pertaining to this class of sugar. The whole question is held to be surrounded with such probabilities. Sugar refining in continental countries, even under late favorable conditions, has not been the profitable occupation it once was. Recent political changes in America are in the highest degree calculated to alter fiscal affairs there in such a way as to extend the use to the article; and, beyond all other considerations, it becomes more and more apparent that the production can already barely defend itself against the encroachments of the ever increasing natural needs of the world at large. Even in this country, where the consumption is already greatly higher than in any other, there is still room for expansion.

Raw sugar has been exported from the United Kingdom during the eleven months to the extent of 10,877 tons. The quantity exported in 1891 was 12,019 tons, and in 1890 32,220 tons. The exports of British refined for the same period have been 40,916 tons, against 33,958 tons in 1891 and 32,324 tons in 1890.

The stock of raw sugar in the United Kingdom at the beginning of this year was 110,880 tons; at its close it stands at 92,812 tons.

The business in raw sugar in the Clyde market has shown little change from that of 1891. The stock brought over from last year was estimated at 26,906 tons, and this, added to 190,280 tons imported up to 24th of December current, makes a supply of 217,186 tons as having been available for refining purposes. Of this quantity 189,771 tons were refined in Greenock, and this shows a decrease of 11,835 tons as compared with last year's working. The imports of 190,280 tons were made up of the following, viz., 162,536 tons beetroot, 21,828 tons Java, 2,266 tons Mauritius, 1,600 tons Brazil, and 2,050 tons cane from other countries. These imports are almost the same as those of 1891. The stock of raw sugar carried forward from 1891, according to Messrs. W. Connal & Co., was, as has been stated, 26,906 tons; it was increased to 35,929 tons on 9th January. From that point it decreased, with fluctuations of a few thousand tons, and thereafter stood at 21,000 tons to 25,000 tons for many months. About September it began to wane, and was reduced to 10,580 tons on 15th October, which was the minimum point. The new crop sugars then began to arrive, and the stock rapidly increased to 27,592 tons. Messrs. Connal & Co. estimate it at the close at 27,415 tons.

The exports of Clyde sugar show little change from those of last year. The following gives a comparison of the past ten years' business:

Years	Tons.	Years	Tons.
1882 . . .	18,034	1888 . . .	12,000
1883 . . .	16,021	1889 . . .	11,500
1884 . . .	23,004	1890 . . .	11,000
1885 . . .	14,183	1891 . . .	10,500
1886 . . .	11,000	1892 . . .	11,000
1887 . . .	11,000

The supplies of raw material have been always sufficient to meet the wants of the refineries, except in the case of those refiners who prefer working cane sugars, the available stocks of which latter have sometimes been so low that short stoppages pending fresh arrivals have been required. In order to keep up the Clyde stock of raw cane sugars the Liverpool market has been largely drawn upon for these descriptions; of course, this entails an extra expense upon our refiners in comparison with their Liverpool competitors, who have the great advantage of a good supply of cane sugars constantly in their port. It is to be hoped now that cane sugar working seems to be fairly re-established in the Clyde, that importers of that sort will send consignments to Greenock for sale. There are plenty of sugar stores standing empty, and the proprietors would be greatly the better of some goods to warehouse, and are probably now willing, in order to induce this business, to accept rents hardly more than nominal, while the portage and cartage charges are moderate.

The Clyde refineries have still to contend against importations of foreign refined sugar which goes to the consumers direct. But whether from the enhanced prices of this quality consequent on fiscal changes abroad, or from a growing dislike on the part of the public to use these sugars, induced by the poor quality of some foreign marks, which creates a prejudice against even good brands, the progress of the replacement of Clyde refined by foreign white sugars seems to be checked. There is, however, a considerable quantity of these French and German sugars melted by our refiners as a raw material for the higher grades of their production, and when thus further purified they give an excellent result, so that we may hope to see this branch of the trade go on and increase, if the prices remain moderate compared with the finer qualities of cane sugar.—Grocers' Review of Manchester.

ADVANCE IN SOAP.

If anyone has fallen into the belief that the price of soap was, because it has remained fixed for some years, unchangeable, like unto the laws of the Medes and Persians, he has found out, and suddenly, to, his mistake.

Every commodity on the market is influenced in some way by another. Just now the price of soap is being influenced by the value of hogs. As everybody knows, the price of hogs has been climbing up at a wonderfully rapid rate of late. This in turn has caused tallow to jump about 40 per cent. in price, and the end is apparently not yet.

Tallow is the base of soap, and is also largely used in the adulteration of lard, etc. Consequently, as hog fat became dearer, recourse was had to more tallow. Then, of course, the law of supply and demand began to exert its influence on the price of the latter commodity. Cotton seed oil, another article used in the manufacture of soap, has also taken a jump.

As a result of these concomittant circumstances, soap manufacturers on Tuesday advanced prices one cent a pound. The advance came as a surprise to the trade, and has since been the principle topic of discussion.

ABOLITION OF THE SUGAR DUTY.

The abolition of the duty on indirect importations of sugar, while not productive of any probable serious loss of trade to the West India merchants of our Maritime Provinces will have a tendency to divert what little was being done by transhippers from Halifax and St. John for Montreal and western points, to the American ports of New York, Boston and Portland.

The effect on our local refineries is yet to be seen, and while there is just a chance that it may be to their disadvantage in competition for Ontario business; there are several points to be regarded in its favor. As in many other staples, so in sugar may New York be regarded as the great market of the Atlantic coast of America, and it very occasionally happens that through stagnation of their market values of raw sugars depreciate to perhaps West India prices, in which case New York is the spot in which to buy.

The press of the upper provinces are advertising the claims of dissatisfaction in St. John and Halifax, which has occasioned our enquiry among those directly engaged in the West India business, and we find that 75 per cent. of the raw sugar imported during 1892 to this port, was imported by the different refineries themselves, and while they may not in future (without a sufficient rebate in freight) find it easy to compete with Montreal, they have gained the advantage of a larger market of supply. The Grocer believes in the transit of commerce in its straightest geographical line, and if the dealer of Western Canada can import sugar or molasses cheaper via New York or Boston let him do it.—Maritime Grocer.

PROPAGATION OF LOBSTERS.

The propagation of lobsters in the Government hatchery in Pictou County, N. S., has been proving a success, and promises to yield a large return for the money and care expended on it. Eggs were gathered last spring at the adjacent canneries, and much care was taken in bringing forward the fry. The hatch was to the extent of 60,000,000 of young lobsters, which have been distributed along 69 miles of rocky Nova Scotian coasts. The lobster one year old measures two inches in length, and grows about two inches every year.

ADVICE TO GROCERS.

Look out that a stock of domestic dried fruits is not on hand when hot weather sets in advises American Grocer. Have the canned goods well reduced by the time fresh vegetables and fruits are generally consumed. Avoid an overstock of farinaceous goods in summer. Look out that olive oil, sauces, pickles and other goods liable to injury from heat are not exposed to the direct rays of the sun, nor placed on high shelves subject to a high temperature. Unsalable stock is made in that way. Avoid selling goods at any figure that are so damaged as to be worthless. For instance, yeast cakes. We recall a firm who thought it smart to place a pile of stale yeast cakes on the counter, labeled at half price. They sold quickly, but there went up a hue and cry from their customers, of spoiled batches of bread which made havoc with their flour trade.

MARKETING BUTTER.

Butter should only be placed or rehandled in a cool dry cellar or room, which should solely be used for that purpose says Produce Trade Reporter. Never should it come in contact with any foreign orders of any kind or be exposed to the air any longer than is absolutely necessary to prepare it for shipment. In packing butter always use new tubs or firkins. Scald the package out with hot water and replace the hot with cold water and let it stand for fifteen or twenty minutes then pour it out and rub the sides and bottom of the package with fine salt. Never allow the hands to come in contact with the butter, as their natural warmth and heat is very injurious.

Place the butter in the package with paddles and press it down firmly as you pack. Always fill the package well and fully; then level off the butter a little below the top of the package, place a clean muslin cloth over. Fasten the lid on tight with three or four pieces of strap iron, one end being tacked on top of the lid and the other end on the side of the package. Then mark the gross weight and tare on the package. Keep in a cool place and ship as soon as possible, for age never improves butter.—Chicago Produce Trade Reporter.

CINNAMON.

The cultivation of cinnamon is something like that of a willow copse, straight young shoots springing up round the stump of the plant previously cut says a contemporary. These shoots in their turn are cut every second year—that is to say, when they are about five feet high and two inches in circumference. A good many of these are sold as walking sticks, and find a ready market on board the steamers among the passengers, who think there must be a special charm in a cinnamon stick, though in truth it is hard to distinguish it from our native hazel.

But, of course, the real thing to be secured is the highly aromatic inner bark. First of all, the leaves are stripped off, and then the bark is split from end to end with a sharp knife, which has a curved point; with this, aided by the fingers, the bark is carefully removed in long pieces. These are heaped up and left to sodden, so as to facilitate the next process—that of scraping off the outer rind.

In order to do this, each piece of the bark is placed on a round piece of wood and carefully scraped with the knife, the almost nude brown workers sitting on the ground and using their toes as an extra hand to steady the end of the stick.

The bark is then left to dry in the sun, when it rolls itself up into tight quills. These are neatly sorted and packed, three or four inside of one another, and are made up into bales covered with cloth and are then ready for export.

Cinnamon is so extraordinarily sensitive that great care has to be taken with regard to its surroundings on board ship, as a bale of very fine cinnamon will lose much of its delicate aroma if packed among bales of coarser bark. Various expedients have been tried to remedy this. The Portuguese and Dutch isolated the bales by packing them in cocoanut fibre, or in cattle hides, but it is found that the only real safeguard is to pack bags of pepper between the bales.

DRAWING CHAMPAGNE FROM SIPHONS.

Champagne is now put up in siphons the same as soda water. Previous to a late invention this was regarded as impossible, because the acids in the wine in some way acted deleteriously upon the metal in the siphon head; but it is now an accomplished fact, and for the sick room it is an invaluable invention. No one who has had much to do with nursing will doubt this for a moment. Champagne is frequently ordered in cases of great exhaustion; but as it is impossible, however great precautions are taken to keep it from getting flat at once, there is nothing to be done but to throw it away after a dose, or perhaps a couple, have been taken from it. Now, by the siphon system, the virtue is retained in the wine till the last glass.—London Figaro.

The retail grocers of Brooklyn are moving to secure free berry boxes and crates.

A movement is on foot in Pittsburg to form a national organization of shippers of goods.

The eleventh annual banquet of the Lowell Retail Grocers' Association was a big success. Fully 125 grocers were present.

The total capacity of the elevators on the C. P. R. is 10,000,000 bushels. The flour mill capacity is 8,270 barrels per day.

When Irish mackerel, unculled stock, bring as high as $17 per barrel, trade may be said to be good remarks the Commercial Enquirer.

The tea crop in the Assam valley of China is the smallest on record. Compared with last year's it shows a decrease of three million pounds.

If you are troubled with dyspepsia, you will be glad to know that Burnham's Clam Bouillon will soothe the stomach and cure you if you diet on it.

Irish mackerel of very fine quality realized $18 in the New York market, and $17 was paid for goods that were offered at $1 less a week or ten days ago.

The first canned tomatoes are said to have been introduced in 1848. The man who had the honor of doing it was the late Harrison W. Crashy and his first stock sold at 50 cents a can.

The retail grocers of Canton, have decided to petition the general assembly to provide for a State inspector whose duty it shall be to examine all goods before they reach the retail dealer.

A San Francisco paper says the markets of the East are well cleaned up of California fruits, and that the carry-over on the coast now going forward will not disturb trade to any great extent.

Its yearly report shows the Philadelphia Retail Grocers' Association to be worth over $14,000 clear of all indebtedness. The Toronto Retail Grocers' Association is not as wealthy as that but it is good and prosperous.

Typesetters have their types so arranged in the case that the letters which are most used will be nearest at hand. For instance "a" is nearest of all, not because it is the first letter of the alphabet, but because it is often in request. Thus muscular action and time are economized. So it should be in a store. Walking and climbing should be economized. Goods most frequently in demand should be where they can be got at with the least labor.—Commercial Enquirer.

The chief pork packers of New York and the surrounding cities agree that the chief causes of the rise in pork have been the high market value of corn and the apathy of the farmers. The distaste of the latter to raising hogs under the apprehension of impending monetary loss has brought about the restricted supply of pork and, as a natural consequence, its increased value.

Onions are going up so fast in price that by next spring the man who blows the effluvia of the piquant onion over you while addressing you must be regarded as the owner of a fat pocketbook and a high liver.—Chicago Produce Exchange Reporter.

All reports from New England fish trade centres reflect very firm markets there for barreled herring and mackerel. New York and other distributive markets are correspondingly strong, but New York appears to have the cheapest goods.

Representatives of about half the manufacturers of hominy and cornmeal met in Terre Haute, Ind., the other day ostensibly to discuss the trade outlook, but in reality to try and form an organization to control prices. Like previous similar attempts, it is said to have failed in its object.

Charles S. Sinclair, the bookkeeper for the Armour Packing Co., who disappeared from Chicago Nov. 17, has been captured and brought back. He was a defaulter to the extent of $19,000. Of this sum he took when he decamped $7,200, and when he returned to Chicago he turned over $5,300 to the police.

About 1,000 barrels Norway and Irish mackerel (Irish chiefly) were in the cellar of the warehouse of Rowland, Storey & Co., of New York, recently destroyed by fire. The goods were owned chiefly by two New York grocery jobbers and a Philadelphia firm. There were also about 200 barrels of Scotch herring in the cellar.

Tobacco cutting has already commenced at San Juan by Martinez in the Vuelta Abajo, Cuba, in which district it is anticipated that the production of the earlier cut fall about 50 per cent. below the general average on account of the persistent drought that has prevailed during the latter part of the past year, whereas the yield of the plant sown last will be fair.

The California "Fruit Grower," January 21st, says: The heavy rains thus far have wet the ground very thoroughly, and present indications point to a very large crop of fruit. Cherry trees give promise of a very abundant crop. If climatic changes do not interfere, fruit of all kinds will be very plentiful in California this season.

A recent report from Chicago says there are indications of a deal in butter similar to the recent one in eggs. As in the latter product, the reserve supplies of butter have been eaten up, the production is down to a very low point and the demand is very good. Butterine men, under existing circumstances, are in a position where they are compelled to help the deal along—at least up to a certain point.

Lump spruce gum, as it comes from the trees, is worth all the way from 15 cents to $1 a pound, a very fair article selling at 40 cents a pound wholesale. Ten cents an ounce is the common retail price for good gum. Lots of "patent" spruce gum, as it is called, is made in Bangor, and more in Portland. It is a pretty good thing to chew, if you must chew and have nothing better to do. It is packed in boxes, 100 lumps in a box, and retails at a cent a lump.—Lewiston Journal.

Sugar furnished the sensation of yesterday's market, says Friday's N. Y. Journal of Commerce. The certificates of the Sugar Trust have been freely traded in of past days and bear traders have been assiduously at work trying to depress the stock. They came to grief yesterday when they were cornered by the bull pool, who marked the price up on them several points. The crowd around the post where Sugar certificates are dealt in was the largest that has been seen for many a day, and the scenes at the opening of the market were exciting. Bids varying three points in value were made at one and the same time.

The possibility of refining sugar by means of electricity is still entertained, and a trade journal ("Sugar Cane") has the following upon the subject: "As an instance of the partial employment of electricity in sugar making, may be quoted the fact that in the Hoym factory in Anhalt there has been at work since the middle of November a process for purifying the diffusion juices by means of electricity. The proprietor, Herr Behm, is credited with the statement that the cost of setting up was already covered at the end of five or six days' working. The advantages are said to be: The small quantity of lime required: successful filtration of the scums, even where the beets were in very bad condition: easy boiling and evaporation: a dry masse cuite: a polarization always above 98 degrees, with a yield of 71 per cent or more of the weight of masse cuite. The sugar tests very high, because of the relatively small quantity of ash, varying between 36 and 0.40. The crystallization of the lower products was rapid, and high yields were obtained in all sugars. It is thought that the saline contents may be still further reduced by at least 0.10.

The stock of Miller & Co., furriers, etc., of this city, is to be sold Feb. 7.

Among the latest assignments are Mrs. A. McEachern, liquors, of Mount Forest, and Joseph Cote, hats and furs, Ottawa.

The Humbert has arrived at Boston with 9,000 boxes Palermo oranges, 10,000 do lemons, 2,000 do. and 300 half do. Messina oranges, and 4,000 boxes do. lemons.

A London report of January 21st says: "Lobsters are still extremely scarce, and only stray parcels are occasionally met with, for which stiff rates are required; tall tins at 28 to 30s. and flats at 36 to 42s. per case for common to good quality. The market for salmon appears rather inactive, but holders are firm, and the sales effected have been at quite former quotations—Alaska at 21s. 6d. to 22s. 6d., with Skeena and Naas River fish at 23s. 6d. to 24s."

Thos. G. Cranwell & Co., Baltimore, report as follows under date of Baltimore, Jan. 28th: "This has been a week which will be long remembered on account of the activity in future corn and tomatoes. We have brought heavily, heavier in fact than we have ever done before at this season of the year. The demand for future corn and tomatoes has been from every section. Today the market is 80c. for corn and 85 cents per dozen for tomatoes, cash less 1½ per cent. f. o. b. We can buy a few 2-pound standard future tomatoes at 63½c. cash f.

o. b. and occasionally we are able to find a carload of 3-lb standard tomatoes for future delivery at 82½c. per dozen net cash f. o. b. but they are very scarce at this price."

Even at the source of supply the extreme cost of coffee leads to the use of adulteration and substitutes, as witness the following from the Rio "News": An interesting result has been discovered of the high prices of coffee ruling in Brazil: the police have "raided" some have a dozen establishments professing to sell ground coffee, and found no coffee on the premises, the stock in trade consisting of Indian corn and carnauba beans.

At a recent meeting of the Chicago Retail Grocers' Association a grocer said that kits of mackerel were often ten pounds short; another stated that he found a barrel of flour fifty pounds short, and other instances of the same kind were mentioned. A general sentiment is expressed that retailers should weigh all the goods bought from jobbers, "as it seemed to have merged into a custom among wholesalers that they should make up the cost of repacking goods by a shortage in weight."

The retail grocers of St. Louis, Mo., are making a determined effort to have the state garnishment laws changed in such a way as to give the retailer better facilities for collecting his bills than he has hitherto enjoyed. As the law now stands the grocers claim that the retailer is practically at the mercy of any debtor who is not honest enough to pay. His wages for one month are exempted; also, personal property to the amount of $300 and a homestead to $3,000 in the city and $1,500 in the country. This, they think, gives the debtor too many loop holes to avoid the payment of his debts. A committee from the local association has been working among the state assemblymen recently and they have expressed confidence in the measure eventually being passed.

The retail grocers of Minneapolis are discussing the question of baking powders. At a recent meeting of the association there was quite a breezy discussion. It was sprung by one of the members, who stated that an effort was being made to push the sale of a certain baking powder. It was stated that the price paid by retailers is greatly in excess of that paid by the government for the same goods, and that while the profit is only five cents per can, it is nine cents on the other brands. It transpired that a concentrated effort had been made to boom this baking powder at the expense of others, and the general sentiment was in favor of discouraging its sale. The dispute was waxing hot, when a motion to adjourn was made and carried.

If you want books, it is rarely wise to pay double price for them to a travelling book-seller.

The neglect to look after minute details in the factory is a source of great loss to many producers.

TRADE PROSPECTS GOOD.

"The prospects for trade are pretty good, I think," said a Front street man to THE GROCER Tuesday. "There is hardly a thing in the grocery line that is not firmer than at this time last year. Teas are much stronger and sugars are firmer. In fact all articles except peas, corn, and tomatoes, although even peas and corn are looking better now, stocks being lighter than people anticipated are occupying a much firmer position. By the bye, we have had some enquiry from Chicago for canned goods. They have got to buy peas, corn and tomatoes over there before long," he concluded, as he rushed away with an order sheet in his hand.

QUICK SELLING GOODS.

Goods that are in brisk demand pay the best profit. Such as accumulate dust may be marked at a heavy advance on cost, but they are not profit gatherers. Large sales, quick returns, ample profits follow the sale of goods that move briskly. There is an art in making goods which ordinarily move slowly go out freely. Some articles sell themselves, but most lines need pushing. Fancy groceries are as fond of public admiration as a vain person. Why then place them out of sight of rear shelves or unobtrusive places? Keep them where people are forced to see them.—American Grocer.

HOW TO KEEP EGGS.

To keep eggs we know of no more simple and efficient way than the one we have always practiced, and which was successfully practiced by our fathers for the past thirty or forty years. This is by taking none but perfectly fresh and sound eggs and setting them in layers on the top or small end, in a box or basket or anything that will hold eggs. We do not put anything between them, nor do we put them up "air-tight," but we always keep them in a cellar. Eggs that have been put away in this position, were after being kept six months, as good and fresh as the day they were laid, and we have never found one that was spoiled or stale among them, when thus served. We feel confident that they would keep good and fresh for one year.—Lancaster (Ind.) Farmer.

CRANBERRIES FOR EUROPE.

The South Jersey cranberry growers especially those of Camden County are agitating a proposition to send cranberries to Europe. The plan is to contribute from 1 to 3 per cent. of the crop of 1893, which will be donated to the Cranberry Growers' Association and be sold at auction in the same manner as apples and other fruits. The idea is to introduce the berries into foreign markets. The agreement has been signed by many prominent growers.

THE SNOW DRIFT Co.BENEFIT OF A TRADE JOURNAL.

In nearly every instance, the merchant who finds himself able to cut prices and undersell his competitors, is the merchant who takes a trade journal, reads it closely, and thus keeps informed relative to the markets, latest methods of doing business, &c. He knows when, where and how to buy. Such merchants attract patronage and gain fortunes. The others howl over his superior methods and abilities, decry his cut prices, and eventually go to the wall.—Denver Com'l Tribune.

YOUR COFFEE TRADE.

This is the opportune time to stimulate the demand for fine coffee. There is scarcely a gathering of any moment where coffee is not served. Where guests are entertained, if at no other time, people are particular to have fine coffee. Opinions may vary as to which is the most enjoyable flavor, that of a strong or a mild coffee, but there is no difference of opinion about coffee having good body and flavor, being preferable to one of thin or woody flavor and light body.

It is difficult to get high grade goods without paying a good price; hence the dealers who are bound to have a first-class coffee trade give attention to quality rather than price. Their standard of grade is high, and that must be retained regardless of cost. Such dealers insist on having fresh roasted coffee, and urge customers to have it ground fresh and made fresh. They furnish their trade with recipes for making a perfect cup of coffee, including cafe noir, black coffee, creole coffee, the Turkish method, the Vienna style, and how to utilize coffee in other ways.

They see to it that customers are supplied with coffee of uniform grade and therefore insist that clerks shall keep in mind the sort each customer uses. This is not an easy matter, but it can be done by giving it thought and attention, even if it involves keeping a record. It is surprising, in our large city stores, to note how familiar the floor waiters and heads of departments and the clerks are with the names and habits of customers, and how well they remember the character of goods purchased. If this is done in mammoth concerns it can be done in the little stores.

It is one of the receipts of building up a lucrative business and one which is all important in establishing a reputation for keeping fine coffee. One who keeps fine tea, fine coffee, good flour, and the best butter can command patronage against all competitors. A customer suited with those articles is sure to commend and advertise his source of supply.

One of the city retailers issues the following points:

In serving, have the cups and cream warm and pour the cream in the cup before pouring in the coffee.

One tablespoonful of coffee to each cup is the proper allowance. The tablespoonful may be scant, even or heaped, according to the strength desired.

For making coffee by the French or precolating method, the coffee should always be ground very fine or pulverized; otherwise the full strength will not be secured.

For making coffee by boiling, the coffee should always be ground coarse or granulated; otherwise the coffee will be muddy.

We have special mills for pulverizing and granulating, and grind the coffee fresh for each order.

The finest coffees cannot be sold at retail and return the seller a just margin below 30 to 40c. per pound, as to kind. We find prices changing from 25 to 40 cents. Some prominent retailers sell Padang Java, of fine grade, at 37 to 38c. others get 40c.; for Maracaibo, 30 to 35. The seller of fine coffee should have a good margin, for those who demand the best, as a rule, are willing to pay the price of the finest.—Amercan Grocer.

DRY GOODS.

(From the Dry Goods Review.)

The past week has seen a continuation of a good demand for all spring lines. Few buyers have visited the market, but orders from travellers in nearly all cases surpass those for the same season of last year. The weeding out that took place during 1891 and 1892 has left the trade with only the strong men in it, and consequently there are few failures, very few bad debts, and a general healthy state of trade. This has at last brought about a strong confidence in the minds of all concerned, and, while orders are not enormous, yet they are being placed readily and cheerfully without hesitation or misgiving. Wholesalers also seem to have no fear of the future, and are buying readily and selling readily.

On Tuesday one house sold several bills of winter underwear. This shows that considerable sorting up is being done in heavy goods, on account of the continuation of cold weather. It is quite unusual for this season of the year, and its effect is visible in two ways. First, the stock of the wholesaler is very meagre, and he is placing extra heavy orders for next season's woollen goods. Second, the heavy orders received by the knitting mills has caused some of them to hold off for higher prices. Prices are very stiff at present. This will be beneficial, no doubt, because during the past three years there has been a gradual fall in the price at the mills; thus narrowing the manufacturers' profits. It is reported that Ward's and Algie's mills at Alton have already sold their whole production for the coming season. This is an indication of a scarcity in woollen goods next fall.

NOTES

The Canadian manufacturers of yarns and fingerings are on the market this week. Among these were Patton, of Sherbrooke; Forbes, of Hespeler, and Randel, of Meaford.

Mr. Southgate, who has been with Samson, Kennedy & Co. for a number of years, now has charge of the staple department in Wyld, Grassett & Darling's warehouse.

In their quilt department, Gordon, Mackay & Co. report good business. They carry a generous stock, and can always fill orders quickly. Their satin quilt at $1 for 9-4, raising 25 cents per size up to 12-4, is their great seller.

W. R. Brock & Co. report a very strong demand for their Bradford tweed effects in dress goods; so strong are these goods in public favor that their stock is well lowered already, although the season cannot be said to be opened up yet. Delaines and crepons are also in good demand, but while these three lines are going especially well, it must be said that all lines are in good demand.

Gordon, Mackay & Co. are showing what is a marvel of value in an unlaundried shirt at $4.50, in all sizes 14 to 17 inch. This shirt is made of a good cotton, with linen fronts, continuous facings, and heavily reinforced. Their supply will meet even an extraordinary demand.

Alexander & Anderson are receiving their shipments of spring dress goods, both in plains and fancies. Some of the fancies are particularly striking, and are in strong demand at present. In plain goods, whipcords seem to be the most popular material for spring dresses; and in fancies, shot effects, silk mixtures, etc., are also popular. They are showing particularly striking lines in prints, printed French delaines, sateens, cretons, and a very cheap line of art muslins in the newest and most stylish patterns.

Wyld, Grassett & Darling have passed into stock a large shipment of silk and taffeta silk gloves, including an imitation of Suede Lisle, which can be retailed for 25 cents a pair. This line is a leader for spring as the glove is done up like a kid glove, and has a heavy kid feel. All these are shown also in gauntlets. In frillings a new shipment is to hand, in which the ostrich frilling still predominates. This is the third time this season that their stock has been replenished in these goods. In their neckwear department the sales have made this season much ahead of previous seasons, and, notwithstanding the extra heavy purchases, it is probable that the stock will not be sufficient for the full demand. A repeat order of 1,000 dozen of spring underwear has just been placed. Their lines of brown balbriggan, natural balbriggan, and natural wool are the leading lines for this trade.

Gordon, Mackay & Co. have a range of dress goods which they claim have never been surpassed—their shot and changeable effects disclosing the finest possible treatment of color. It is thought the supply of novelties is limited, and merchants should make their selections while the supply is comparatively unbroken. Their No. 1 special silk warp Henrietta at 75 cents is in ever increasing demand.

John Macdonald & Co. report among the new makes of corsets, the following: World's Fair, Queen City, National Policy and French Wave. Their Thompson's Glove-Fitting are still in strong demand. Among the new arrivals this week is a large shipment of creton fringes, purses, hair, cloth and tooth brushes, regatta negligee and white shirts. Two cases of neckwear are to hand, and more are expected shortly. These are repeats of the best selling patterns. A shipment of colored surahs, in cream, navy and cardinal and other leading shades, has been opened up. These goods are in strong demand at present for blouses and also for trimmings. Further shipments of ribbons are to hand; in baby ribbons a full range of colors is in stock again, and in all silk ribbons widths 5, 9, and 16 are again replaced. Laces are being opened up; black, white and creams are shown in great variety, and among them is the new Irish Pointe, which is in such favor with the feminine part of the public.

SOMETHING ABOUT FIGS.

The unpacking, sorting, repacking and forwarding to all parts of the world of dried figs occupies more than half of the laboring population of Smyrna during five or six months of the year. Consequently the arrival of the first consignment of the fruit from the orchards is a great popular event, called "The Feast of the Figs." This year the harvest was magnificent and a joyous manifestation took place at the railway station when the first train arrived, with its cars wreathed with garlands and its locomotive covered with flags. The barrels were quickly unloaded and placed on camels decorated with ribbons and flowers, and the procession started for the emporium, followed by a great crowd dancing to the sounds of music, and the evening was given up to concerts, balls and rejoicings.—Garden and Forest.

The Best Grocers Make
a point of Keeping it al-

[As there is often inequality in the prices of the various sellers on this market, owing to differences in buying conditions and other circumstances, and as prices are modified by both quantity and quality, the quotations given below and in our Prices Current necessarily take a wide range.]

TORONTO MARKETS.

TORONTO, Feb. 2, 1893.
GROCERIES.

Trade has not developed any marked activity during the week, although in some respects there is a slight improvement. The feature has been the sharp advance in soap, manufacturers having on Tuesday put prices up 1c. Spices continue to gather strength and advances are announced in some brands of canned beef. Sugars continue quiet, with refiners holding prices firm. More inquiry is reported for teas, and the market has a firmer tone. In coffees business is fair and the market outside is much stronger. If anything, there is a slight improvement in dried fruits. Currants are very scarce on spot, but supplies are expected to reach here in the course of the next few days. Payments continue fairly good.

COFFEE.

The local market has not changed materially since last week, except probably in the direction of a firmer tone in sympathy with conditions prevailing outside. In New York Rios have touched the highest point in some years, and it is held that it would cost from $\frac{1}{2}$ c. to 1c. a pound more than present prices to lay down good coffees on this market. On Monday last New York futures advanced 25 points.

DRIED FRUIT.

Demand for dried fruits continues fair, and from this out an improvement is expected consequent upon the gradual and natural falling off in the supply of green fruits. Valencia raisins are a little better outside, but the movement here is still confined to a few boxes here and there. On the spot stocks of currants are in small compass but they will be replenished in a few days, by supplies now nearly due; the demand has been very good notwithstanding the poorness of the quality. Prunes are scarce and dearer both on spot and for importation. Dates are moving fairly well at an advance of $\frac{1}{4}$ c.

RICE AND SPICES.

Being somewhat out of the season there is but a limited demand for rice at unchanged prices.

Ginger is dearer with a strong tendency towards still higher prices; stocks are low in London. Cloves and pepper are advancing

SUGAR.

There is little that is new to report. Demand is fair and refiners profess to be quite independent, and will sell nothing except at their own figures. Raws evince a tendency to advance.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES.

Both articles are in fair demand at unchanged prices. No special feature has developed.

TEAS.

Tea continues the most active commodity in the trade. Prices are stronger, stocks now held are good property, and those who have but a limited quantity on hand are hustling to replenish. Medium and low grade Japan teas are firmer, those below 17c. being all higher. Large unbroken lots are difficult to find. China low-priced teas have advanced $\frac{1}{4}$ c. to 1c. a pound. Poor value is being shown in low-priced Ceylons, but they are being sold at less than they can be laid down here to-day. Congou and second Young Hysons are firmer.

MARKET NOTES.

[Importers, wholesale merchants and manufacturers should send any items intended for this department so that they may reach the head office not later than Wednesday morning. The editor will always welcome such information.]

Cod fish in cases are 50c. dearer.

Sloan & Crowther have just received a shipment of fine medium Pecco Congou.

The price list of the British America Starch Co., limited, shows a reduction all round of from 1c. to $1\frac{1}{2}$ c

Perkins, Ince & Co. have been advised, by their Jamaica agents, of a small direct shipment of choice coffee.

Eby, Blain & Co. report an increasing demand for Orient package tea, due to the excellent quality of the article.

W. H. Gillard & Co., of Hamilton, are offering Gibbed and No 1 Labrador herrings in barrels and halves at greatly reduced prices.

W. T. Harris, Chatham, N. B., dealer in general merchandise, offers 200 cases canned lobsters, also dried cod of finest quality.

There have been several enquiries from the other side for onions, but with a 50c. duty staring them in the face the Americans have so far been unable to come to any terms with the local men.

Attention is directed to the advertisement re Counter Tea Mixer. Every first-class grocer should have one. A large number are being sold. This is an indispensable adjunct to the retail trade.

Davidson & Hay report large sales of Kurma teas and of Millar's Royal Paragon cheese. They show a choice line of Elme figs in boxes at $18\frac{1}{2}$ c per pound net; also fresh arrivals of New Orleans molasses in barrels and half barrels.

"I don't believe there are one hundred packages of currants in Toronto to-day," said a leading wholesaler. "We have been in bad shape lately. And the samples I have seen on the street—why I have never seen anything like it," was his disdainful conclusion.

The trade are quickly finding out that in pushing Ram Lals Package Teas they have no underhand competition to work against, as the wholesale agents, James Turner & Co. refuse to sell only to those who are retail grocers, they have started out on this line and stuck to it.

BUTTER AND CHEESE.

Stocks of butter are still limited. The demand is good and prices higher. Large rolls of good quality sell readily at 17 to 20c., tubs 18 to 20c. and choice dairy tub is quoted at 19 to 20c. with very little to be had.

Cheese is in light demand for local consumption, and there is a little jobbing of fall make at $11\frac{1}{2}$ to 12c., there is no summer make on this market. The export position continues strong.

COUNTRY PRODUCE.

BEANS—Very little doing; the first-class article is offering out of store at $1.40, while for anything below this standard there is no demand.

DRIED APPLES—In fair demand, with dealers paying $4\frac{3}{4}$ to 5c. and selling at $5\frac{1}{4}$ to $5\frac{3}{4}$ c.

EVAPORATED APPLES—Stocks are about exhausted. There is a demand for large lots for export, but none seem to be offering. There is not much doing in the way of jobbing; new stock is quoted at 8 to $8\frac{1}{2}$ c. and old nominally 6c.

EGGS—Stocks are still very light, with demand fair. Strictly fresh stock is quoted at 25c. a dozen, storage at 23 to 24c., and pickled at 19 to 20c.

HONEY—Inactive, with buckwheat quoted at 5c. and clover at 8c. A good deal is being held here.

DRESSED POULTRY—Trade is seasonably quiet. Some choice turkeys sold during the week at $13\frac{1}{2}$ to 14c.; chickens, fresh killed, would bring 75c. a pair, but the ruling quotation for ordinary stock is unchanged at 40 to 60c.; ducks are 55 to 85c. a pair, turkeys are $12\frac{1}{2}$ to 14c. per lb., geese 9 to $9\frac{1}{2}$ c. per lb.

POTATOES—Not much offering, stocks light and demand moderate. Prices are unchanged at 80c. on track and at 90c. out of store.

ONIONS—Not much doing and stocks are ample; prices range from $1 a bag to $2.25 to $2.50 a barrel.

HOPS—Movement is not large in the absence of any speculative demand. Prices are 17 to 20c. for 92's and 14 to 15c. for yearlings.

HOGS AND PROVISIONS.

There appears to be a little better feeling regarding dressed hogs. Offerings are fair but the views of holders outside are somewhat in advance of those of the local men; $8.50 to $8.60 are the ruling figures.

BACON—Long clear $10\frac{1}{2}$ to 11c. Smoked backs are $12\frac{1}{2}$ to 13c., bellies $13\frac{1}{2}$ c., rolls 10c.

HAMS—Are 13c.

LARD—Pure Canadian is $11\frac{1}{2}$ c. in tubs, and 12 to $12\frac{1}{2}$ c. in pails. Compound is $9\frac{1}{2}$ to 10 to $10\frac{1}{2}$ c.

BARREL PORK—U. S. heavy mess is $20 to $21. Canadian short cut is $21.50 to $22.

DRESSED MEATS—Beef forees are 5 to 6c. hindquarters 7 to $8\frac{1}{2}$ c., veal $6\frac{1}{2}$ to 8c., mutton $6\frac{1}{2}$ to 7c., lamb 7c. to $8\frac{1}{2}$ c.

FISH AND OYSTERS.

Fish quiet and unchanged at steady prices. The dearth in the oyster market continues and a further advance of 50c. is announced.

MARKETS—Continued

Prices of all descriptions remain as they were, that is as follows: 7c. for trout and ordinary whitefish, 7½c. for Manitoba whitefish, 4c. per lb. or $2 to $2.25 per hundred for Lake herring, 10c. for mackerel, 13c. for B. C. salmon, 7c. for smelts, 5 to 5½c. for haddock, 4 to 4½c. for market cod, 7c. for steak cod, 4c. for flounders, 6½c. for skinned and boned codfish, $6, for Labrador herring, $5 to $5.50 for shore herring, 11 to 12½c. for Digby herring, 4c. for boneless fish, 7 to 8c. for boneless cod, oysters scarce at $2.25.

GREEN FRUIT.

The green fruit market shows a slight improvement, there having been a little more enquiry regarding prices. But in actual trade the market is still devoid of life. Oranges are in little better demand and this may be expected to improve as the weather becomes milder. The market is still bare of bananas and will be until the keen weather modifies. There is a little speculative movement in apples and the Americans have been making some enquiries but without apparently leading to any results. Valencias oranges are $4 to $4.50 per box, Jamaicas $2.75 per box, Floridas $2.75 to $3.25 per box, Mandarines and Tangerines $3.25 to $3.75 per box, Palermos $2.50 per box, bananas $1.75 to $2, pineapples 20 to 30c., Malaga grapes $8 to $9, fancy cranberries $10 per barrel, common $1 per basket, apples $1.50 to $2.50 per barrel.

SEEDS.

The excitement in the American market has been affecting the Canadian red clover

CANNED GOODS.

TORONTO.

The demand for canned goods has improved a little during the week, and there is now on the whole a fairly brisk movement. This applies particularly to peas, corn and tomatoes. There are still some complaints, however, to the effect that the output so far has not been up to expectations. Salmon is only in limited demand, but prices are firm, with prospects of an advancing market. The advance in tomatoes on the other side has a tendency to stiffen values here, and dealers state that if prices over there go much higher they will be able to ship there at a profit; $1.10 is said to be the ruling price in the United States. Stock of canned fruits is light. The demand is increasing and the market is expected to get into better shape than it has been for some time. Lobster is firm and in fairly good demand. Some packers claim that they have already sold all they can pack during the coming season. The sales are principally on British and Australian account.

market to a considerable extent, and in some sections, particularly in the west, prices have been carried far beyond their legitimate value; for good to choice dealers are paying $8 to $8.50 a bushel. Alsike is quoted all the way from $5 to $6.50 a bushel. There is not much timothy offering and from $1.50 to $2 a bushel is being paid; for extra to choice a little more is being paid.

HIDES, SKINS, WOOL, TALLOW.

WOOL—Trade good; prices strong, with upward tendency in some lines. Market is pretty well cleared out of fleece; 18 to 19c. would now be paid for strictly merchantable fleece wool. Pulled wools unchanged at 22 to 23c. for super, 26 to 27c. for extra.

SKINS—Sheepskins continues scarce at $1.10 to $1.25. Calfskins are unchanged at 5 to 7c.

HIDES—No. 1 green cows' are 4½c. Cured are 5¼c.

TALLOW—Has advanced in price, and dealers are paying 5½c. and selling at 6c.

MONTREAL MARKETS.

MONTREAL, Feb. 2, 1893.

[As there is often inequality in the prices of the various sellers on this market, owing to differences in buying conditions and other circumstances, and as prices are modified by both quantity and quality, the quotations given below, and in our Prices Current, necessarily take a wide range.]

GROCERIES.

The movement in groceries has not been so extensive from first hands during the week just past, for jobbers having supplied themselves for the time being, and not finding sellers disposed to concede or place orders ahead at present values are letting up a trifle for the time being. Still a satisfactory volume of trade has been done, while returns from travellers now out report a good reception which is expected to mean considerable activity in a jobbing sense later on. The demand from city retailers also is brisk for all staples and quite a lot of small orders are being filled also for near by points for immediate delivery. There has been more business in tea, and figures possible a week ago could not be repeated now by buyers except at ½c. advance. Coffee is firm and in good demand. Spices have met with a fair enquiry, while sales of pepper and cloves have been made at advances. Refined sugar is firm and the position of the raw article does not point to any modification in its strength. Syrups have sold a little more freely, while Barbadoes molasses is as firmly held as ever. Dried fruit is quiet but steady, the offerings of cheap stock not affecting the value of prime goods.

SUGAR.

The week has been quieter on the whole than the previous one, but the firm position of the market is fully maintained. Jobbers who have been taking from the refineries pretty freely of late are disposed to let up a trifle for a while until the retailers commence to buy in earnest, which will be in the course of a week, and as refiners will not look ahead there is nothing to be gained by taking any more supplies at present. The movement from the refineries has therefore not been large, but a fair trade has been done at the prices quoted a week ago, viz., bright yellows 4 to 4½c. and lower grade 3½c., with granulated 4½c. There is nothing in the tenor of advices to sugar brokers warranting the prospect of any change in the firm position of the raw sugar market. Advices from England state that large legitimate purchases have been made in Java on English, China and Australian account, and that most of the business has been of a regular kind and not speculative.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES.

Syrups are quiet on the whole but a little more has been doing in domestic stock from first hands. It has sold in the wood at 1¾ to 2c. in strait lots as to quality but 2½ has been made in some cases. There are offerings of American stock but there is a difficulty about the quality. We note some sales at 17 to 20c.

With small and decreasing stock of Barbadoes molasses holders of the article are very firm and jobbing parcels cannot be had for less than 34c. and we quote the market firm on that basis.

TEA.

There has been a fair demand for Japan stock, both on home and export account, and prices are still gradually hardening on the basis already reached, owing to the fact that buyers realize fully that it is useless to hold off any longer. In fact it would take fully ½c. more to move stock now than the figures possible a week ago, and we note sales at a range of 14 to 31c. in straight lots, according to grade. In fact the market is firm and higher for all grades.

COFFEES AND SPICES.

The coffee market remains firm, any lots of Rio and Maracaibo being quickly picked up at firm prices. We quote prices Jamaica 18½ to 20c., Maracaibo 20 to 22c., Rio 18½ to 21c., Java 25 to 27c., and Mocha 25 to 28c.

A good enquiry for spices is to note, sales of straight lots of black pepper occurring at 7 to 7½c., while cloves have sold freely at 8½ to 9c., and nutmegs 47½c. to $1, as to size.

RICE.

The rice market is quiet, business being purely local in character at unchanged prices. We quote standard $3.85, choice $4.25, and higher grades $5 to $7.

DRIED FRUITS.

There has been very little doing in dried fruit, but despite the free offerings of cheap trashy stock really good to prime Valencias are steady, and although values are nominal it would take 4½c. to move a round lot of seconds and 4¾ to 5c. to buy the same quantity of prime firsts. What is to become of the common fruit, as THE GROCER has repeatedly pointed out, is hard to say. It is now simply a question whether it will be ignored and the good qualities taken, but the holders of the latter manifest no anxiety, as they feel certain that all their good prime stock will eventually be wanted. In Valencia layers there have been further orders at 6 to 6¾c., at which prices the market is firm. Advices to importers here report an immense demand for layers in New York.

Currants are dull but steady, and quoted at 5 to 5½c. as to quality, one sale of a good sized lot being sold by one jobber who is the chief holder to another at 5½c. in barrels.

NUTS.

There is no change in nuts, but business is small. The following are the quotations: Pecans 11 to 12½c., Terragona almonds 16½c., Grenoble walnuts 13½ to 14½c., filberts 10 to 10½c., Ivica 14½c., Brazil 15c., marbots 12½c., cocoa nuts $3.50 to $4.50 per bag of 100 for old, new $5 to $5.50.

FRUIT.

There has been a fair demand for lemons and oranges during the week and prices are unchanged. We quote the various lines as follows:—Lemons Messina $3.30 to $3.50 prime $2.75 to $3.00 common $1.75 to $2.25. Oranges Fancy Florida $3.25 to $3.50 Valencias $4.00 to $4.25 Messina $2.50 to $2.75 and Jamaica in barrels $5.00 to $6.00 as to quality.

FISH.

Fresh continues in good demand. Tommy cods are higher than ever before at $2.50 to $2.75 and fresh heringa and bloaters are the same while green cod is firm at $6. We quote therefore at the following quotations: Haddock 4c., cod 3 to 3½c., steak cod 4½ to 5c., lake trout 7c., white fish 7 to 7½c., pickerel or dore 8c.; dried cod, $5.50; No. 1 green cod, $6 to $6; B. C. salmon, $13 per brl.; Labrador salmon, $13 to $14; No. 2 mackerel, $14 per brl.; do. $7 per half brl.; Labrador herring, $6.00 to $5.00 per brl.; C.B. and N. S. herring, $4.75 to $5 per brl.; tommy cods, $2.50 to $2.75 per brl.; fresh herring, $1.85 to $2. per hundred; haddies, 7½ to 8c.; Yarmouth bloaters, $1.25 to $1.50; common do., $1; fresh frozen mackerel, 10 to 10½c. each; No. 1 lake trout, $4.75 to $5 per keg.

APPLES.

There has been some improvement in the apple market in England, but it has had no material effect on the position here as yet. We quote quite as wide and low a range as ever at $1.75 to $2.50 per brl.

POTATOES.

The market is firm and prices still keep high, car lots having been sold at $1 to $1.05, one choice lot fetching $1.10.

DRESSED HOGS.

The market has rated firm and higher, late sales of car lots having been made at $9, but it now would cost $9.25 to $9.30 to lay down a round lot here, and in a jobbing way $9.50 to $9.75 is the price.

EGGS.

The egg market is firm and well cleaned up, at 22 to 23c. for limed, 23 to 25c. for held stock, and 28 to 30c. for fresh.

BUTTER AND CHEESE.

The butter and cheese market is firm and unchanged. The former is jobbing out on the firm basis and there is little or none of the latter remaining here now. We quote butter: Creamery, 22 to 23c.; Townships, 20 to 22c.; Morrisburg and Brockville, 18 to 19c.; Western dairy, 17 to 18c.

ST. JOHN, N. B., MARKETS.

ST. JOHN, N. B., Feb. 2, 1893.

While the majority of wholesalers and jobbers are busy taking stock, we hear rumors of advances which are likely to follow in different lines of groceries. Beans are reported 10 to 20c. per bushel higher; oatmeal, very firm; cornmeal is stiffening in price; sugars steady; provisions of all kinds have not yet reached the top; lard still moves upward. The fortunate ones who have large stocks are looking jubilant, and those who are not as shrewd are wondering where it is all going to end.

Low priced teas have advanced some other grades in fair demand at regular prices.

Sugars—Market steady. Granulated is quoted at 4 1-2 to 4 3-4c., yellows 3 1-2 to 3 3-4c., extras C. 3 3-4 to 4c.

Provisions—Markets are firmer since last week, and stocks considerably reduced. Pork is selling at $22 to $25; beef at $14 to $15; hams, smoked, at 18 to 14c.; roll bacon at 11 to 12c.; cheese is steady at 11 to 11 1-2c.; butter, scarce and higher, 20 to 21c.; eggs, higher, 22 to 24c.; potatoes, firmer, at $1.75 to $2.25 per bbl.; beans are said to be 20c. per bushel up.

MONTREAL TRADE NOTES.

Reagan, White & Co. are offering a choice line of 2,000 pails "white clover" syrup.

There are freer offerings of pickled herring here, car lots being offered laid down in Montreal at $4.

Quintal & Fils have special facilities for filling either Valencia raisins or Barbadoes molasses at present.

Mr. C. Alfred Chivillon reports a good demand from the Montreal grocers for his line of Menier's Chocolate.

Chaput, Fils & Co. say they are rushed with small orders on city account, the aggregate volume of which is considerable.

Japan teas and Barbadoes molasses are both on the up grade, and Messrs. Lightbound, Ralston & Co. are offering good lines of both.

Mr. W. S. Kennedy, the agent for Bountree's Cocoa and other lines of grocery specialties, is able to be about again after a rather severe illness.

Mr. C. E. Colson, the agent for the Dominion says that despite all the new and deserving competitors, the old reliable line of Epps easily holds its own.

Further large lots of tea have been turned over to Chicago buyers during the week at 1-2 to 1c. advance, the lot comprising some 1,400 odd packages, which makes 3,000 packages in a fortnight.

Most of the grocery houses got through their stock taking the first couple of weeks of the year, but Messrs. Hudon, Herbert & Co. have been so busy that they could not. They commenced to size up their stock on Wednesday of this week.

Messrs. Caverhill, Rose, Hughes & Co. have simply bought the grocery stock of Messrs. Tees, Wilson & Co., not as their "ad" stated the other week, "the stock and good will." They are offering special inducements in the way of values.

A New York broker was on this market during the week trying to dispose of a line of stock now held in bond at that port, and it is understood offered it as low as 2 1-2c. in bond there or a little better than 4c. here, but was not successful in effecting a sale. This is suspected to be the same lot which was offered to a leading operator some time ago at a very tempting figure, but when he asked for samples none came along. He was informed subsequently that it had been taken on spec by New York parties, and if this is correct he considers it queer that it should have gone a-begging so long under the market conditions that have ruled in New York.

FLOUR AND FEED.

TORONTO.

The flour market continues to rule dull. Buyers have good stocks east and are consequently not at all inclined to buy, and while they anticipate lower prices, there are a good many dealers who do not share with them that opinion.

FLOUR.—City millers' and dealers' prices are: Manitoba patents, $4.60; strong bakers' $4.25; white wheat patents, $4.50; straight roller, $3.40; low grades, per bag, $1.25 to $1.50.

Car prices are: Toronto freights—Manitoba patents, $4.30 to $4.40; Manitoba strong bakers' $3.75 to $3.90; Ontario patents, $3.25 to $3.50; straight roller, $3.10 to $3.20; extra, $2.60 to $2.70; low grades, per bag, $1.00 to $1.25.

MEAL—Oatmeal is $3.80. Cornmeal is $3.50.

FEED—Bran is $13, shorts is $13.00 to $14, mixed feed $22, feeding corn 57 to 58c., oats 31 to 32c.

HAY—Baled timothy, demand is good and supply fair at $9.25

STRAW—Plentiful and demand limited, at $5.50 to $6.

MONTREAL.

A firm feeling pervades the market here, and the majority of holders will not concede anything to buyers, believing in higher prices later on. The latter, however, do not seem very desirous and are not meeting the advance as freely as the former wish. A few export orders for low grades have been filled during the week. Winter wheat $4.00 to $4.25; spring patent, $3.25 to $4.50; straight rollers $3.55 to $3.75; extra $3.20 to $3.25; superfine $2.60 to 2.90; city strong bakers $4.10 to 0.00; strong bakers $3.90 to $4.00.

ST. JOHN, N. B.,

The market keeps firm on all grades of Breadstuffs, and some incline to believe in higher prices during the next few weeks, and quotations are: Manitoba, $5.20 to $5.30; High grade Ontario, $4.35 to $4.45; Medium patents, $4.10 to $4.25.

Oatmeal is steady at $4.15 to $4.25, though the recent advance in oats will give an upward movement to meal.

Cornmeal—Outside markets are firmer, and prices are likely to advance here, at present prices $2.75 to $2.85.

Feed—Another advance is reported in middlings.

GUELPH, ONT

RESPONSIBILITY OF COMMON CARRIERS.

At the annual meeting of the Montreal Board of Trade, the question of railway and steamship companies' responsibility after a bill of lading had been signed by an authorized official, was discussed. It was held that the names of the parties authorized to sign the bills of lading should be posted on changes. A member said that the question of signing way bills from Manitoba and other western points was of still greater importance. He maintained that they were very often signed in pencil, and, although Montreal merchants honored them, and accepted drafts on the strength of their supposed validity, yet these bills of lading were not worth the paper they were written on. He said that this was a most serious matter, and instanced a case wherein a party had lost 500 barrels of flour, owing to a railway agent, who had also been connected with a milling establishment that had failed, having signed a bill of lading, and upon the strength of which the Montrealeer had accepted the draft. The merchant appealed to the railway company, and was told that they could not be held responsible for illegal acts committed by their agents, and the courts of Ontario had decided that such was the law of the land. The matter had been brought before the railway representatives of the Board of Trade Council, but they had refused to come forward and volunteer responsibility on the part of their agents. The president announced that the matter would be taken into consideration at an early date.—Bradstreet.

THE DECLINE OF OATMEAL PORRIDGE.

Although Queen Victoria is said to retain the custom of a dish of oatmeal porridge, served every morning in a blue china bowl, the fashion of oatmeal as a necessary breakfast dish has sensibly declined in America. Some people frankly do not like oatmeal; others assert that it is injurious to the complexion; most prefer varied food which contains the same elements of nutriment as oatmeal. There are various morning dishes which may be served as a porridge. Among the most palatable are white wheat, cerealine, wheaten, wheatlet, hominy, cracked wheat and yellow Indian meal mush. Any kind of wheat food is palatable when served with cream, and it forms a useful addition to the breakfast. The Scotchman will have his bowl of oatmeal porridge each morning and his bowl of milk near by, but the American taste prefers a variety of food and does not take kindly to the oatmeal custom.

THE SUGAR CROP.

The sugar season has about drawn to a close, as far as the work of the sugar houses is concerned, the greatest number of which have already closed for the season, and the remainder being engaged in finishing up the remainder of their cane, says The New Orleans Picayune. While it is generally admitted that the work of taking off the crop was accomplished more rapidly than was expected, owing to the yield proving smaller in many localities than it was believed it would be at the opening of the season, the general results of the campaign proved quite satisfactory, as any disappointment in the matter of yield was more than made up by the higher prices realized for sugar than was the rule last season.

According to the records of the Sugar Exchange, the receipts here to date exceed those of last year by a trifle over 100,000 barrels. It is believed that enough sugar will yet come forward to bring the arrivals up to somewhere near the figures of two years ago, as far as sugar in barrels is concerned. The amount of sugar in hogsheads, however, will not reach nearly so large a total as was the case in that year, hence the crop, while showing a fair gain over last season, will still prove considerably short of the year before last.

As far as prices are concerned there has been a very pronounced improvement over the last two seasons. The demand for Louisiana sugar has not been so great in years as it has been recently, and hardly a season in the past can show a record of so steady and uninterrupted an advance as has been the rule since October 1. No matter how large the receipts, and there have been many days on which the arrivals broke all past records, no difficulty was experienced in disposing of all the sugar offered for sale.

Not only have the refiners been large buyers of Louisiana sugar this season, but dealers and speculators have also purchased freely, and to this competition is largely due the satisfactory range of prices which prevailed. Now, therefore, that the season is nearing its end, as far as the producers are concerned, its results can be reviewed with as much satisfaction, as the successful sale of this year's sugar crop has added many millions of dollars to the profits of the planters of Louisiana, and has placed the cane industry on a more profitable footing than it has enjoyed for years.

The sugar bounty service is also working more smoothly this year than last, so that there is reason to expect that the payments will be made more promptly, and the producers be able to enjoy the full results of their harvest at a much earlier date than during the first year under the bounty system.

The causes which kept the price of sugar at so satisfactory a range this season are still in full force. The outlook for supplies is as unpromising as ever, while consumptive requirements continue to increase steadily, making altogether as strong a statistical position as the friends of sugar could wish.

WHERE LICORICE GROWS.

On the banks of the Tigris and the Euphrates the licorice plant is chiefly grown. These great rivers flow through flat, treeless prairies, of uncultivated and nearly uninhabited land, says The Boston Traveller. For three months of the year hot winds blow, and the temperature reaches 104 degrees.

For six months of the year the climate is moderate and salubrious, and for three months bleak and wintry, the thermometer going down to thirty degrees at night.

The licorice plant is a small shrub, with light foliage, growing to about three feet high, where its roots can reach the water. It grows without any cultivation. No lands are leased for the purpose and no objection is made to its being cultivated. It grows on red-earth soil, and also on light, almost sandy, where the wood is best, provided it has plenty of water and the ground is not more than fifty yards from the actual river or stream.

The wood, after once being dug up, grows better afterward. The time of collecting is generally during the winter, but it is possible all the year round. The root when dug is full of water, and must be allowed to dry, a process which takes the best part of a year. It is then sawed or cut into small pieces from six inches to a foot long.

The good and sound pieces are kept and the rotten ones are used for firewood. It is then taken in native river boats to Bussorah, whence it is shipped in pressed bales to London, and again from there to America, where it is used largely in the manufacture of tobacco.

The black licorice sticks sold in drug stores come mostly from Spain and are made of pure juice, mixed with a little starch, which prevents it from melting in hot weather. The word "licorice" is of Greek origin, and means "sweet root."

HIGH FREIGHTS THE CAUSE.

Letters to the American Soap Journal from soap-makers in San Salvador state: "You will be astonished to hear that we obtain 12 cents for one pound of laundry soap, and 30 cents for one pound of stearic acid candles; but your astonishment will disappear knowing that every pound of tallow costs us 12 cents, one pound of rosin 5 cents, one pound coconut oil 15 cents, and so on. Our soaps are all pure because every filling, except salt and water, costs us more than rosin. The high price of our prime materials consists in the freights by sea and land, for we have to import almost everything."

CALIFORNIA BEET SUGAR INDUSTRY.

The San Francisco Call, in reviewing the progress of the beet sugar industry on the Pacific slope, says that in the year just ended the total amount of refined sugar made in the State amounted to nearly 23,000,000 pounds, as against 8,000,000 for the preceding season, the increase having been nearly threefold. This is exceedingly encouraging. There are but three factories at work—one at Alvarado, one at Watsonville, and one at Chino—but others are promised in the San Joaquin Valley and in the new County of Orange. The planting of sugar beets is, in the opinion of the Call, so sure a road to money-making that it is pretty sure to become a large industry. Whether the beet-grower gets $5 a ton for his beets, as he does in Alameda, or $4.25 a ton, as he does in Chino, the culture pays him better than grain would, and nearly as well as fruit.

THE PATRONIZING MERCHANT.

There is nothing so ridiculous and so easily discernable in a merchant as an air of patronage toward customers. It is a species of vanity which is as ludicrous as it is disagreeable. This weakness is called bumptiousness and is repelling to the general run of customers, who are quick to distinguish it from a pleasant presence. A pleasant presence in the store is one of the essentials towards the success of a merchant. This essential of a pleasant presence is made up of simplicity. Just that and nothing else. Simplicity is the most charming of all qualities and is and always has been possessed by the men and women that the world deems great. The simple man is natural and is possessed of a suavity which is real. Assumed suavity is generally made up of bumptiousness and is as different from the inherent quality as the sweet violet is different from the violet of the millinery counter.

The bumptious merchant in his vanity reckons himself somewhat of a philanthropist. His behavior towards his customers is offensive to those amongst them who are of a keen or sensitive nature. In his overweening vanity he reckons himself the patron and the customer the beneficiary. Every action of his conveys that expression. When he is sympathetic he is condescendingly so; heartiness is luring and often vulgar, his insincerity is apparent, for humanity is a distinctive judge of disposition and character. The patronizing merchant is a humbug.—Ex.

THE COFFEE CROP.

The publication of crop estimates continues to influence the market in an upward direction, says the London Produce Markets Review. Not only does the belief gain ground that the next Brazil crop will be considerably below the average, but the first estimate of the Java crop points to almost a failure, as the "Government" crop is put at only 150,000 bags, against a yield last year of 673,000 bags, and the "private" crop is equally small. It is true that first estimates from Java are usually much below the actual out-turn, and are consequently misleading, but it is certain that leaf disease has seriously affected the trees there as it has done in Ceylon, and that the coffee growing industry has had a serious check in consequence.

CULTIVATE A MEMORY FOR NAMES.

"As good a piece of advice as I could give a young man starting business," said an old successful merchant, "would be to get his customers' names right. Of course, everybody means to do this, but I don't think everybody attaches to it its full importance. The fact is that almost every man is proud of his name, whatever it may be, and he dislikes to see it misspelled or incorrectly written. There are plenty of names which sound alike, but which vary in the spelling, perhaps by only a single letter; and, too, in taking a man's name it is not so difficult as one might imagine to make a mistake in the initials, for there are letters which sound very much alike. When you get a new customer get his name right to start with. No man likes to receive a package or a bill or a communication of any sort with his name misspelled however modest and good natured he may be, he is pretty sure to be annoyed by it."—Sun.

WORLD'S FAIR TEA EXHIBIT.

A. E. Pineo, a native of Ceylon, was in Chicago during the past week, and in an interview gave the following facts regarding the exhibit of tea which that country will make during the great exposition. He said: "The tea exhibit of Ceylon at the Columbian Exposition will be the largest ever displayed in the world. Our government has already shipped a number of natives, who will arrive at Vancouver about February 1. These natives, who have passed most of their lives in the Ceylon tea fields, will give a picturesque exhibit. They have constructed a building made from native wood, which is being transported to Chicago. In this house tea will be prepared and served free during the fair. Although on the other side of the world, the people of Ceylon are manifesting great interest in the World's Columbian Exposition, and several of the government officials have expressed their intention of being present to establish, if possible, closer social and commercial relations with this country."—Chicago Grocer.

TO PUSH THE SALE OF TEAS.

In the window of a Broadway store, which has an extensive stock of East India goods, there is an exhibit of tea and implements connected with its making. There are in the base of the window beautiful specimens of Japanese teapots in bronze and lacquered boxes or caskets in which are metal boxes for holding tea. The various sorts of tea are put up in one-pound packets, having cardinal paper covers, on which are printed directions for making tea. These say that it should never be made in metal pots, but only in china and earthenware, and that the tea should be steeped for only five minutes and served in the same room in which it is made. The only teapots shown are of metal, this part of the exhibit being in contradiction of the directions for brewing. A striking feature of this exhibit, however, is the different packets of tea bearing various labels, of which the following will give a fair illustration: Russian Caravan, Khe Wei Chop, $3 per pound; Young Hyson, Hichibo Chop, 75 cents per pound; Ceylon Cho-yve Chop, $1.50 per pound; uncolored Japan Bo-Ja Chop, 60 cents per pound.

The point to be gained by retailers from this exhibit is to push the sale of high-priced teas, or such as are above the average quality. Impress upon the mind of consumers that there is a delicious aroma connected with fancy teas. By charging a high price the impression is fixed upon their minds that high quality must be inherent in the article. We believe that the day is coming when there will be a great advance in the demand for high grade China teas. Thus far the bulk of our supplies are of very ordinary grade, so that there is a large field to be occupied by those who succeed in building up a patronage on the best of teas at full prices. Of course there are exceptions to all rules, and we can see that such a policy as we have outlined would be futile in some sections, and yet, in the tenement house districts of this city, consumers pay more attention to quality than in other districts where well-to-do people reside, who leave the procuring of their supplies largely to their steward or cook.—American Grocer.

THE IDEAL HUSTLER.

"How do some drummers sell lots of goods and others very little?" repeated George Washington White, one of the brightest lights of the Quincy crowd, in answer to a query from an outsider. "Well, I'll tell you a little story. I heard two drummers talking once. One was selling stacks of goods, while the other was being left all round. The unsuccessful man had put your query to the other. 'How do you sell so many goods, while it seems I can't make a sale?' 'Well,' answered the other, 'there is a secret about it. You are just starting out, and, to help you along, I'll give you this pointer, but you must keep it secret.' 'Sure,' replied the younger, beaming with pleasant anticipation, 'how do you manage to be so successful?' 'I always make it a point,' replied the elder, 'to wear out the soles of my shoes instead of the seat of my trousers.'"

A NEW PENCIL.

The New York Times says: Inventive genius promises to do away with all of those petty annoyances which are the most prolific sources of profanity. True, the saint has not yet appeared who is ready to furnish mankind at a small cost with a patent collar-button finder, or with an opera glass warrantee to see through a "love of a bonnet" designed on Eiffel Tower lines, but even those blessings may be hoped for. However, you, who in a loud voice or under your breath, make thyself undeserving of the gift of speech over such a trivial matter as the breaking off of the points of thy lead pencils at the most inopportune time, there is no longer any excuse for thee. Genius has wiped out that cause of his undoing. Relief has come in the shape of a pencil which, while not everlastingly pointed, yet gives opportunity to men to break about as many points as any reasonable man would want to break, and still have a point left to keep on writing with. The article consists of a very light metal tube, shaped and pointed like an ordinary lead pencil. In this tube are inserted about a dozen short and nicely sharpened pencil points. If you break off the first you just pull it out and stick it in the top. That forces the second point down into position. So you can keep on getting a new point whenever you break one off by just pulling out the broken point and sticking it in the top of the tube.

"But what do you do when you have broken off all of the dozen pencil points?"

"Why, just throw the whole business away. The little tube with its load of sharpened pencils cost just about the same as an ordinary pencil, and will do just about the same amount of work. With it, however, you always have command of a sharpened pencil point and you never have to smudge your fingers as you do when sharpening your pencil."

CHRISTIANITY IN BUSINESS.

We often hear it affirmed that in these days successful business cannot be operated on Christian principles. If this is untrue anywhere it is in the retail dry goods store, where the aim is to win a customer's constant trade by establishing yourself in his confidence for honesty and straightforwardness. And the application of the golden rule, as all life teaches, is the surest, quickest and safest way to accomplish that end. You may lose a dollar on a sale by giving a customer an inside fact concerning a certain article he is about to buy, but you have won that man's confidence and respect a hundred dollars' worth. The way to win a man's confidence and respect and good will is through kind accommodations, good cheer, soft answers, pleasant words, sincere appreciation, sacrifice of time and effort and other Christian means, and the way to win a customer is no different. The most accomplished buyers are more than buyers. They are men and women. Human nature is strong over all training and acquisition, and that which influences and touches a man or a woman will influence and touch a buyer, a customer.—Exchange.

A TYPEWRITER TRUST.

Rumors are flying thick and fast as to the formation or attempted formation of a typewriter trust. That such a combination is in process of formation there can be no doubt, although the alleged promoters of the scheme are evidently withholding the facts until they are assured of success. The name of E. N. Fowler, of the Equitable Mortgage Company, 40 Wall street, is most prominently connected with the matter. The scheme, so far as facts can be arrived at with the meager information granted, seems to be the formation of a single company which shall be composed of all or as many as possible of the firms engaged in this line of business.

Each company will be represented in the combination to the extent of the value of its business. This company will issue $20,000,000 of stock, of which each company in the trust will hold shares equal to the value of its plant, the value of which in each of the companies concerned is now said to be in process of adjustment. The sum mentioned is undoubtedly far too large, as good authority says that it is more than double enough to buy up all the typewriter companies in the country. Under such a combination it is alleged that the price of machines will not be advanced, and that the only object is to do away with the severe competition which enters into the transaction of business as now conducted, and thus reduce the expenses, and, incidentally, of course, increase profits.—American Stationer.

Discussing the proposal to pass a Dominion insolvency law, the St. John Telegraph remarks that by it Toronto and Montreal wholesalers and manufacturers hope to be placed in a more favorable position with respect to maritime debtors than they now are. This, says the Montreal Gazette, about describes the situation. The western wholesalers hope, by an insolvency law, to secure the same share of a maritime insolvent's assets, when he owes them money, as his local creditors obtain. They do not ask any more, and they ask this because as the law now is they rarely can obtain it.

COFFEE CULTIVATION IN MEXICO.

The American Agriculturist of a recent issue contains the following interesting article, from the pen of E. P. Allen, regarding the growing of coffee in Mexico:

The planter who makes coffee growing a business, will select a somewhat shaded recess somewhere between the ridges of the giant mountains which stretch their huge lengths from Guatemala along the Pacific to Sineala, or upon the Gulf coast from Yucatan to Tamaulipas. Or, he may turn to some of the numerous fertile valleys which lie in deep dents on the great Central tableland. The height at which he will naturally locate his field will be from 1,000 to 4,000 feet above the sea, but he may even go 1,000 feet higher and not go beyond success, as he may also seek a lower level, since in some places, coffee is produced at the very seaside. Off the eastern coast of Yucatan, on the island of Cozumel, coffee trees of prolific yield are growing nearly at a sea level as well as in many other localities on both the Pacific and Gulf coasts. Indeed, the objection to the sea lands for this purpose is probably not on account of the effect of the climate upon the plants, but upon the planter, the tierra caliente being everywhere unhealthy.

As in Brazil the plants are started in a nursery. At the age of one year or eighteen months the infant shrubs are transplanted to the capetalis, or coffee field, which has been thoroughly cleaned of all undergrowth and the soil well prepared. To protect the young plants from the sun, open forests are used and mountain sides which afford shade. In open fields a growing shade must be created, which is most quickly obtained by planting bananas between the coffee plants. But some more intelligent planters set out their fields with cinchona trees for shade, and these yield quinine, and some use oak and walnut trees for the purpose. A reasonably rich soil is desirable for coffee, and manuring pays well, often increasing the yield to three pounds. In exceptional cases it has risen to twenty-five pounds for one tree, under favorable conditions.

Plants are set out about three yards apart, although often planted closer. Sometimes irrigation is necessary, but not often when the plants are once well started. Pruning a tree back to six or eight feet in height is thought to improve its yield. The coffee shrub has a curious habit of blooming three times a year, sometimes as early as December, then along in February and April. This makes the gathering of the crop a tedious task, as each tree must be gone over by hand, and must be done carefully, which requires an extra number of laborers, but women and children can be employed at low wages. After picking by hand, the next process is to dry the berries, which is done in the sun, beneath which they shrivel and change to a black color. They are then put into a mortar and the grains hulled or beaten out with a pestle and then separated from the husks by the crude old-fashioned method of fanning them out by hand, or winnowing, though sometimes a fan mill is used. It is then carefully picked over by hand, put into sacks, and is ready for market. So far, in its cultivation, no disease of plant or berry has been developed, and no insects have attacked it. It is also clean and comparatively easy to cultivate. Only at the picking season is there much urgency required. Once gathered, the crop can be prepared for market at the planter's convenience.

The greatest difficulty lies in the fact that the planter must wait at least five years from the seed sowing before he obtains a return upon his investment, and the first year's crop barely pays the cost of cultivation and curing. But, as compensation for this, a plantation once established yields a never-failing crop without renewal, anxiety, or uncertainty, for a lifetime. An intelligent American planter in the valley of Cordova claims, that with attention and care, plants ought to continue bearing vigorously for fifty years. The profit upon well grown plantations is not less than 100 per cent. over the cost of cultivation. An attractive feature in coffee planting in Mexico is that its habitat is usually a locality both healthy and pleasing, high enough to escape the diseases of the tropics, and ever in the midst of the most beautiful scenery. The great possibility of expansion of this industry can be estimated by comparing its present output with that of Brazil, not more favorably situated as to climate or people than Mexico. With the degree of peace and safety, now assured to the immigrant, this branch of agriculture offers great attractions to the farmer.

BUSINESS CHANGES.

FIRES.

The hardware and tin shop of A. U. Otton, adjoining the Traders' Bank, Glencoe, was destroyed by fire Saturday night. Loss partly covered by insurance.

The total loss by fire in London, Ont., during 1892 was $32,000, and the total insurance thereon was $600,000. There were 133 fires in all, and in only three instances was there no insurance held on burned property. Good for the Forest City.

Oil City was visited by a destructive fire Friday. The fire broke out in the building owned by James Keating who occupied the second and third stories as a dwelling, the first story being occupied by W. T. Trott as a general store. This building and the post office and a vacant store owned by J. B. McGregor, were all destroyed. Mr. Keating has $1,000 insurance on the building and $250 on furniture. Loss, $3,000. Mr. Trott has $5,500 insurance on stock. Loss, $7,000. Mr. McGregor has no insurance. Loss, $1,500. The fire originated in Trott's store. Everything was a total loss.

SALES MADE OR PENDING.

S. A. Perry, furniture and undertaker, of Cookstown has sold out to Thomas Jebb.

George Rawe, groceries and fruits, of Walkerton, has been succeeded by Ephraim Kaiser.

W. J. Shea has bought the boot and shoe stock of A. Laurier & Co., of Montreal, at 70 cents on the dollar.

The hat and fur stock of M. Boucher & Co., of Montreal, has been sold to J. H. Leduc at 45c. on the dollar.

DIFFICULTIES, ASSIGNMENTS, COMPROMISES
R. J. Harison, a Teetersville general merchant, has assigned to George Hayes.

F. B. Skinner, furniture dealer, of Guelph, is offering his creditors 25c. on the dollar.

E. J. O'Keefe & Co., boots and shoes, of Hamilton, have assigned to A. E. Pecover.

John Nimmo, hardware dealer of this city, is offering to compromise and is closing up business.

Cutting steaks and joints has apparently not kept the wolf from the door of W. A.

Buchner, of Sarnia, for he has assigned to J. Flintoft.

Samuel S. Edsall, hardware merchant, of Bowmanville, offered his creditors 50c. on the dollar, and failing in this assigned to William H. Garrett.

E. Snell, general merchant, of Jamestown, has assigned to C. B. Armstrong; and D. F. Armstrong, boots and shoes, of Kingston, has done likewise to W. Downing.

Victor Rebanlet, proprietor of the Montreal Cork Company, has found business too light and he is reported to have left. His creditors will meet and weigh matters Feb. 6.

D. Auld, boots and shoes; N. Beaudry & Fils, jewelers; A. Brahadi, furs; Samuel Mills, hats and furs; J. Omer Pare, dry goods, all Montreal merchants, were all in one day reported to have assigned.

George Halliday, general merchant, of Arnprior, has assigned to Alex. Mutchmor. Samuel Straith, in a similar line of business at Harrow, has placed his affairs in the hands of R. S. Macdonald.

The creditors of Bertram, Lavelle & Clinis, importers of stationery of Montreal, are evidently not satisfied with the way business is being carried on. At all events they have issued a demand for an assignment.

The cold weather and consequent demand for furs has evidently not been sufficient to keep J. F. Deslawrie a Montreal hatter and furrier from sinking under the weight of his embarrassments, he having assigned to C. Demarteau.

Michael Bulger, of Bulger, Ont., general merchant, has been unable to meet his liabilities and his creditors have compromised with him at 50c. on the dollar. Lester Day, of Harlem, Ont., general storekeeper is seeking a like favor from his creditors.

A trio of Ottawa merchants are seeking the leniency of their creditors. Joseph Cate, hats and furs, is trying to get his creditors to knock off four-fifths of his liability, while P. Wilfred Laroil, tobaccoist will be satisfied with a reduction of 25 per cent. It is not reported what Burton Hiram, furniture dealer, wants taken off his account.

Juvenile customer—I want 10 cents' worth of cheese, sir, if you please.

Grocer (cutting off a chunk and weighing it)—I'm sorry, little girl, but I've cut off a trifle too much. Here's a quarter's worth.

FERMENTATIVE CHANGES IN TOBACCO.

The fermentative changes which the leaves of the tobacco plant are made to undergo before they are worked up and placed on the market are of the greatest importance in determining the quality of the tobacco. The changes in the properties of tobacco induced by the process of sweating were formerly supposed to be purely chemical, but some recent interesting investigations go to show that they are due to special micro-organisms. Sachsland recently read a paper before the German Botanical Society, in which he gave an account of some investigations which he has been conducting on the bacteria found in different kinds of tobacco. He has examined fermented tobacco from all parts of the world, and found large numbers of micro-organisms, although not generally more than two or three varieties in any particular brand. But what is of special interest is the discovery that pure cultures of bacteria obtained from one kind of tobacco, and inoculated unto another kind, generated in the latter a taste and aroma recalling the taste and aroma of the tobacco from which the pure cultures are procured. Thus it may be possible to raise the quality of home-grown tobacco by inoculating it with cultures of the bacteria found in the finer-flavored foreign tobacco. —Nature.

ABOUT the 1st of February we will offer to the trade, the largest collection of import samples ever shown by any house in Canada. The assortment will comprise a great variety of China and Glass, both staple and fancy, and buyers will consult their own interest by looking through our show rooms before placing their orders for importation.

Once again has Mr. Taylor essayed to test the feeling of the members of the House of Commons regarding the desirability of prohibiting the importation into Canada or the manufacture therein of lard adulterated with cotton seed oil or other injurious ingredients." The resolution is similar to that which the Hon. gentleman introduced in 1888. He argued along the line that the impure article entered into competition with the fat of the Canadian hog raised for home consumption and therefore should be disallowed. He pointed out that one-and-a-half million pounds of oleomargarine was imported into the country against 246,000 pounds of butter for home consumption. Of the latter 237,500 pounds went into British Columbia. Of lard 2,000 pounds came from England and 690,766 pounds from the United States. The fate of the resolution is yet in suspension.

There is one country at least in which the farmer's lot is not growing less happy. It is the colony of Victoria, Australia, where both land and stock have notably increased in value of late, the former being worth £1 an acre more than formerly and the latter £1 per head more. The principal reason advanced for this happy condition of affairs is the development of the butter industry, and the Government expert is the authority. The profits realized by the Victorian farmers in the production of butter for the year 1892 amounted to £250,000 sterling. Not satisfied with this, the farmers are discussing ways and means of making this particular industry still more lucrative. Provided the state of the market be unaltered and the industry of butter making continues to develop at the present rate, the Government dairy expert anticipates that this year the net gains will double those of 1893, and that in 1894 they will reach the tidy little sum of £750,000.

Would that we in Canada could show such a favorable development in the butter-making industry! If we have not in the past, however, there is no reason why we should not in the future. The conditions are favorable; we have the stock and a good climate. But the trouble is in the manufacture; our methods are antiquated, and the product lacks that uniformity so essential to give it an entrance to the British market. The Dominion and Provincial governments have inaugurated what may be termed a progressive butter policy. But Canadian butter has fallen into such poor reputation abroad that it will take time and perseverance before it can obtain the favor and patronage of the fastidious English consumer. We will get it, however, and the continuance of the methods used to obtain it will keep it. And country merchants can assist in securing the desideratum by exercising more discrimination when taking butter from the farmers and when packing it and shipping it off to the city commission men.

Excellent as is the public school system of Ontario, a good many persons are of the impression that it is not as practical as it might be. Deputy Minister of Agriculture James is among those who hold that view. In his essay on "The Teaching of Agriculture in the Public Schools," he points out that the true history of this province has been worked out upon the farm, in clearing the forest, in reclaiming the swamp, in the construction of roads, in the improvement of our stock, and the development of our produce for market. "How many can tell when improved stock was first introduced into Canada?" he asks. And then he proceeds to give some of the desired information: "In 1864 the first cheese factory was built in Ontario, in the country of Oxford, and by 1867 the system was fairly established in the east and the west of making cheese in co-operative factories instead of in the farm dairies. To-day, twenty-eight years afterwards, there are in Ontario alone 838 factories in operation, producing annually 2,000,000 pounds of cheese, worth $8,000,000. The cheese exports of Canada are over 27 per cent. of the entire agricultural exports, and nearly 12 per cent. of the total exports. The growth of cheese exports since the introduction of the factory system may be seen from the following:—In 1866, $123,494; in 1871, $1,109,906; in 1876, $4,050,008; in 1881, $5,510,443; in 1886, $6,754,626; in 1891, $9,508,800. These and kindred subjects are what he urges should find a larger place in the curriculum of the rural schools.

Mr. Nicholas Flood Davin, M^r P. for West Assiniboia has given notice of a bill to abolish the privilege of grinding in bond. The privilege has been in force since 1880. Mr. Davin, in introducing his bill, was not traveling exactly along the line of facts when he intimated that the privilege was granted Ontario millers because they could not at that time get enough wheat in this country to keep their mills running. What it was really created for, was to ensure to the miller a supply of wheat, whereby he might be able to compete, on an equal footing, with his American confrere in the British market. At least this what the millers themselves contend. Under the present system, if Canadian wheat should rise in value above that of the American the miller in this country can send across the border, get the wheat he desires, run it through his mill in bond and then export the product to Great Britain on the same basis as the miller across the line. From what we can gather there has practically been no wheat ground in bond during the last year or so, but the millers are loath to part with it nevertheless. "I look upon it as being something like a safety valve, we may never have any further use for it, but if we should we would want it to act quickly," said one miller to the GROCER.

* * *

The millers also contend that the privilege of grinding in bond tends, in the long run, to ensure a better price to the Canadian farmer for his wheat. And they reason something like this: "It is well known that you can get a better price for an article that is always before the public than you can for one that is only on the market occasionally. Well, then, supposing these grinding in bond privileges were taken away and the price of Canadian wheat was to reach a point which would prevent our selling flour in the British market as cheap as the Americans, what would be our position? Why it would simply mean that we would have to cease exporting till prices dropped sufficiently to enable us to again ship at a profit. But in the meantime we would have probably lost our grip on the market there. The result would be that we would be compelled to accept proportionally lower prices, and of course we would in turn have to pay the farmer less for his wheat."

* * *

Compared with the growth of other Canadian industries, that of canning has no reason to hang its head. On the contrary it has increased in importance about as rapidly as any of them, and in probably no particular more so than in the canning of peas. Heretofore the French article has been king. Now not only is the Canadian article displacing the foreign, but it has deigned to cross the Atlantic and do battle with it in its stronghold in Great Britain. And even there it promises to be a competitor by no means to be ignored. Several sales of Canadian canned peas have been made there, and the prospects are reported bright for further orders.

There is a shortage of over two million hogs in the United States, and it is estimated that for the packing season, from November to March, it will reach 3,000,000 hogs. This is being used as an illustration to induce the American farmer to go more extensively into hog raising. The same argument might be extended to the Canadian farmer. Comparatively speaking, hog raising is attended with less labor than any other branch of stock raising and there is always a demand for good animals.

* * *

The position of red clover is such that those who are handling the article will do well to exercise a good deal of care. The lightness of the crop in the United States last year has enabled certain speculators to get it in a corner. It seems that the greater portion is held in Toledo, a centre of one of the red clover growing districts. The effect of this corner has been to greatly excite the Canadian as well as the United States market. The western parts of the Province of Ontario is particularly agitated, and exceptionally high prices are being paid by those who have caught the speculative fever. Those who seem to be the most affected outside the producers are country merchants. The big seed dealers profess to be little concerned, and they are refusing to pay more than what they consider the legitimate value. Corners are as a rule uncertain things, for there is no telling when the barriers that enclose them may be knocked away, and the less faith one pins in them the better.

* * *

The grocers of New York are having a hard time of it in their fight for free berry packages. The fruit receivers have expressed their willingness to comply with the demands of the grocers, but the great obstacle yet to be overcome is the objection of the growers. As the receivers and the growers are standing together, it is expected that the desideratum will yet be obtained.

* * *

The retail grocers of Indiana propose to petition its legislature to pass a law that will protect them from deadbeats. A legislature can do much in the way of providing means for the punishment of fraudulent persons and but comparatively little in the way of protecting the public against them. Burglary is unlawful, but if doors and windows are imperfectly fastened the midnight mechanic occasionally effects an entrance and carries off the goods and chattels. So with regard to dead beats. The best kind of protection is precaution. The possession of a list of persons unworthy of credit is a good thing, but a rule not to trust anyone until his ability to pay and honesty has been established, is better.

* * *

Politeness is one of the essentials necessary to success in the grocery business. Civility is said to be one of the scarcest articles in the market. If this is true it is all the more reason why it should be cultivated. Diamonds cannot be secured by all, but the possession of the jewel of politeness is within the possibility of every one. The grocer who is morose and sullen cannot expect to make much headway in this day and generation, when competition is keen and it is necessary to have sails trimmed to catch every favorable breeze. Some business men, realizing the importance of politeness, furnish their clerks with rules for their government in this respect. Politeness overdone is toadyism. This is offensive, and care should be exercised to prevent the rushing off into this extreme.

* * *

It has been some time since the grocery market was so strong generally. Teas and coffees are threatening to reach a point where consumption will be checked. In fact, in the case of the latter this seems to have been already done. Canned goods have also a firmer tone, and fruits are in a rather better position. The advance in canned meats has been considerable. Even sugars continue to hold their own. Such allied articles as lard and oatmeal also show substantial advances.

* * *

A good many merchants lose accounts because they are diffident. An account should be presented as soon as it is due. No man ought to be timid about asking for what is his own. The retailer should remember that he has obligations to the wholesaler that he must discharge, and this he cannot do unless he is prompt in his demands upon his customers.

* * *

Good country roads is the desideratum which about every municipality on this continent is seeking. The New York World has taken such an interest in the matter that it has sent out an exploring wagon for searching out bad roads in the neighborhood of the city. Good highways are only a question of money and time.

HAVE ASSIGNEES HAD THEIR DAY?

We live in a period of evolution. For years the official assignee has been a prominent figure in the commercial world. He was a necessity of the age, and upon the misfortunes of others he lived and thrived. In the settlement of difficulties between debtor and creditor he was called in as counsellor. When the debtor, weighed down by his burdens, could carry on his business no longer, the assignee was placed in charge. When the estate was to be wound up on him devolved the duty.

During the last five or six years the number of assignees have increased at a rapid rate. The influx to the profession was induced by the large number of failures from time to time occurring. Accountants saw in it an opportunity for making more money, and into the business many of them launched. As in other professions, some were successful but a good many were not. They could not all, like Cæsar, say: "I came, I saw, I conquered."

During the last twelve months or so there has been a marked decrease, not only in the number of failures, but also in the average of liabilities. As a result there came a falling off in the demand for assignees. Some of them did not get much to do even in the days when the crop of business failures was large; under the altered circumstances they could not glean enough "wherewithal they might be clothed." Some of them, as a consequence, have gone out of the business altogether, while with others the assignee branch has become a secondary consideration, their energies being devoted to the cultivation of expert accountancy, such as auditing and the supervision of books. Even the largest assignee firms in this city have had recourse to this plan, and they seem to be finding plenty of employment in this sphere for their talents.

MINERAL WATERS AND GINGER ALE.

The quality of an article and its adaptability to the public taste can often be only ascertained after years of actual trial in competition with other similar articles. If after such a trial it emerges with increased popularity, it has found a place in the market which time will strengthen instead of weaken. We see this in some of the cocoas, mustards, pickles, etc., which, after being a large number of years on the market, are still increasing in popularity.

The same illustration applies to the ginger ales and mineral waters manufactured by Charles Wilson, of this city. He obtained his first insight into the business in 1850, when in the city of Montreal he was apprenticed to the bottling trade. The cause of non-success to many a young man is wrong choice of avocation. But Mr. Wilson evidently did not make a mistake, for the apprentice in a comparatively short time rose to be manager and subsequently to a partnership in the enterprise. Even here he did not stop, for a few years later he retired from the partnership. He wanted a larger and freer field where he could put into practice the ideas he had stored up during years of experience. And so he established, on his own account, a factory with a capacity of 300 dozen a day. The product of the new factory rapidly became popular, and very soon it was found necessary, in order to supply the demand, to put in additional machinery and appliances, increasing the output to 1,000 dozen per day.

Seventeen years ago Mr. Wilson saw what he considered to be a larger field in Toronto. He accordingly sold out his Montreal factory and came to the Queen City. Here he had new fields to conquer, and well has he succeeded. Not long after he commenced business in Toronto he exhibited his ginger ales and mineral waters at the Centennial Exhibition in Philadelphia, where he was awarded a certificate and medal. At the Metropolitan International Exhibition, held in Sydney, New South Wales, he carried off another medal. Satisfactory as were these awards to Mr. Wilson, the awards of a liberal public patronage have been more so. The one was obtained as the result of a test by a few judges; the other from a critical public after years of acquaintanceship.

The factory, which is situated at 519 Sherbourne street, is fitted up with the latest approved appliances and machinery, and from a point of completeness is said to be unsurpassed in Canada. Seventeen hands are employed. The factory turns out all kinds of mineral waters, soda water in syphons and other bottles, ginger ale in quart and pint bottles, sarsaparilla, lemonade, cream soda, etc. The best of ingredients, competent workmen and personal supervision by the proprietor are the factors which have given Wilson's mineral waters and ginger ales the high reputation they now possess, and as long as these exist his products will continue to be known as the standard.

CONGRATULATIONS, MR. CORRIE.

Mr. R. M. Corrie, the popular secretary of the Toronto Retail Grocers' Association has joined the ranks of the benedicts. The ceremony that raised him to the new sphere of life was performed on the 23rd of last month, but it was only a few days ago that it was given publicly and then only after he had returned from his wedding trip. The nuptial knot was tied by Rev. Wm. Patterson of Cooke's church at the Parsonage, and after the ceremony the happy couple took the afternoon train for the west. The honeymoon was spent in the principal cities and towns in Western Ontario and in Detroit.

Now that the matter is no longer a secret congratulations have been showering in from all sides and Mr. Corrie has been kept busy returning the warm grasps of his friends.

The bride was Miss Lily, youngest daughter of Mr. F. S. Grantham of 786 Queen street east. THE GROCER tenders its congratulations to Mr. and Mrs. Corrie, and hopes that their joys will be many and sorrows few.

AMERICAN TEA.

It was grown in South Carolina and is equal to the best English Breakfast, says Retail Grocers' Advocate. The first marketable tea ever produced in the United States was brought to Baltimore by Charles U. Shepard, of Summerfield, S. C., who grew and cured the plant on his farm. The American tea was tested by Mr. Gillet Gill, who pronounced it equal to the best high-grade English breakfast tea and superior to many grades that come from India and China. The samples brought here by Mr. Shepard are all of one quality and character—black, crisp and well scented. It makes a strong beverage. The quality of the American tea is said by Mr. Gill to be due solely to its treatment in fermentation and curing. Other methods of curing the American product will produce tea similar to the several brands that come from India and China. Judging from Mr. Shepard's samples, Mr. Gill says he believes the successful growing of tea in the United States is established and that the industry should be encouraged and fostered. Mr. Shepard raised only forty pounds of tea this year, which was cured in an ordinary fruit evaporator.

NOT AN EASY TASK.

When you talk about well-posted grocers did you ever pause to consider the number of articles handled by a grocer, and the necessity for him to understand the merits and variation in quality of each and every one of them? asks Retail Grocer's Journal. The well-posted retail grocer is a regular encyclopedia of knowledge on food products. He has to run up against the department men in the wholesale houses, who give their whole attention to one particular line, and who are not presumed to interfere with each other. To hold his own he has to cope with the knowledge of men who are specialists in their line, the managers of the coffee, cigars and tobacco, tea, canned goods, and fancy groceries departments. Those who think this is an easy task are in error. The successful retail grocer deserves credit for holding his own.

WATCHMAN! WHAT OF THE NIGHT? WILL THE NIGHT SOON PASS?

4 Edge Lane, Charlton-cum-Hardy, Manchester, England.

January 24, '93.

SIR,—I often fancy I hear that cry ringing over the ocean from England's sons in Canada; and, if at the present juncture Canadian dairy owners, packers and shippers, will bestir themselves, I can with confidence reply: "The night is departing; the day is at hand." Who will point the right way? Which path leads to the desired goal? Let us examine the question.

Casting my eye over the events of the last few years in connection with Canada and its output of food products, and more particularly its dairy and hog products, and its method of disposing of them, the question forces itself upon me, are the Canadian packers setting to work in such a way as to realize the best price obtainable for their goods, and to secure them a fair, competitive position in the English market? I confess I don't believe they are.

As an Englishman, and belonging to an old English family, I hate the idea of Canada pushing before the United States, and accepting any terms they like to impose if they will only take her produce. Speaking also as an English trader, and as one who knows a little of what he is talking about, I say there is no need of anything of the kind. We over here can dispose of all the output from Canada's dairies and packing houses, and at remunerative prices; or at least at far more remunerative prices than she gets now, if we only have the chance. How do these goods at present reach us in Manchester and the adjoining large towns? Through the medium of Liverpool houses, all or nearly all of them largely interested in the dairies and packing houses of the States. The result naturally is that Canadian produce does not get its proper and legitimate chance. They play the proverbial "bat and shuttlecock" game with Canadian produce. They ring, corner, and juggle with it as they like.

I wanted some Canadian bacon the other day, and, happening to have a representative of one of the largest firms of packers in the States in my office, I asked him where I could get it. He replied: "I guess we handle as much or more than anybody." "And what are you going to do with it, pray?" I asked. "If the Canadian had their wits about them they would keep it out of your hands." "Oh, well," he replied, "its no use arguing this thing with you. We know you are a real, blasted Britisher." "Decidedly so," I answered, "and of the most pronounced type." Canadian produce is altogether finer than that of the States, and should be competing successfully with Danish and Irish in the English market, instead of being pitted against American. But this will not be done unless different tactics are adopted, or, if it done under existing conditions, most of the benefit will stay with the Liverpool merchants.

The Liverpool Association of Provision Merchants is as strong as it is relentlessly cruel, but if any good firm in Canada would have courage enough to try direct representation here in Manchester, they would quickly find it pay, and pay well. The only condition to the success of such a move is that the representative must be a man of tact, influence, and experience; and, mark, his influence must be here rather than, and much more than, in Canada. We get plenty of foreign representatives who are well up in their trade, and have influence enough at home, but who are hopelessly in the dark over here. The result, of course, is silly bungling.

I was addressing an influential body of tradesmen in the north of England a few months ago. I was speaking of American produce, when it crossed my mind to try a little appeal to the patriotism of my audience in the matter of Canada versus the States. The ringing applause that followed I have not forgotten, and shall not soon forget. These men were large retailers. Liverpool produce merchants are built of granite; they know no such feeling in trade matters. This question of clashing interests reminds me of one we had to deal with six years ago, and which illustrates my meaning perfectly. England had been for generations dependent upon the Continent of Europe for her supply of yeast, Holland, France and Germany competing for the trade. Through some stupid law the distillers of the United Kingdom were prohibited from turning out yeast of the strength and quality we got from these countries. However, permission was obtained to try an experiment in Scotland, whereupon plant was put down at Cameron Bridge, and samples were sent out. I believe I tried the first sample which reached Lancashire, and I reported it to be equal to the finest French or Hamburg. Three weeks later a friend of mine in the trade told me he had the chance of being sub-agent for this article. "Only sub-agent," said I. "You are the very man to be direct agent." He replied that a gentleman in Liverpool (also of my acquaintance) had been appointed agent. "Well," I exclaimed, "Of all the stupid moves this is the worst. Why, that man is manager of a large distillery, and will shortly be a strong competitor in the market. The sequel was exactly as I had predicted, the result being the cancelling of the Scotch manufacturers' engagement with Liverpool, to their ultimate advantage. A heavy demand soon sprang up for the article, and a large trade was and is still being done.

Let it not be forgotten that Manchester is the greatest distributing centre in the world, and that within a radius of less than twenty miles of Manchester there is a population denser than that of London. When we get the ship canal opened clean through to this city shippers will begin to realize what the enormous volume of trade that rolls through Manchester is, while Liverpool will feel proportionately sick. We here are weary of starvation profits. We are equally weary of feeding the Liverpool vampires. They act just like a centrifugal cream separator upon the Manchester provision trade. They get the cream; we can have the skim milk—and be thankful. The McKinley tariff is bad, but the Liverpool extractor will run it a close race. I call to mind a picture of a cow, two farmers, and a lawyer. One farmer has the cow by the horns, the other has her by the tail. Each is tugging for dear life for possession of the beast, which the lawyer quietly milks meanwhile.

Put the Liverpool provision merchant where the lawyer is, and you have it. Neither the Canadian producer nor the real distributor here gets his proper profit. Liverpool and the States take first bite.

This is clearly wrong. Direct representation is what Canada requires, and I feel convinced that a fair trial of it would prove to Canadian farmers and packers that this is their best policy. It is obvious that if produce can pass direct from Canada to the large retailers here without filtering through this bed of spongy merchants, both ends must feel the benefit. There is no difficulty in effecting this at fair prices, and I should be pleased to discuss the matter with Canadians at length.

I had thought at one time of ventilating the subject through the pages of our own trade paper, the Grocers' Review, but on second thought I determined to go direct to the fountain head and put before Canadians themselves the views I hold on this most important question. Trusting its interest may secure insertion of my letter,

I remain yours, etc.,

RETICENT AT MEETING.

The retail grocer is as a rule, a very bashful man, says an exchange. He may be eloquent in his store, and behind his counter, yet the moment he enters the meeting room of his association he is as mute as an oyster. Of course, there are some exceptions, and it is well that it is so, else the gatherings would partake very much of the quaker meeting order. At times he feels that he will arise and take part in the business before the house, but his courage seems to ooze out at his finger ends, and he is held spell-bound until the meeting ends, when he feels himself set free, and his tongue has again resumed its natural elasticity and flow of speech.

This is want of confidence in yourself, and it is nothing more, and it should be overcome. Don't let your determination to speak out in a meeting on matters in which you are interested, be nullified by the want of a little courage on your part. Get up and have your say—every time you do so you will find it easier, and before you know it, you will be able to talk as well, and as long as some of the most eloquent of the speakers at the meeting.

MISREPRESENTING GOODS.

There is little question but that, theoretically, the average merchant subscribes to the highest ethics of shop-keeping, says the Michigan Tradesman. He finds, indeed, a certain moral satisfaction when giving his concurrence to the opinions of speakers and writers on trade topics, who assume to teach from an elevated point of view, and though it is a question when, after all, in the practical application of such theories, there is not a great deal of divergence from theory itself, possibly the temptation to have a lower code of business ethics than what is conceived to be absolutely just, has its strongest force in the matter of representing goods to customers.

An esteemed English contemporary suggests that "there is a song of a not very elevated character which carries the refrain, 'It's all right, if you love the girl, and we fear,' it adds, "there may be here and there a tradesman who sings as a lullaby to his own conscience. 'It's all right, if you sell the goods.' But is it? Is it even all safe and prudent and good policy?"

While this may be regarded as shifting the question to a very much lower plane, it has the advantage of attracting more attention. Our English contemporary argues that the chief reason for a lowering in ethical consideration of the practical side of this question is that "we all know how to live up-rightly and won't, whereas we do not know how to make fortunes and wish we did." It, undoubtedly, is true, that business morally has a much better chance, if the odds are in favor of its paying a dividend in hard cash.

The solution of this question in a way that deals fairly with the consumer and satisfies him, and justifies the merchant's own conscience, even when tried rigidly by the standard of the highest business ethics, is to handle only good goods.

We have no question that a man is a better man, better satisfied with himself, better contented with his business, more successful in his business, more popular with his customers, and more likely to obtain larger custom, if he sells goods that he does not feel he is compelled to misrepresent in order to make them move. Good goods at fair prices, when put into practical effect, therefore satisfies not only the moral, but the material side of the merchant's life. There can be no possible reason why a merchant should not adopt that motto as his own, and put into practical operation. Poor goods at any price do not pay in the long run. Good goods at a fair price always pay.

THE RICE TRADE.

Among the earliest grains that have been cultivated for food by the human race, rice has taken the most prominent part, says the New Orleans Delta. The area of cultivation has been broader, and the amount of the grain produced has been greater than any other cereal. Its introduction into China is wrapt in the mists of tradition, though the historians of the Celestial Empire gravely state that it was first cultivated 2822 years B.C. No proof can be given for this statement, yet it is a fact that royal favor has been extended to encourage its cultivation. Its success or failure as a crop, at the present time, means plenty or famine to about 800,000,000 people.

Owing to the cheapness of labor in the countries of the east, the methods of culture are rude in the extreme. Almost everything is done by human hands as men are numerous, and little value is put upon their labor. Both upland and lowland rice is grown in China and India, but with an immense acreage lying on each side of rivers and smaller streams, with low banks that annually flood the adjacent territory, it is easy to raise lowland rice, in many sections two crops being produced each year. The grain is harvested in the most primitive manner, the yield, however, being enormous, amounting in a season to 250 billion pounds, equal to about fifteen hundred times as much as that produced in the whole of the United States.

The production of rice in the United States presents no such startling figures as that of the east, which raises this cereal not only for the consumption of its enormous population, but ships it to the thickly populated portions of Europe, England, Germany and France taking a large proportion of the export. But from the beginning of rice culture in the United States to the present, most gratifying progress has been made. The first rice was brought to Charleston, S.C., in 1694 by a vessel from Madagascar to Liverpool, driven out of its course by storms. The captain gave a handful of rough rice from the cook's stores to Landgrave Thomas Smith, who was at that time governor of the colony. He planted it in his garden. From the seed raised the colonists were supplied, and this was the beginning of the Carolina rice industry. This new food product was a great boon to the settlers in a new country. The product soon amounted to a much greater yield than was needed for home consumption, and from 1720 to 1729 inclusive the exports were 44,081 tons. From 1730 to 1739 the exports reached 99,905 tons. Most of this rice went to Holland, Hamburg and Bremen. Thirty years after over 24,000 tons were shipped in a single year, of which Great Britain took 12,000 tons. Up to 1860 rice was an important article of export, but from that date the home demand has been greater than the amount grown in this country. In 1870-1 the total rice production of the United States was 52,892,400 pounds, and in 1891-2 it was 155,665,600 pounds.

NEGATIVE ATTRIBUTES OF THE MERCHANT.

A little boy once defined "salt" as "the stuff that makes potatoes taste bad when you don't put any of it on!" This delightful definition suggests that what not to do is as important a question in developing a success as the question of what to do; and suggests also that the negative qualities in a merchant's equipment may be as necessary to consider as his positive requirements, says The Keystone.

Let us name, then, some of these valuable negative methods of the proper merchant, confining ourselves to mental characteristics and ignoring, for the present, practical details.

He does not pretend to know everything; he conveys the impression to his customer that he absorbs wisdom from that customer on all subjects outside his vocation.

He does not dispute with the customer, for he knows that "to win the argument is to lose the sale."

He is not brusque to strangers. He cannot fathom the stranger's business in advance, and may possibly close the door to a good buyer.

He does not boast of his extravagancies. There are more men in the world of economical habits than there are spend thrift fools, and it is always well to "tie to" the good opinion of the good housekeeper.

He does not interrupt, does not look bored.

He does not call people "cranks" who disagree with him; for he knows that everybody, including himself, is a crank to some degree.

He is not fussy and demonstrative in his forms of politeness; and therein shows that he is well bred.

He is not ungenerous in his comments on competitors. He recognizes the wit of "damning with faint praise"; possibly he goes further and praises to the point that carries a conviction to the mind of the listener that such generous mention of a rival could only issue from assured prosperity.

He is not insensible to the advantage of "keeping in" with the society leaders, especially of the gentler sex. He knows the value of this potent medium of advertising.

He is not—so many things that it would be safe to state, comprehensively in, describing the true merchant—he is not unlike the true merchant.—Industrial Journal.

RAISIN GROWERS' TRUST.

The California raisin growers continue hopefully forming combinations, though past experience has not proved that the efforts are likely to be of much use. Recent advices are that the growers of that state are forming a trust to be known as The California State Raisin Growers' Association, and some final arrangements were made at a meeting of producers in Fresno last week. It is said that the packers and brokers are to be admitted to the organization, but will have to pay a higher entrance fee than growers, and that in the executive committee of sixty, which is to be selected, forty will be growers. According to the plan of the trust, it is understood, the packers and growers must give bond to maintain prices. Raisins will be consigned only to packers and brokers who have given $10,000 and $20,000 bonds respectively, not to sell at a figure under the set price.

A STORY OF AN ENGAGEMENT RING.

"When I was a young man," said Bodkins, "I was employed in a large house in the city, and fell in love with a young woman, to whom I became engaged. About two months before we were to be married I was sent to Australia on important business, occasioned by the death of one of the firm in that country. I took an affectionate leave of my intended, and promised to write to her often.

"I was detained longer than I expected, but just before I sailed for home I bought a valuable diamond ring, intending it as a present for my sweetheart.

"As I was nearing the shore, and reading a paper which the pilot had brought on board, I saw the announcement of her marriage with another, a man I knew very well, which so enraged me that I threw the ring overboard.

"A few days afterward as I was dining, fish was served, and in eating a portion, I bit into something hard, and what do you suppose it was?"

"The diamond ring," exclaimed several. "No," said the merry Bodkins; "it was a fish bone."

FRENCH CHAMPAGNE.

The vineyard district of France, from which is produced substantially the world's supply of champagne, is contained within an area of thirty miles square. Reims is its commercial and cathedral city. The vine lands of this area produce the white, red and black grapes from which champagne is made, and yet these same roots planted beyond the confines of this district fail to produce grapes from which the high quality of wine, perfect in bouquet and flavor, can be obtained. Why the territory is so limited, why it may not be extended indefinitely, are queries the agricultural chemist has left unanswered. Again, with all the care and attention given to the cultivation of the grape here, it is impossible, from year to year, to attain anything like uniformity in the quality of the harvest from the same vines. The season, with its variety of rain and wind, and sun, seems to be the potent factor. The fertilizers used upon the soil and the care bestowed upon the vines are second to that mightier power.

In some years the harvest is so inferior that the wine made is either saved for blending with later vintage, or bottled and sent out under a label invented by, or bearing the name of some dealer who purchases the entire vintage. Even in the best years some portion of the harvest will fall so far below the required standard that its product can only be labelled and sold as cheap or rejected wine. There is no doubt, however, that the champagne house of France, after learning something of the nicety of the palate of their customers, cater accordingly.

The English taste is said to be the best, the most exacting, and to be satisfied only with the top of the vintage. In fact, there is no first-class hotel or restaurant in England which would pretend to print its champagne wine list without naming the year of the vintage. On this list one will never find the off year vintages—those in favor for the past ten years being 1880, 1884 and 1887. The vintage of the year 1889 is said to be the best for many years. The average host in England offers to his guest not only a choice vintage, but his champagne fully ten years old, while the average host in this country is governed in his selection solely by the label on the bottle. In short, dining as a fine art has reached some of our clubs and some of our homes, but the busy citizen of this country, as a rule, leaves the details of his state or social dinners entirely to his caterer.—Floyd B. Wilson, in December Lippincott's.

CARELESS CLERKS.

There are some employes in stores who, though not really dishonest, are equally dangerous to merchants. Those are the careless ones. Though they will not actually steal, still they are as criminal as the thief. The losses incurred through the carelessness of employes often escape notice, for it is a species of viciousness the results of which are not always apparent. Yet the merchant suffers all the same. Perhaps we are wrong in deeming this trait vicious. At worst it is but a deplorable weakness of character, often not latent, but acquired by an unwise training. For the possession of this drawback in character, people invariably have to lay the blame with those on whom their early training depended. The boy who learns his early lessons from the man who conducts his business in a slipshod or haphazard manner cannot help possessing a disregard of order in his later years. Habits are easily acquired, but it is woefully hard to rid oneself of them, especially if they are bad habits. The clerk who is careless in even the most trivial things, never will be successful. Business, like life, is a series of incidents; on the attendance of each item depends the success of the whole. The man who shirks, disregards or ignores trifles will not be successful in the main, for great things are but an aggregation of little things.—British Columbia Commercial Journal.

HOPS ON THE PACIFIC COAST.

During December the overland movement of hops from California amounted to 327 tons, of which 279 were from Sacramento, says San Francisco Commercial. During the same month the movement from Portland, via the S. P. Co's connections, reached 305 tons, within 22 tons of the total shipments from this state. While the market may not be termed active, there is still an inquiry of fair proportions, and occasionally a shipment is manifested at a higher figure—as was the case recently, when 22½c was the rate given for a small lot. Sales are also quoted at 19½c per lb. Shipments for the week were small, only 274 lbs. finding an outlet in that way.

A REMARKABLE FIG TREE.

Fig trees grow in Brittany, usually in sheltered places where they are rarely much taller than the structures which protect them. Near Roscoff is a tree of unusual size and which is very famous. It is about the same height as the other trees of the region—say twelve or sixteen feet—but covers with its branches a surface which may be estimated at about four hundred square metres. It is situated in a farm garden. Its single low, gnarled trunk is partly enclosed in a broad wall, so that it is difficult to measure its diameter exactly, but it is in the neighborhood of twenty inches. From it, starting at about six feet from the ground, a great many limbs extend horizontally in all directions—some of them as far as fifty feet. These limbs are supported on two garden walls and on thirty-eight granite posts, between two of the rows of which is a covered alley-way, about eighty feet long. A French writer, M. A. Mehard, says that when he saw this tree for the first time, in September, 1884, it was covered with a thick, green foliage, and had on it a great many figs, some of which were beginning to ripen. He asked how old it was, and was told that the oldest persons in the region had never known it to be different from its present appearance. "How many figs a year does it bear?" "As many as we want; if we pick them every day, there are always some left." "But how many do you pick a day?" "Several baskets a season" (or two or three months). "Is it still growing?" "Yes, sir; it would soon cover the whole plot if I didn't cut off the ends of the limbs every year." It is true that the tree, though very old, is still vigorous and bears good fruit; and that, notwithstanding the disproportion between the trunk and branches, the latter make good growths. The tree stands at the extreme limit of vegetation approaching the seashore.

EDDY A MATCH FOR THE CANNIBALS.

It was the good ship "Betsy Jane"

From Halifax sailed so gay,
But she got wrecked on a cannibal isle
Some thousands of miles away.

And only two of her crew were saved
From the maw of the hungry sea
And they were seized by the cannibals, who,
Decided to cook them for tea.

Now Jack was plump and the savages grim,
Proceeded this tar to fix
While the cook was essaying a light to procure
By rubbing together two sticks.

Jackeyed the proceedings with mournful gaze
But true to his nature polite,
Remarked, "if you'll kindly permit it, I'll show
You, how civilized men get a light."

He drew a match from out his box
And striking it soon had a blaze
But the niggers were paralyzed almost with fright
And stood open mouthed with amaze.

For they fancied that Jack was a wizard d'ye see
And speedily he was released
And Bill his mate was seized and prepared
To furnish the cannibal feast.

Now Bill was possessed of a match box too,
And he, not to be outdone,
Proceeded to try and produce a light
Exactly as Jack had done.

But his matches alas, they all missed fire,
And never a one would light,
And he saw that nothing could help him out
Of his beastly unfortunate plight.

Then up spake Jack: "Oh Bill my mate,
"You now can plainly see
"How blessed a man is who has a wife
"With her head screwed on properlee.

"My Nance, she always will buy of the best
"While your Poll made the fatal mistake "Of buying of Matches because they were cheap
"That wasn't of Eddy's make.

"Farewell my shipmate, fare ye well
"I see that the kettle is ready,
And you must be boiled while I live and rejoice
"That my matches were made by Eddy."

MORAL, Always buy Eddy's Matches.

SHOE BLACKING.

In speaking about shoe-blacking the other day, a gentleman who has given the subject some attention advanced the manner in which the dull material is converted into a shining surface. "The principle ingredient in good shoe polish," said he, "is bone-dust, which is nearly pure carbon. You know that a diamond is the purest form of carbon, and that nothing else glistens so brightly. Well the polishing brush is made of hair, and hair is a good conductor of electricity. Now, I will explain how I account for the polish on your shoes, as a schoolmaster would elucidate an abstruse problem. By using the polishing brush on the surface of your shoe electricity is created by the friction, and you know electricity crystallizes. Well, this is the whole thing in a nutshell: The friction of the brush creates electricity; the electricity crystallizes the blacking and the blacking is converted into diamonds of infinitesimal size. So that whenever you polish your shoes the dusky paste is transformed into glistening gems, and your feet are actually decorated with diamonds."—Minneapolis Commercial Bulletin.

ELECTRIC SUGAR REFINING.

After the swindling episode of a few years ago which made the mere mention of electricity in connection with sugar refining an occasion for ridicule, it is agreeable to find that the subtle fluid is really "getting there." "As an instance of the partial employment of electricity in sugar making," says the Sugar Bowl, "may be quoted the fact that at the Hoym factory in Anhalt there has been at work since the middle of November a process for purifying the diffusion juices by means of electricity. The proprietor, Herr Behm, is credited with the statement that the cost of setting up was already covered at the end of five or six days' working. The advantages are said to be: The small quantity of lime required; successful filtration of the scums even where the beets were in very bad condition; easy boiling and evaporation; a dry masse cuite; a polarization always above 98 degrees, with a yield of 71 per cent. or more of the weight of masse cuite. The sugar tests very high, because of the relatively small quantity of ash, varying between 0.36 and 0.40. The crystallization of the lower products was rapid, and high yields were obtained in all sugars. It is thought that the saline contents may be still further reduced by at least 0.10."

In view of these statements, the Merchants' Review, which now so vigorously ridicules the idea of beet sugar culture ever being made profitable in this country without a bounty, is reminded of the old saw—"He laughs best who laughs last." Indeed it is very unsafe, in this day when the unexpected and marvellous is happening so frequently, to do much prophesying about what can be done.

Why, by the time the sugar bounty law expires by limitation, our esteemed may be sweetening his coffee with sugar produced by just pressing the button and at a cost of 2 cents a pound. That is unless retailers conclude to discontinue the practice of selling it for fun rather than for profit.—Commercial Enquirer.

TAKE TIME.

Every day you hear some business man or merchant complaining that he gets no time for doing thus and so. It is a very convenient excuse for negligence or lack of a proper system of working. The fact is, there is a time for everything under the sun, if people will only take it, by seizing time by the forelocks as they should. A man has no business to work at anything that he has not ample time for doing, and doing well. If a business man gets insufficient time to attend properly to all the details of his business, there is something radically wrong with his system, or in the running gears of his establishment, that should be righted at once. He lacks sufficient help in some department, or is practicing false economy, or else wasting time somewhere.

Some people foolishly fancy that they get no time for any rest or recreation, they do not even find time to eat or sleep properly, but get so wound up in their business that they fly around like a buzz saw, and those nervous, restless mortals are never still. They are a sort of animated perpetual motion machines. There seems to be no happy medium; people either wear out or rust out, and one way of giving out is as bad as the other.

There is a vast difference between the systematic, methodical, regular, steady-going business man, and the one who flies around until he flies off the handle, and never gets time to properly oil up. These are they who fill our lunatic asylums, or plod around as poor nervous dyspeptics and drop into an early grave, because they never got time to attend to nature's laws. Old father Time reaps them in with his keen-edged scythe, and they are harvested before they are ripe. They have to take time to die, and it is only then that they get their long-neglected rest. The wise man of Holy writ said: "There is a time for all things, a time for rejoicing and a time to mourn."

The true business man never finds time too precious to waste in frivolous things, but he has always time for a pleasant word for those around him. He works like clock-work, and takes time to get around before he runs down. He keeps his hands busy as well. He never wastes time in long stories and useless talk argument. He works easily and smoothly because he is systematic. He finds time to eat his food with a relish, to sleep and rest, to get acquainted with his wife, and play with his babies. He never says: "I had no time to attend to that little matter," because he is punctual to the stroke. He is like a time-piece well regulated. If he does go on tick he is punctual to the hour. He strikes—"while the iron is hot." He keeps all his appointments and engagements to the letter, and those with whom he deals know that they can trust and depend upon him. He is a good time-piece, and all men look up to him with confidence, that they will never be too late for the train.

It is not steady work that kills. It is nervous, fretful worry. It is letting your clock get too fast or too slow. It is getting out of plumb with the world. My friend, if you are a business man, keep your works clean, well regulated and balanced. Mark time as you go, and do not get wound up too tight, or fly off your balance, until the main-spring of life has worn out by time's unceasing stroke, the wheels have ceased to revolve, and the clock has struck, "never to go again," until it is prepared by the great Creator.—Detroit Herald of Commerce.

KEEPING GRAPES FRESH.

The following recipes were given at a fruit growers' meeting in Ohio: 1, Dip the stems of the bunches where broken off, into melted sealing wax and pack them in cotton in large packing boxes. They must be kept where it is dry and cool. 2, Towards the end of October cut the shoots with the cluster attached, sharpen the lower end to a point and stick them into a potato. Spread the branches out on straw or dry hay, so they shall not touch each other. The grapes must be placed where it is dry and cool.

SIZES OF ORANGES.

We note in some of our esteemed contemporaries published in one or other of the newer "citrus belts" that the prospect of a good crop of very large oranges in their localities is spoken of with great exultation. It is not known perhaps to many people besides experienced orange growers and packers, that large oranges are not in highest favor. In the case of apples, pears, peaches, prunes, apricots, grapes or olives, the larger they grow the more valuable the crop. Not so with the orange. A box containing 200 oranges of any grade will generally sell for more in any market than a box of the same size containing 112 or 96. It may be said that the orange is about the only fruit in California whose large size, other things being equal, works against its commercial value. The cause of this is that "an orange is an orange" with many people, and the retailer finds that the price he must ask for the large fruit checks sales; while the hotel men and restaurateurs find that the average guest is much more likely to eat one large orange for his desert than two small ones, probably costing less. Thus for a large part of the trade, the smaller sizes are most popular, especially the paper rind St. Michael. The sizes running 176, 200, or 225 to the box are of late more sought after than those of larger size requiring but 86, 112, 128, 146 or 150 to fill a standard box.—California Fruit Grower.

FIGHTING AGAINST LIMITED PRICES.

The New York Retail Grocers' Association has determined to make a fight against the methods frequently adopted by manufacturers and jobbers for the purpose of preventing price cutting, and which is now almost universally known as "limited prices." The association claims that such manipulation of the market is in violation of state laws, and they are determined to bring the matter to the attention of the proper authorities. One of the most prominent members of the association, in discussing the matter with a Commercial Bulletin reporter, said: "The point of the matter is this: Many manufacturers have entered into arrangements with wholesale dealers by which it is immaterial what quantity the retailer is able to buy and pay for, he cannot get his supplies of 'limited goods' at any less price than that at which the wholesaler will sell them. The position of the retail grocer is, that we want a man who has been able to build up a big business by hard work, energy and attention, and who is consequently in a position in which he can buy jobbing quantities, we want him to be placed in a position for buying his supplies equal to any man in the trade. For instance, if I wanted fifty cases of certain goods, and that was the quantity specified to be bought by wholesalers, I ought to be allowed to buy and pay for them at the same price as the wholesaler. In other words, it is not fair that large buyers should, by a combination of wholesalers, be forced to buy their supplies through wholesalers. Nor is it fair that they should be forced to pay manufacturers' prices containing wholesalers' profits. It really resolves itself into a matter of justice. An effort was made, for instance to get the sugar trust to refuse to sell to my firm, but the trust had been supplying us (through one of the component companies) for forty-five years, and refused to cut us off. I wish it distinctly understood, of course, that we do not attack the system by which manufacturers establish a smaller quantity which they will sell to buyers. That is businesslike. But what we want is to have buyers who are able to buy the amounts manufacturers name treated fairly. Retail grocers will always be able to purchase from manufacturers, no matter what limit is placed as the lowest amount of goods to be sold. If one dealer can not, two can, and if two can not, three can, and so on."

ORDERING GOODS.

If the following suggestions about ordering goods, offered by the Western Merchant, were generally followed, dealers would experience less trouble and secure much greater rapidity in the filling of their orders.

1. Write only on one side of the paper. The other side is apt to be neglected, and it is inconvenient for reference after the order is filed away.

2. Do not mention a remittance and order goods on the same sheet of paper. The remittance goes to the cashier, and the statement that you sent it should accompany it to assure your getting credit for the amount. The order will go to the order clerk.

3. Do not send an order and complaint about a former bill of goods, or a claim, on the same paper. The complaint must go to the claim clerk for adjustment, while the other goes on to the order clerk. Write on separate sheets of paper.

4. It is better not to write part of your order and then introduce some subject, foreign to the order, on the same sheet. The stock clerk who is getting out your order has no interest in your remarks which do not refer directly to the order before him.

5. Not signing orders is more common than anyone would suppose. It leads to much annoyance and delay. Even if you have a printed letter head with your name and business on it, it is no proof that you sent the order unless you put your name to it.

6. Stamp the envelope; the neglect of this often sends the letter to the dead letter office instead of its proper destination.

7. Write plainly. Do not crowd what you have to say, but take another sheet of paper to finish.

8. Give full particulars concerning the article so that no mistake will be made.

9. After the shipper delivers the goods to the transportation company, and takes their receipt for them in good condition, his responsibility ceases, so if they do not reach you make your claim against the transportation company, for the shipper cannot do anything from his end of the line. Claims must be made from point of destination.

BUSINESS IS BUSINESS.

There lives in the city of New York a man who has accumulated quite a fortune by simply advising people what to do. There always will be a large number of persons who are unable to rely on their own judgment, and others come to a conclusion with ease and certainty.

A young man had accumulated $1,000, and was debating whether he should buy a small candy store with it, or whether he should lend it on a mortgage. This latter he knew was a secure way; the other promised great profits. In this perplexity he saw an advertisement:

"Advice given to those going into business."

After stating his case, the councillor said:

"My fee will be $5 in advance."

When this was paid, he said:

"Do you understand the candy business?"

"No; I did not think it was necessary. I expect to supervise it generally."

"Then you will lose your money in three months."

"You think I had better loan the money on a mortgage?"

"I did not say that. What is your business—that is, what do you perfectly understand?"

"I know the pickle business through and through. I can make pickles of all kinds, but I do not like it."

"Never mind what you like. Go and get a small place and make pickles; go from hotel to hotel, restaurant to restaurant, and sell them. In ten years you will come back and see me; you will have $10,000 at least."

As the young man was going away he was called back.

"Here is a card. I want you to put it where you can see it 100 times a day."

These were the words on the card:

"Business is business. Men don't do what they like; they do what they can."

The card had a strange fascination for him. He read it with care as he walked along the street. As he studied it, a new light entered his mind.

He found a dingy basement, and began to arrange for his operations. Of course, vinegar must be got; several barrels of it. Some was offered at ten cents a gallon and some was shown at five cents.

"Which shall I take?" He thought of the words on his card. He seemed to see the people testing his pickles, and not liking them, depart without buying. "They will know good vinegar," thought he, and so he bought the honest stuff.

In a few days several tubs of material were ready, and he knew he must market them. Now, he greatly dreaded to face strange people, and push his goods upon their notice. He never had courage when a boy, and now as a young man he felt more timid, it seemed. But he thought of the words of the card and entered a restaurant.

The evident manager was a blooming young woman, and the pickle dealer was more afraid of women than of men. But "business is business" repeated itself over in his mind.

The answer to his statement was that his pickles would be tried, and if found all right, would be purchased.

"Glad I got that good vinegar!" thought the young man, and he began in the maxim that his adviser had given. He began to feel a courage he never expected in meeting people and trying to sell his goods to them.

Calling at a store to get, if possible, an order for pickles in bottles, he was quickly and rudely met with: "Don't want to see any such stuff!" Noticing the utter dismay on the young man's face, the merchant said, short and sharp: "Don't you know enough about business to put up goods attractively?"

As he retreated, ruffled and disheartened, the maxim repeated itself over and over again, with this additional sentence: "It is business to put up goods attractively." He sought out a lithographer, and had some handsomely colored labels printed. "They will buy the bottles," said the friend, "just for the picture you have on them."

When he had gained sufficient courage he again sought out the merchant who had rebuffed him.

"I have come to make you a present of a bottle of pickles."

"Why do you make me a present of them?"

"Because the advice you gave me was worth a great deal."

The morning of the Fourth of July came, and he pondered whether to go to his store or not. All at once he thought, people going out on picnics will want pickles. It was the magic words on the little card that ran through his mind. He found, as he had thought, a large number of buyers waiting for him.

The little card was consulted in all kinds of weather. If a man made a proposition to him of any kind, and he was in doubt, he would go and look at the words, though he knew them by heart already. One day a cheese merchant came to persuade him to buy his stock. "People," said he, "who buy pickles always buy cheese; you will do a big trade."

It was a temptation. He went to look at the words and studied them intently, trying to think out their application to the case in hand.

"Men do what they can," he reflected. "I would like to sell cheese, but I know I can sell pickles." Then he returned. Now he was resolute and firm, although by nature easily bent and swayed by the words of others.

"Business is business," he said. "I am in the pickle business; if I cannot make money in this I shall quit and go into something else; but I shall not have two kinds on my hands."

When the ten years were up, of course he had the $10,000, and more to.—Country Merchant.

Last week's sale of oranges and lemons in New York indicated a slight advance over previous offerings.

Nearly thirty-three million pounds of maple sugar were manufactured in the United States last year.

A tobacconist of this city named John Beeton has been fined $10 and costs or 20 days in jail for selling cigarettes to a minor.

Madame Carnot, the French President's wife, enjoys a cigarette regularly after her meals. She only smokes a mild, sweet-scented tobacco.

A Baltimore canner writes that 1892 packs standard 3-pound tomatoes have been sold at $1.15 per dozen in that market during the past few days.

Nearly or quite 1,000 bags of evaporated California peaches, have, it is reported, been purchased in New York by jobbers at 13 to 13 1/4c. during the present week.

Mayor Gilroy Thursday afternoon laid the corner stone of Grocers' Hall, New York, now in course of erection at Nos. 138 and 140 East Fifty-seventh street.

They had been discussing the pronunciation of "oleomargarine," and finally agreed to leave it to the waiter, but he hedged. "You see," said he, "I have to pronounce it butter or lose my job."

It is said that many canners of the United States are delaying their contracts for the coming season's supply of cans, for the reason that they expect the newly elected Democratic administration to repeal the duty on tin plate.

The aggregate supplies of flour in Canada and the United States Jan 1, according to Liverpool Commercial Trade News, were 1,629,000 sacks. Including American, British and Paris stocks, the total given is 3,532,000 sacks. Sept. 1 last the total was 2,870,000 sacks.

The ancient city guild in London, England, originally known as "pepperers," and now as grocers, opposite the Bank of England, has been pulled down, and a £100,000 building erected in its place. Its formal opening by the Worshipful Company of Grocers was a big success.

The increased shipments of pepper from the Straits to America and England during the month of January, as compared with last year, is a matter of some comment among the trade, but accounted for on the assumption that new crop parcels are commencing to move, and find current rates fairly satisfactory.

THE GROCER is in receipt of a neat little book issued by Francis H. Leggett & Co., of New York. It quotes every description of salt fish, and also gives a good deal of information, in a few words, about piscatorial industries for many years back. Copies can be obtained free on application to Leggett & Co.

Commencing with 1887 and ending with December 31, 1892, comprising six years, the imports of oranges in boxes at New York were as follows: 1887, 1,187,287; 1888, 791,139; 1889, 829,501; 1890, 822,980; 1891, 676,489; 1892, 421,265. Lemons—1887, 1,548,359; 1888, 1,451,468; 1889, 1,316,908; 1890, 1,495,016; 1891, 1,347,762; 1892, 1,622,545.

The Peterboro' Cheese Board have elected these officers for the ensuing year: President, J. M. Drummond, Keene; vice-president, John Cruess, Mariposa; secretary, M. E. Sanderson, Smith; treasurer, S. Edwards, Dummer. A committee was appointed to confer with the Cheese Makers' Association and cheese buyers regarding the appointment of an instructor.

The ninth annual meeting of the Western Packers' Canned Goods Association will be held in St. Louis, Mo., Feb. 22-24. The association extends a cordial invitation to not only packers within the territory of the association, but also to the delegates from all other associations, manufacturers of machinery, cans, boxes, labels, and dealers in seeds, canners' supplies, etc. The Laclede hotel will be the headquarters of the association.

A writer at Plant City, Fla., says: "The demand for grape fruit seems to keep pace with the oranges this year. The crop of this magnificent citrus fruit is very fine this year throughout this section. All the packers, we believe, buy all the grape fruit they can get. Heretofore the fruit was allowed to hang on the trees until the oranges were all gone."

The Louisiana sugar producers will receive in the present fiscal year the sum of $9,000,000 as sugar bounties. Under the bounty stimulus the production has advanced with great rapidity. Many reports are current that the new Congress will rescind the sugar bounty legislation, thus throttling a very luscious infant product. Will it do so, or will the influential south have something to say on the subject?

The waters of the oceans and seas of our globe hold not less than 60,000,000,000,000,000 tons of salt in suspension. If these figures are correct, and the ocean should be entirely dried up, there would be a deposit of salt 450 feet deep over every foot of the great basin. If taken out and spread over what is now dry land it would give us a salt covering nearly 1,500 feet thick.

People who are in the habit of wondering where all the fish that are annually consumed come from must remember that the flounder lays 7,000,000 eggs annually and several other varieties from 1,000,000 to 3,000,000, while the turbot is credited with depositing from 11,000,000 to 12,000,000 during each breeding season.

Cotton seed oil, which is extensively used in the manufacture of salad oil and lard compounds, has been subjected to speculative manipulation and the price increased fully 18 cents a gallon since the middle of December. Supplies are light and concentrated in few hands. If values go much higher the people who use the oil as a substitute for olive oil and lard will be compelled to seek some cheaper article.—American Grocer.

Fifteen cigar manufacturers were licensed in London last year. They paid $1.125 for their license from the Dominion Government, and used 300,901 pounds of tobacco in producing 13,302,235 cigars. They paid duty on 10,987,285, and 7,314,970 were in warehouse at the close of the year. The total duty paid, at $6 per 1,000, with license fees, was $67,048.71. No other city outside of Montreal produced over one-third the quantity of cigars that London did. The total number of cigars manufactured in Canada last year was 106,694,535.—Advertiser.

Houston county, Georgia, alone produced last year a fruit crop valued at $350,000, the most of which sum was realized from the sale of peaches. Some of the orchards in the county contain 200 trees, a number of them containing 5,000 trees or over. The Georgia farmers who are now turning their attention to peach culture formerly raised cotton exclusively, and suffered financially from the lack of diversity in their crops. Some of the finest peaches grown in the United States are said to be produced in the country around the city of Augusta—Baltimore Sun.

Regarding the dried fruit market on the Pacific Coast, The California Fruit Grower says: "The stock of peaches has been reduced to a few carloads. Good judges place the entire stock of dried peaches in the state at less than 10 carloads. Nectarines are out. Plums are next to out. Apricots are very scarce. A few pears and a moderate supply of apples remain. Raisins are the cheapest article in the entire line of cured products. Stocks are not large, and anything like a good, consumptive demand

The estimated increase of consumption of sugar by the human family for the past two years is 470,000 tons. The average of longevity has also increased five per cent. within a comparatively few years. Whether there is any relative connection between these two parallels or not, the fact seems pretty well established that sugar possesses remarkable dietetic value.

There is talk of starting a plant in California for the manufacture of grape syrup, which is made from the unfermented juice of the grape by the vacuum or evaporation process. This result is said to be very palatable, and the result of the experiments now being made may be the establishment of a new and profitable industry on the Pacific Coast.

It may be worth while for grocers in localities where the water used for household is so hard that it is necessary to use some softening agent, to remind their customers that borax is just the thing they want. By doing this, they not only give their housekeeping friends a valuable point, but it will also enable them to increase their sales of a staple grocery item.

It is said that the coffee grown in the Department of Alta Verapaz, known as the Cobea or Verapaz coffee, has a reputation in Europe equal, if not superior, to any coffee grown in any part of the world. It is hardly known, however, in the United States. Last year one grower sold his crop for $40,000 and another sold his for $50,000. The profit is enormous, and a fortune is made every year.

Mr. R. Cudmore, of Edgar Mills asks: (1) What number of Imperial gallons would there be in a barrel 55 1-2 syrup gallons, wine measure? (2) What would the duty be from Detroit? Answer: (1) 45.2 gallons; (2) When testing 40 degrees or over up to 56 degrees, 1 1-2c. per gallon, and when testing less than 40 degrees a specific duty of 1 1-2c. and in addition thereto 1-4c. to 1c. per gallon for each degree or fraction of a degree less than 40 degrees.

Rice growers in certain sections of Florida are experimenting with the idea of raising two crops during the season. Although such a thing may be possible as an experiment, yet it is not likely that it will ever prove practicable, owing to the fact that the strain on the land would soon exhaust its vitality. The seasons are based on established laws of nature, and all vegetable life has been adjusted to comply with these requirements. While the inventive genius of man has accomplished wonderful results, yet when he attempts to force nature into new channels, it is more than probable that he will have found his match.—Ex.

According to a publication by the statistical bureau of the Hungarian ministry of agriculture, last year's wheat crop of the world amounts to between 744,000,000 and 755,000,000 hectoliters. That of the year before was ascertained to have been (in round numbers) 750,000,000 hectoliters; hence there is no difference between the yields of this year and last. The surplus of the yield over the want of wheat is 16,800,000 to 21,300,000 hectoliters. The rye crop may be estimated at 440,000,000 hectoliters; last year it was about 370,000,000 hectoliters.

Prunes are selling well, the small stock and tendency of prices, particularly of Turkish, influencing quite a general demand from the trade of the country. All indications point to full figures for this class of fruit during the present year. California certainly are in small supply in all markets. French cannot be imported in quantities at anything like reasonable prices, and Turkish and Bohemian, though held at very full values, are recognized as cheap in comparison with other varieties. The two latter are moving out quite freely, and the quotations of the market are well sustained.—Commercial Bulletin.

HANDLING OF ROLL BUTTER.

In fall and winter when many creameries are not in operation their patrons churn again their cream, and those that cannot make enough butter to fill a tub with one churning make up the butter in rolls, says the Produce Trade Reporter. The trouble with roll butter, however, is that it often is not properly packed, and from lack of knowledge in this particular the butter assumes a ragged and untidy appearance, and in consequence sells at a low price.

If roll butter could be sent to market in perfect form it would not unfrequently command 2 to 5 cents per pound more than when packed solid. Each roll must be wrapped in a piece of white muslin or cheese capping, and it should be large enough to cover the roll entirely. The muslin must be washed in warm water to remove the starch, then soaked in strong brine and put on the roll wet. Never wrap butter in paper, as the paper will stick to the butter and damage the appearance.

It is impossible to send roll butter to market in good order without wrapping it in muslin, and no matter what the muslin may cost, it will more than pay the cost in the increased price the rolls thus packed will bring.

For packing use new tubs or hardwood boxes, but no pine boxes, as this wood has a tendency to affect and flavor the butter. In very cold weather half-barrels or kegs will do equally well, but whole barrels are too large and not easily handled; besides the weight crushes the rolls. In packing in hardwood boxes and kegs the end intended for the head should be turned down, then take out the bottom head and cut a piece of white muslin the size of the head and place it on the bottom of the head of the package, which will be the head when opened.

Commence to pack the smallest rolls first, taking care to pack each roll on its smaller end. The rolls should be, as much as possible, of uniform color and size. Do not pack the light and fresh-made with those that have been colored or with old stock. Be careful and select rolls that will pack tight, so that there will be no space for the rolls to shake about; continue packing in this way till the package is almost full; then shake the same well to settle the rolls, and now fill up as snug as possible.

In filling up the last layer pack the rolls on their ends if possible; but if there is not room enough it will not matter if they are packed on their sides, but they must be packed tight and entirely fill the package. Before heading the package sprinkle on a small quantity of strong brine, and cover the last layer with a piece of muslin, and then turn the package over two or three times so as to let the brine work in between the rolls.

BUSINESS MAXIMS.

No man can succeed in life except on the broad platform of honesty and truth.

The first business lie is the poorest investment that can be made.

Do your duty as if you were the only person in the world left to perform it.

The disposition to try is half the ability to perform.

Do not expect honesty in others when it does not exist in yourself.

The merchant who swindles his customers and has his employe in the secret is forever thereafter a coward.

The failures in life are generally the renegades, weak-hearted and back-sliders.

A business man can attend to only one thing at a time. With some, one is too many.

Let the convenience and comfort of others come first; your own will follow.

Genius and ability are never discovered until industry and ambition open the mine.

DRY GOODS.

(From the Dry Goods Review.)

Last Saturday one of Toronto's leading dailies reported trade as being "dull in almost all lines," yet one wholesale house reports an increase in the week's trade of over $25,000 as compared with the corresponding week of 1892. This is but an example of the increased trade. For this season of the year trade is unusually brisk, and both winter and spring goods are in active demand, the former in small quantities, the latter in large quantities.

The fourth of February has come and gone. It was preceded by two or three failures in Toronto, only one of which was serious. Throughout the province the failures preceding were fewer than in previous seasons. The day has come and gone, and the result has been very satisfactory. The wholesalers report fewer renewals than before, plentiful cash, and almost no failures. This is very encouraging. The good trade of the last two weeks of December and throughout the whole of January has enabled the retail merchants to secure sufficient cash to meet all their engagements.

Prospects for a heavy spring trade are keeping bright, and travellers' reports are strongly encouraging.

There is big strife among the wholesalers for the trade in ribbed cotton vests. Especially for the reputation of having the lowest line is the strife strong and bitter. This has caused a drop in some of the prices, until some of the wholesalers are selling their lowest lines at or below cost. The men who are doing thus are, to say the least, very foolish; and it is abuses of personal liberty such as these which causes it to be a less defended right than formerly.

NOTES

In September, October and November Caldecott, Burton & Spence took enormous import orders for gloves, hosiery, and underwear, which are the leading lines in the house. These goods are now being shipped out, and sorting orders are expected shortly. Their stock will be sufficiently full to meet all sorting demands in every line. They are carrying a large range of ladies' domestic ribbed cotton vests, in which they claim to be offering as complete bargains as any house, with a larger range than most of their competitors. They still find an increasing demand for their leading lines of cashmere hosiery, which have been so successful in past seasons. Their stock of kid gloves is now complete, and every line has a full range of colors and sizes. They are sole agents in Canada for Fernand's Seamless Patent Kid Glove. This article gave great satisfaction to the trade last year, and they confidently expect a larger trade this season. Its superiority arises from the single palm seam, the cutting being so arranged that no seam comes at either side nor on the wrist. The Marqueterie four dome-fasteners and Katrina laced kid gloves are also kept in stock, and large quantities of them are sold.

W. R. Brock & Co. have been receiving in their men's furnishing department large shipments of neckwear in derby and knot shapes, including all the newest styles and effects of the latest materials. They have also received men's drill, pique, cashmere and silk, waistcoats for spring and summer wear. Flannelettes and cashmere outing shirts are also in stock. Sporting belts, with suitable buckles for lacrosse, football, baseball, lawn tennis, cricket, nautical sports, etc., that can be retailed from 10 cents up to one dollar each, will be found in large range. They report that their sales for white dress shirts, unlaundried shirts, men's collars and cuffs have greatly increased this season, and account for this from the fact that they made very large purchases of several clearing lines at job prices, of which they have given the benefit to their customers. One special line of braces, of which they have purchased the full output of one manufacturer, and of which an imposing pile is shown, are sold so as to be retailed at 10 cents per pair. This is one of the greatest bargains ever shown in this line of goods to the Canadian trade.

Jno. Macdonald & Co. have opened up a shipment of table napkins, table cloths, sets of these, R. B. Hollands, glass towellings, tea cloths, and a full range of several other numbers in towellings. This makes their stock complete in every line of linen goods. Their carpet stock is being replenished with fresh shipments of unions, all wools, tapestries, and Brussels. In the silk and dress goods departments they are showing a large range of novelties in apron lawns. These are 43-inch goods, and come in stripes, drawn-thread patterns, etc. A further shipment of satin-check muslins, large and small patterns, fancy muslins in stripes and checks, coin-spot muslins for window blinds, Victoria lawns and similar lines are now in full stock. They have just opened up a large delivery of negligee shirts in all qualities from the lowest to the finest grades produced. Also received, a delivery of art cushions, tea cosies and head-rests. These are beautiful goods. Spring underwear and top-shirts are being passed into stock, and shipments of neckwear are arriving almost daily.

A favorable purchase enable Gordon, Mackay & Co. to supply a corset to retail at 50 cents which they claim is the best value in the trade. They invoice this line at $4 regular terms.

Alexander & Anderson at present have a fine exhibit of Canadian and imported tweeds, worsteds, serges, overcoatings, etc., also an attractive stock of men's furnishings, including neckwear in four-in-hands, knots, bows, etc., white and regatta shirts, top shirts and underwear in great variety, also collars, cuffs, braces, gloves, handkerchiefs, socks, etc.

Alexander & Anderson show in their dress goods department many startling novelties in dress goods, which it would be well for every merchant to inspect. They are also showing new spring silks in plain colored surahs, shot and claretarian coloreds, mervs, faille francaise, plain and printed pongees and bengalines.

During the past week many novelties in prints have been opened up to the trade. Among those observed are some very excellent and attractive lines shown by Gordon, Mackay & Co. This firm also shows a large range of English indigos on a very fine cambric at 8 cents. Another line of special merit is their all-wool challie (cream grounds only) at 22 1-2 cents.

Gordon, Mackay & Co.'s men's furnishing department presents a busy scene. Their rubber clothing display is simply immense. Conspicuous among their novelties in men's neckwear is the small knot with wide apron, in imitation of the graduated four-in-hand.

The Best Grocers Make
a point of Keeping it al-

[As there is often inequality in the prices of the various sellers on this market, owing to differences in buying conditions and other circumstances, and as prices are modified by both quantity and quality, the quotations given below and in our Prices Current necessarily take a wide range.]

TORONTO MARKETS.

TORONTO, Feb. 9, 1893.

GROCERIES.

The general trade continues seasonably good, and the demand is pretty well distributed, although the most demand is for teas, canned goods and spices. An improvement is reported in payments. The tea market is exceptionally strong and is attracting a good deal of attention. The situation in canned goods continues to favor sellers. Coffees are not so active, but prices are firmer here and higher outside. There is a better feeling in the fruit market and demand is fair for the season. New currants are on the market, and while the quality in some instances is fine in others it is reported to be only ordinary. Both syrups and molasses occupy a stronger position, and for the former more enquiry is heard. No material change has developed in sugar. Generally speaking, the position seems to be a good deal stronger than a week ago.

COFFEES.

The position seems to be still gathering strength. The demand is scarcely so active, the advances having apparently checked consumption. Stocks of Rio here are very low and wholesalers say that at the prices prevailing outside it would cost them, down here, 2c. more than they could get. Brazilian coffees have advanced $\frac{1}{4}$ c. in New York during the week, and outside markets are all higher than they have been for some time. Locally stocks of Santos and Jamaica coffees are low.

DRIED FRUIT.

Some large consignments of currants arrived on this market during the week, and they were badly needed. Demand is good; in fact currants is the most active article in dried fruits. Quality is on the whole fine, although here and there a different tale is told; prices range all the way from $5\frac{1}{4}$ to $7\frac{1}{2}$ c. Valencia raisins are a little higher outside, and in New York the demand is good. On this market there is no material change either in price or in demand. Dates are higher outside, and the local demand for dates continues limited.

RICE AND SPICES.

The demand for rice continues limited, while spices are in good demand and prices firm.

SUGAR.

The market has not developed any specially new features. The movement is still rather small, but prices if anything are firmer. Refiners are asking full prices, and it is said that Montreal people will not accept contracts. One local firm reports that an offer it made to date three days ahead was refused.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES.

A scarcity of syrups is reported, and for medium to good the demand is active. Molasses are very firm, and the Americans are asking higher prices on account of the shortage in the crop; locally there is no change.

TEAS.

The market is firm in all lines, more particularly in Japans, Ceylons, Assams and Congous. Retailers are replenishing their stocks and demand is good. Low and medium grade Japans are worth 1 to 2c. more than a week ago. Local houses report enquiries for samples from Chicago, and a Montreal firm is said to have sent over 1,000 packages within the last few days to the "Windy City." It will be another five or six months before the trade will be able to get even medium teas here, and stocks in Toronto are now very low, and material advances are anticipated. The lowest thing in China teas will cost equal to $14\frac{1}{2}$ c. to import and Indian $19\frac{1}{2}$ c., and the grades are not at all desirable for this market.

MARKET NOTES.

[Importers, wholesale merchants and manufacturers should send any items intended for this department so that they may reach the head office not later than Wednesday morning. The editor will always welcome such information.]

Sloan & Crowther are in receipt of a shipment of Merle's fine off-stock layer Valencia raisins.

Perkins, Ince & Co. report direct shipments of Filiatra fruit in barrels, half barrels and cases.

Eby, Blain & Co. are just in receipt of a shipment of fine Filiatra currants in barrels, half barrels and cases.

W. T. Harris, Chatham, N. B., dealer in general merchandise, offers 200 cases canned lobsters, also dried cod of finest quality.

Some good values in teas at $12\frac{1}{2}$ to 15c. can still be procured from Lucas, Steele & Bristol, of Hamilton. They are always pleased to forward samples.

Lucas, Steele & Bristol, regret their inability to fill Hillwattee tea orders at moment. January demand was greater than provided for, but back orders will be filled about 10th or 15th of this month.

The Delhi Canning Co. report business as satisfactory, sales this week being, 1 car of Corn for Hamilton, 1 car of Corn and Peas for Toronto, 1 car of Corn and Peas for Montreal, 1 car of gallon Apples for Glasgow, Scotland. Corn Epicure $1.15. Peas Sifted Select, $1.15. These prices are being realized every day, and they are placing 50 to 100 cases per week at the above price.

A difficulty retail merchants often have to contend with is the want of knowledge as to when goods ordered by them should be due at their destination. Those who deal, or may hereafter do so, with Lucas, Steele & Bristol, wholesale grocers of Hamilton, will have no cause for complaint in this respect in future, for that firm has issued a combined freight time table and almanac, by consulting which the desired information will be obtained. Lucas, Steele & Bristol are to be congratulated upon their enterprise.

BUTTER AND CHEESE.

The butter market remains much about the same as last week. Receipts of all kinds are still light; large rolls continue to be the chief source of supply, and they are in good demand at 17 to 19c.

There is a fair demand for fall cheese but stocks are light; prices steady at 12c. for job lots.

COUNTRY PRODUCE.

BEANS—The movement is not large; prices steady and unchanged at $1.35 to $1.40 for hand-picked and at $1.10 to $1.15 for a good average article other than hand-picked.

DRIED APPLES—There are not many on hand and demand is fair; dealers are paying $4\frac{1}{4}$ to 5c. and selling at $5\frac{1}{4}$ to $5\frac{1}{2}$ c.

EVAPORATED APPLES—Demand is limited; stock lots could be sold at 8 to $8\frac{1}{2}$ c. for new, while old are nominal at 6c.

EGGS—The market is still bare, and while prices are a good deal higher a few fairly good consignments would probably result in a substantial drop. Strictly fresh are quoted as high as 30c. and limed at 21 to 23c; lots have changed hands between local dealers at the outside price.

HONEY—There is no improvement. About the description of the market is that it is sick. Stocks are still large and prices unchanged at 5c. for buckwheat and 8c. for clover.

DRESSED POULTRY—Scarce and wanted! Fresh killed chicken would fetch 75c. a pair and ordinary stock is quoted at 60 to 70c., ducks 85c. to \$1 a pair, turkeys at $12\frac{1}{2}$ to 13c. a lb., and geese at 9 to 10c. These quotations are all higher than last week.

POTATOES—The market has a rather easier feeling and no movements of car lots are reported; car lots are quoted at 78 to 80c. and small lots at 90c.

ONIONS—Dull and easy at $2 to $2.25 per barrel.

HOPS—Inactive, views of growers and buyers being far apart. Prices are unchanged at 17 to 20c. for '92's and 14 to 15c. for yearlings.

HOGS AND PROVISIONS.

Although quotations are slightly higher than a week ago for dressed hogs, during the last few days there has been an easier undertone to the market. Offerings have been rather more liberal. Prices range from $8.60 to $8.65, but a couple of car lots offered at the outside figure Tuesday were refused. Provisions are in good demand at firm prices. There is a big enquiry for lard and prices are advancing. Smoked hams are going out quite freely. Dressed meats are in liberal supply and prices easy.

BACON—Long clear $10\frac{1}{2}$ to 11c. Smoked backs are $12\frac{1}{2}$ to 13c., bellies $13\frac{1}{2}$ c., rolls 10c.

HAMS—Are 13 to $13\frac{1}{2}$ c.

LARD—Pure Canadian is $12\frac{1}{4}$ c. in tubs, and 13 to $13\frac{1}{2}$ c. in pails. Compound $10\frac{1}{2}$ c.

BARREL PORK—U. S. heavy mess is $22.50. Canadian short cut is $20 to $22. Canadian heavy mess $20 to $21.

DRESSED MEATS—Beef forees are $4\frac{1}{2}$ to $5\frac{1}{2}$ c., hindquarters 7 to $8\frac{1}{4}$ c., veal $6\frac{1}{2}$ to 8c., mutton 7 to 8c., lamb 8c. to $8\frac{1}{2}$ c.

FISH AND OYSTERS.

Demand is increasing for fish and it is now fairly active. Whitefish and trout are a little higher, while B. C. Salmon is quoted

MY DEAR SIR:—

I think it only fair, to let you know, that at a Dinner party at my house the other day, we had some of your Canned Peas, and that their was a general expression of opinion amongst the eight people present, that these Peas were far superior to any of the French Peas obtainable in Canada. It is quite evident that the Lakeport Preserving Co. understand their business, and how best to preserve fruit and vegetables.

CANNED GOODS.

TORONTO.

The situation appears to be still gathering strength. The advance of 5c. a dozen on tomatoes in the States, bringing prices up there to $1.15, has not been without its effect on the Canadian market. The local consumption of tomatoes, peas, corn and beans is at the moment large, and higher prices are confidently looked for by the trade. During the week there has been no change in quotations here, but they are very firm and there is an absence of that tendency to shade prices that there was some time ago. The increased inquiry for canned fruits noted a week ago continues. The demand for salmon is still light for the season; stocks are not large and with anything like an active demand there would probably come an appreciation of values. Sardines are firm and meeting with the usual seasonable demand.

MARKETS—Continued

1c. to 2c. lower. The oyster famine seems to be over; there is a sharp decline in prices in consequence and values are expected to go still lower. We quote: 7½c. for trout and ordinary whitefish, 7½c. for Manitoba whitefish, 4½c. per lb. or $2 to $2.25 per hundred for Lake herring, 10c. for mackerel, 13c. for B.C. salmon, 5 to 6c. for smelts, 5 to 5½c. for haddock, 4 to 4½c. for market cod, 7c. for steak cod, 4c. for flounders, 6½c. for skinned and boned codfish, $6 for Labrador herring, $5 to $5.50 for shore herring, 11 to 12½c. for Digby herring, 4c. for boneless fish, 7 to 8c. for boneless cod, oysters, $1.90 to $2.10.

GREEN FRUIT.

The green fruit market has been active during the week; prices are firm, and in some lines actual advances are recorded. Stocks of oranges and lemons are light owing to the cold weather. Oranges are likely to be dearer. There are a good many "chilled" lemons on this market, and they are selling at $1.50 to $2.50, while really good stock is quoted at $3.75 to $4. Bananas are quoted 50c. higher. We quote: Valencia oranges at $4 to $4.50 per case, Jamaicas $2.50 to $2.75 per box, Floridas $3 to $3.25 per box, Mandarines $2.50 to $2.75 per box, Tangerines $3.25 to $3.50 per box, Palermos $2.50 per box, lemons $3.75 to $4, bananas $1.75 to $2.50, pineapples 20 to 30c., Malaga grapes $8 to $9, fancy cranberries $10 per barrel, common $1 per basket, apples $1.50 to $2.50 per barrel.

HIDES, SKINS, WOOL, TALLOW.

SKINS—Sheepskins are still marked by their scarceness, and prices are 10 to 15c. higher at $1.20 to $1.40. Calfskins are in good demand, but there are not yet many coming in, prices unchanged at 5 to 7c.

HIDES—Steady and unchanged at 4½c. for No. 1 green cows' and 5½c. for cured. Car lots of cured changed hands at 5¼c.

TALLOW—Scarce and in active demand, dealers are paying 6c. and selling at 6½c.

WOOL—There is not much that is new to say. A fair trade is being done and prices are well maintained. Little or no fleece is left on the market and blanket wools are scarce. Pulled wools are not in so active request and prices are lower, dealers paying 22c. and selling at 22c. Fleece is quoted at 18c. to 19c., and pulled at 21 to 22c. for supers and at 26 to 27c. for extra.

SEEDS

Speculation still seems to be carrying red clover along and prices are higher at $8.50 to $9 a bushel, an advance of 50c. during the week; offerings limited. The export trade in Alsike has closed but prices of that article, are in sympathy with red clover, firm at $5.50 to $6.50. There is scarcely anything offering in timothy and prices are 25c. higher at $1.75 to $2.25.

MONTREAL MARKETS.

MONTREAL, Feb. 9, 1893.

[As there is often inequality in the prices of the various sellers on this market, owing to differences in buying conditions and other circumstances, and as prices are modified by both quantity and quality, the quotations given below, and in our Prices Current, necessarily take a wide range.]

GROCERIES.

There has been no particular change in the grocery market during the week the movement all the time being somewhat restricted as compared with previous weeks. Values all round are firm, however. Sugar is steady with sellers not urging sales and buyers disposed to go on with the supplies they have at present. Tea is steady and several round lots have been bought by New York parties during the week. Coffee and spices are firm and good sound dried fruit is firmly held, although in slow demand. Briefly the week has been a quiet uneventful one, but although nothing striking is to note the situation seems to be favorable on the whole. Payments on the fourth of February have furnished ground for complaint, but the grocery men are not affected to the same extent as their confreres in dry goods.

SUGAR.

The week has remained quiet for refined sugars, but the market is very firm, sales of granulated transpiring at 4½c., choice yellows 4 to 4¼c., and lower grades 3¼c. at the refineries in straight lots. The aggregate movement, however, is small, as neither seller or buyer shows any marked disposition to meet one another. The former points to the marked firmness of the raw sugar market as his argument for refusing to operate ahead, while the latter thus debarred, and having supplied himself for the time being, has no inducement to offer any better prices. From jobbers' hands the movement is of the ordinary sort. The raw sugar market is very firm here and advices from New York state that it is the same way there, centrifugals selling on that market for 3½c. for 96 test. Limits to brokers here for cost and freight business have been withdrawn, although they were above the views of holders.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES.

There is a fair demand for Barbadoes molasses in a small jobbing way at 34c., and stocks are very firmly held, as it is all certain to be wanted before fresh supplies can arrive next spring. Syrups are quiet and unchanged.

TEA.

The tea market has been rather quiet, but an encouraging sign has been a number of orders from country dealers for Japans, who have been holding off in the expectation of better terms. Moderate sized lots of low grade Japans have changed hands at 13½ to 14½c., medium to good at 15½ to 18½c., fine 19½ to 22c., and finest 25 to 30½c. Green teas are very firm, and five or six lines of black teas held here on consignment were sold to New York parties at 11½ to 16c., the quantity involved being some 1,000 packages.

COFFEES AND SPICES.

The firm tone of the coffee market is maintained under limited supplies and a fair demand. We quote prices as follows: Jamaica 18½ to 20c., Maracaibo 20 to 22c., Rio 18½ to 21c., Java 25 to 27c., and Mocha 25 to 28c. in straight lots, jobbing parcels higher.

There is a fair enquiry for spices, sales of round lots of black pepper having been made at 7¼ to 7½c., cloves are firm at 8½ to 9c., and nutmegs 47½c. to $1, as to size.

DRIED FRUITS.

There has been very little doing in dried fruit, but prices generally are steady and unchanged. The movement from first hands is practically nil, while jobbers do not report any briskness in the enquiry from actual distributors. The latter's stocks, however, must be small and they are certain to require some supplies shortly. Good Valencias are held at 4½c. for seconds, but 4¾ to 5c. for prime in sound lots. Valencia layers have furnished a fair trade at 6 to 6¼c., the market being firm at these rates for wholesale lots. Currants are steady at 5½ to 5¾c. Prunes are steady at 6½ to 9c. as to quality.

GREEN FRUIT.

The demand for oranges during the week has only been fair and trade rules quiet. Valencias $3.75 to $4.00; Messina $2.50 to $2.75; Florida $3.25. Lemons rule quiet and unchanged, fancy $2.50 to $3.00 and lower grades $1.25 to $2.50 as to quality.

FISH.

There is a continued good demand for fish and the market holds very strong fresh cod and finnan haddies alone showing any easiness. We quote as follows: Haddock 4c., cod 3 to 3½c., steak cod 4½ to 5c., lake trout 7c., white fish 7 to 7½c., pickerel or dore 8c.; dried cod, $5.50; No. 1 green cod, $6 to $6; B. C. salmon, $13 per brl.; Labrador salmon, $13 to $14; No. 2 mackerel, $14 per brl.; do. $7 per half brl.; Labrador herring, $6.00 to $5.00 per brl.; C.B. and N. S. herring, $4.75 to $5 per brl.; tommy cods, $2.50 to $2.75 per brl.; fresh herring, $1.85 to $2. per hundred; haddies, 7½ to 8c.; Yarmouth bloaters, $1.25 to $1.50; common do., $1; fresh frozen mackerel, 10 to 10½c. each; No. 1 lake trout, $4.75 to $5 per keg.

APPLES.

The market is very quiet, round lots being exceedingly difficult to move. Two car loads sold at $1.25, but $2.25 is possible in some cases. Jobbing prices run from $2.50 or thereabouts.

POTATOES.

The market remains firm, further sales of car load lots having transpired at $1.00 to $1.05 per 90lb. bags. Supplies are light and the market looks as though it might go higher.

DRESSED HOGS.

The market is quiet and the tone is somewhat easier, and the high prices of a week ago are not possible to-day, $9 being the very best price possible on a car lot.

PROVISIONS.

The local trade in hog products is very slow, but prices are maintained. The quotations are as follows:—Canadian short cut, per brl. $22 to $23; Mess pork, Western, new, per brl $21 to $22.00; Hams, city cured, per brl. 12½ to 13c.; Lard, Canadian, in pails 10¼ to 10½c.; Bacon, per lb., 11¼ to 12c.; Lard, com. refined, per lb., 10 to 10½c.

EGGS.

The egg market holds very firm, sales of Montreal stock being made at 25 to 27c., an advance of 5c. on our last. The high prices have curtailed the demand, however, and business is slow. There are numerous enquiries from the United States, but dealers refuse to take orders owing to the shortage in supplies here.

BUTTER AND CHEESE.

There is little or no change to mention in the cheese market. The stock remaining here is a bagatelle and the nominal price is 12½c.

Butter meets a good local demand and supplies are running light. A feature is the decided scarcity of Medium grades, such as Western dairy, etc., and the consequence is that supplies of this sort are very firm. The bulk of the stock offering is creamery, which runs all the way from 22c. for seconds to 23½ to 24c. for firsts in a jobbing way. Fresh roll stock from the west fetches 20 to 21c. when it is isprime.

TO BE BORNE IN MIND ALWAYS.

The manager, the bookkeeper, the cashier, the entry clerk, the shipping clerk, the salesman, the office boy, the porter, everyone, in fact, says an exchange, who is in any way connected with a business establishment should bear in mind that there is such a thing as cultivating trade, and that they, as well as the proprietors, are responsible for a share of the firm's success. Because a man is hired to fill a certain position there is no excuse for his hesitation to do any other work which may require attention. A bookkeeper might soil his fingers by stepping outside the office and waiting upon a customer if occasion required, but he would not lower himself in the estimation of his employer, through thus signifying his willingness to make himself generally useful, and, anyhow, the dirt will wash off. To make business grow and make it pay should be the main object of every employe, regardless of position or conditions. The day is gone when business can be conducted successfully without the undivided and best efforts of those who are responsible for it. In days gone by a merchant might succeed by sitting down and waiting for trade to come to him, but not now. In our day and generation, the most persistent and systematic efforts are essential to bringing about a satisfactory result. A progressive spirit and a capacity for pleasing customers will work wonders in any business.—Penn Grocer.

A TOMATO TREE.

Near Santa Ana, Cal., a tomato tree is growing on the ranch of Henry Thomas that is nineteen feet in height, eleven feet in diameter of the spread of the branches twelve feet from the ground, and from which the owner picked 219 ripe tomatoes on the 3rd of December last. It was raised from the seed, planted last April, and now furnishes a dense shade for the entire south side of the house. It seems to be a continuous bearer and promises to hold its place for years to come. The fruit is of medium size, a rich crimson color, very few seeds, perfectly smooth skin, breaks open like an apple though without a core, and is of a delicate flavor. If you don't believe all this, ask the Blade of that town as it is responsible for the publication of the story.

BLACK CURRANTS.

The small black dried fruit of commerce, known as Zante currants, are not currants, but grapes, of a variety peculiar to Greece and its islands, and not cultivable elsewhere. Attempts have been made to grow them in other countries, but without success, for the transplanted vines produced large grapes. Originally termed "raisins de Corauntz" (from Corinth, the port of shipment), the name became perverted to the modern currants.

The currant is one of the chief products of Greece, and the production the past decade has doubled. Sixty years ago the production was about 2,000 tons; and for the past three or four years it has reached from 150,000 to 160,000 tons. Until within the past few years America confined her importations to the poorer grades of fruit, but Americans are being educated to use the finer qualities, and an increase in the consumption of these grades is probable, as there is no dried fruit so cheap, and none more wholesome or nutritious. In England many families mix currants in making bread, which makes it very palatable and keeps the bread moist a longer time than without them.

Great quantities of currants are grown in the Ionian Islands; the shores of the Gulf of Corinth, from Patras to Corinth are one vast vineyard of currant vines. Here is produced the finest fruit, known as Vostizza, Corinthia and Patras. The vines are planted in close rows, and are pruned to small bushes. When the fruit is matured, it is plucked and laid upon the ground to cure. This is a time of great anxiety, for the value of the crop depends upon proper curing, and this in turn depends upon the weather. Dampness causes fermentation and other damage.

Because they are dried upon the ground, currants in their ordinary commercial condition are exceedingly dirty, being mixed with much refuse, soil and other impurities. It is important, therefore, that they should be thoroughly and scientifically cleaned.—Exchange.

FLOUR AND FEED.

TORONTO.

Flour trade continues quiet, but there is a firmer feeling all round. Owing to a scarcity of water, consequent upon the severe weather, there is very little flour being made, and it is the opinion that if the people east became anxious buyers prices would advance something like 20c. a barrel. Quotations cannot be got from mills for reasonably prompt delivery, and while buyers refuse to pay more than quotable prices, the mills are holding out for 10 or 20c. a barrel more. Quite an active demand has developed for feed and prices are higher. Oatmeal is quoted 20c. dearer.

FLOUR.—City millers' and dealers' prices are: Manitoba patents, $4.55; strong bakers' $4.10; white wheat patents, $4.25; straight roller, $3.40; low grades, per bag, $1.00 to $1.50.

Car prices are: Toronto freights—Manitoba patents, $4.30 to $4.50; Manitoba strong bakers' $3.75 to $4.25; Ontario patents, $3.25 to $3.50; straight roller, $3.15 to $3.20; extra, $2.75 to $2.80; low grades, per bag, $1.00 to $1.25.

MEAL.—Oatmeal is $4.00. Cornmeal is $3.50.

FEED.—Bran is $13 to $14, shorts is $14 to $15, mixed feed $22, feeding corn 57 to 58c., oats 32 to 33c.

HAY.—Baled timothy, demand is good and supply fair at $9.25

STRAW.—Plentiful and demand limited, at $5.50 to $6.

MONTREAL TRADE NOTES.

Caverhill, Rose, Hughes & Co. are offering special inducements at present in the staple lines of groceries.

Hudon, Hebert & Co. report the demand for syrups quiet, but say that American stock is being sold for less money now than it can be laid down here for.

Eggs have gone up 4 to 5c. per lb. since last week. There have been more enquiries from the United States, but dealers here fear a shortage, and won't fill them.

Chaput, Fils & Co. are offering some nice lines of fish to their customers for Lent. Mr. Geoffrion of the firm says that there are plenty of small orders to fill, although the week's business has been quiet.

Barbados molasses is on the up turn, and Mr. Quintal, Jr., of the firm of Quintal & Sons, says that the stock will all be used up before the new supplies are at hand.

Lightbound, Ralston & Co. report a good sale of their stock of Japan teas. All their cheaper lines have been taken off their hands.

Several lines of black tea, comprising 1,000 odd boxes held on consignment here by a broker, were turned over by him to New York purchasers on the basis of 12 to 16c.

A round lot of 300 boxes of Maracaibo coffee has been offering on this market during the week at 21c., but we did not learn whether it had been closed out to purchaser.

Limits to raw sugar brokers here have been withdrawn by their principals at the source of supply, this, too, despite the fact that they were above the views of refiners here for C.I.F. business. Cables quote Java 16s. 6d., and fair refining 14s. 3d.

The new officers of the Board of Trade were officially announced at a special meeting of the Board, held last week. The complete list is as follows: President, W. W. Ogilvie; vice-president, W. C. Munderloh; second vice-president, James A. Cantlie; treasurer, Edgar Judge; members of the council, Messrs. William Cunningham, live stock; Thomas I. Drummond, hardware; R. M. Esdaile, grain; Charles H. Gould, miller; Frank A. Hart, fruits; D. L. Lockerby, groceries; John McKergow, dairy produce; John B. McLea, shipping and Newfoundland trade; F. D. Rolland, stationery; Charles S. Smith, boots and shoes; A. A. Thibaudau, dry goods, and James Williamson, oils, chemicals, etc. Members Board of Arbitration: Andrew Allan, Robert Archer, H. A. Budden, Geo. Childs, Jas. P. Cleghorn, Hon. George A. Drummond, E. B. Greenshields, F. W. Henshaw, Chas. P. Hebert, John Kerry, Robert Reford, Jas. Slessor. Mr. E. B. Greenshields paid a compliment to the retiring members of the council. Mr. Edgar Judge thought that the incoming council should take steps towards retaining the present large membership and increasing it if possible. It was agreed that at the next quarterly meeting of the board Mr. Judge should move to increase the entrance fee from $100, which it now is, to $200.

FOR YOUNG MEN.

In the American Grocer's "Clerk's Department" appears the following, worth careful noting by young men in all lines of business: "No mother need have undue anxiety for the success of a son who this winter or spring steps out into the business world, so long as he bears in mind a few essential points: He must be honest above all things, and allow nothing to convince him that there is a compromise between honesty and dishonesty. He must be an out-and-out believer in the homely but forcible saying that a man cannot drink whiskey and be in business. He must, too, decide between being a society and a business man; he cannot be both. He must make his life outside the office the same as in it, and not be possessed with the prevalent idea that his employer has no business to question his movements outside of office hours. An employer has every right to expect his employees to be respectable at all times, in the office or out of it."

CACAO AS A BEVERAGE.

The rapid increase in the importations and consumption of coffee during the past few years, despite its increased price, is something remarkable, and is in strong contrast with the importations of cacao which supplies not only a more wholesome, but a far more nutritious beverage. During the year 1891 our importations of coffee amounted to about eight pounds per capita of our population, while our cacao imports were only about five ounce per capita, only one twenty-sixths of the coffee imports. It must also be borne in mind that of the 21,539,840 pounds of cacao imported in 1891, perhaps not more than one-half was used for drink purposes, the other being converted into confections and used in other ways. There is no little ignorance prevailing concerning the value of chocolate, cocoa and the other beverages made out of the cacao bean. Prepared as some of these are with sugar, egg and spices, they are perhaps the most nutritious of all the table beverages used among men.

The food value of a cup of cacao prepared with milk is many times that of coffee. Neither is it so stimulating. Bad effects from the ordinary use of chocolate are, we believe, unknown. It is not merely a beverage, but it is a food of great value, strong, palatable and nourishing. It is a matter for surprise that its use has not become more general. None of the bad results that so often accompany the use of coffee, such as sleeplessness go with the various preparations of cacao. Everybody admits its value in the making of cakes, confections and ice cream, and to almost all it is most acceptable in these various forms. It requires only a little experience with it as a beverage to make it equally acceptable to the public in that form. It is making its way slowly, but its triumph will come.—Interstate Grocer.

BOUNTY FOR BEET SUGAR.

At the beet sugar convention recently held in Denver, Col., G. F. Berringer, superintendent of the experimental station south of Denver, on the divide between the Platte and Arkansas rivers, reported that thousands of tons of beets at twelve tons per acre, with 13 to 16 per cent. of saccharine matter, could be raised there. The beets average two pounds. It was decided to form a permanent state association, which in turn shall form county associations, and subsidies will be obtained when possible from state, county and municipal authorities. A memorial was adopted asking the state legislature now in session to grant a bounty for two years of $1 per ton on beets sold to sugar factories and having 12 per cent. saccharine and a coefficient on purity of 80 per cent.; also a bounty of half a cent a pound for four years on sugar product polarizing not less than 90. A memorial asking congress to continue its bounty of two cents on American sugar will be circulated for public signature. Congress will also be asked to establish experimental stations in Colorado, and both congress and the local legislatures will be asked to make ample appropriation for the acquisition of information.

SOAKED PEAS.

The Empire of Wednesday announced that a Canadian canned goods packer is placing soaked peas on the market without labelling them as such, and with the fictitious name of a company as packers. There are two direct infractions of the law in this, for each of which the offenders are liable to a penalty of not less than $2 per tin for not putting the word "Soaked" on, and the same for a fictitious name.

CASH VS. CREDIT.

No one will deny that it would be a good thing for the retail merchant, and beneficial to the consumer, if the cash systems were in general use. Columns of space in the mercantile trade papers are given to the subject, which may eventually do some good in the direction of the object sought by inducing the dealers to change their methods of doing business.

Thirty or more years ago there were spasmodic efforts to do something in the way of bringing more cash and less credit to the retailer's till, but as there were no papers devoted to the merchant's interests and no organization among them, nothing could be done to break up the universal system of charging for nearly every sale made.

It would be only repeating an old story over and over again to say that every retail dealer will tell you that he is in favor of the cash system; that he would like to see it generally adopted, but—and then he will tell you why he cannot make the change. His reasons are simply and uniformly to the effect that he would lose trade; and if he did not trust, his neighbor in the same line would, and thus draw his customers away. And therein, it seems to us, lies the great secret (if it is a secret) of the failure to do a business on cash-down basis, i. e., want of unanimity and desire on the part of one to sell more goods than his neighbor.

Those who sell the articles of daily consumption by every family know when they give the head of the household one of those universal pass books that, in nine cases out of ten, a great many more sales will be made than if the cash accompanied every purchase. The tendency to buy what may be desired but not absolutely necessary, when the article need not be paid for at the time of purchase, is almost universal among people of moderate means, and this frailty of human nature is too frequently taken advantage of by the dealer to increase his sales. There are others who are too good natured to say "no" even to persons who, they are morally certain, will not or cannot pay their bills in a reasonable time, if ever, but take the risk, hoping that all will come out right in the end.

As a rule, the mechanic and laboring man of the present day could pay cash for everything he needs at the time of purchase. Of course, there are occasional exceptions, such as cases of misfortune, sickness, etc., but this could be provided for by mutual understanding. He receives pay for his work every week, or two weeks, but the unfortunate credit system usually absorbs his earnings, if he pays at the end of the week for what has already been consumed, and he must again be trusted for future supplies. Frequently the temptation to "stave off" part or the whole of his bill at the grocery, butcher shop, etc., is irresistible—in order that he may have a little change in his pocket—and it is not a great while until the debt is too formidable for his means. And so it goes.

A partial remedy for the evils referred to lies in the use of what is known as "coupon books," and we advise those of our mercantile readers who really desire to get out of the credit rut but do not find it feasible to adopt the cash-in-hand system absolutely, to examine the merits (and demerits if there be any) of the coupon method of doing business.

It appears to us, however, that without thorough organization, very little can, or rather will, be done to make the cash system absolute and universal.—Grocer and Trade Index.

ALL ABOUT MAKING MACARONI.

Few people who eat that toothsome article, macaroni, know how or where it is manufactured. They, however, do know that when it is properly prepared it forms one of the most palatable and healthful dishes that is set on the table. Many imagine that macaroni, vermicelli, spaghetti and noodles are chiefly made in Italy and imported into this country. To a certain extent this is true, but of late years the industry has so grown on this side of the ocean that now but one-tenth of the entire amount consumed in the United States is imported. Some years ago it was distinctly an Italian dish. The natives of that country were the first to make it, and they made a national dish of it. Other countries took up the article, until now it is known the world over. While at first Italy had the monopoly of its manufacture and exported large quantities of it, now it is made in different countries of Europe and also by the United States.

In this country the work is done nearly entirely by Italians, who have immigrated from the mother soil, or by their American descendants. In New York city there are several large factories which produce an average of 35,000 pounds a day. This is consumed in that city, but quantities are shipped to different places in the United States and to Canada and to Cuba. A representative of this paper visited the factory and made a tour of inspection through its three floors and watched the different steps which converts the flour into the hard and brittle substance that afterwards becomes so palatable in the hands of the chef or adept housewife. The flour and water is first put into what is called a dough mixing machine. It is cylindrical in form, and within it are knives or plates, which are worked by steam power. The dough is kept in this machine until it is thoroughly mixed. Then it is thrown into a circular trough about six feet in diameter. Through this trough rolls a large stone weighing 3,300 pounds. Over and over the dough this heavy weight passes, rolling it out flat. This process is kept up for half an hour. The next step is the placing of this well rolled material in a powerful circular press worked by steam. The bottom of this machine is a copper plate or mold. It is about an inch thick and perforated with holes, in the centre of which is a pin. The dough is forced through these holes, the little pin in the centre of each making the hollow centre in the macaroni. It comes out in long strings, soft and so pliable that it could be tied in a knot. It is then taken up stairs, where a man lays it out in straight lengths on wire trays covered with paper. The whole is covered with heavy paper, and the trays are put up in racks to dry.

It lies in this position for eight days before it hardens and dries completely, as the dampness prevents it from drying properly.

On nice, clear days the windows are allowed to remain open, but on windy days they are kept closed and the steam is kept on, running the temperature up to between 70 and 90 degrees. This heat does not affect the macaroni, but keeps the air dry. Vermicelli, spaghetti and noodles are all made the same way, except that the holes in the molds through which it is forced are smaller. The vermicelli is made both white and of a yellowish tint. The coloring is done with saffron. When it is taken upstairs to dry it is laid out in curled-up shapes to give it a fancy appearance. There is yet another product that the factory makes—that is fancy pastes. These are used for soups the same as noodles, but present a much nicer appearance. For the pastes the same mixing and rolling process is gone through with as in making the macaroni. Then the dough is taken up to the second floor, where it is placed in a pressing machine set in a horizontal position.

Instead of the ordinary round holes in the moulding plate the perforations take a number of different forms. All the letters of the alphabet are produced. They are very small, but complete as to form and enlarge after being placed in the soup. Thus the Smiths, the Joneses, the Browns and the Johnsons may have received the initial letters of their names in their soups. Numbers, stars, rings and wheels are also made, while the pretty shapes of pepper, olive and lemon seeds are also produced. After the different articles are thoroughly dried and hardened they are packed for shipment. The macaroni is made up in pound packages, wrapped in the familiar blue paper that many a housewife imagines has come all the way from Italy. It is also put up in other colors, with labels of other kinds, bearing Italian names, all of which give it a foreign look. There are several ways of cooking macaroni. Some people cook it with tomatoes, others with cheese. The latter is probably the most palatable.

A lady who is quite an adept in preparing the article gives the following recipe for its preparation: Breaks the sticks into inch pieces, put in boiling water and boil twenty minutes. When half done add a little salt. When done strain in a colander and set it in cold water until the dressing is prepared. To make the dressing, melt a lump of butter the size of a walnut and stir in an even tablespoonful of flour; add a cup of milk and a little salt and allow it to boil. Put in a half cup of grated sharp cheese, allow it to melt, add the yolk of one egg which has been thoroughly mixed but not beaten light. Then stir in the macaroni and put it where it will heat, but not boil.—Inter-State Grocer.

GROWTH OF THE OYSTER.

The oyster at the commencement of its career is so small that 2,000,000 would only occupy a square inch. In six months each individual oyster is large enough to cover half a crown, and in twelve months a crown piece. The oyster is its own architect, and the shell grows as the fish inside grows, being never too small.

It also bears its age upon its back, and it is as easy to tell the age of an oyster by looking at its shell, as it is that of horses by looking at their teeth. Every one who has handled an oyster shell must have noticed the successive layers overlapping each other.

These are technically termed shots, and each one marks a year's growth, so that by counting them the age of the oyster can be determined. Up to the time of its maturity—that is when four years of age—the shots are regular and successive; but after that time they become irregular and are piled one upon another, so that their shell becomes bulky and thickened. Fossil oysters have been seen of which each shell was nine inches thick, whence they may be judged to be more than 900 years old.

From one to two million are produced from a single parent, and their scarcity is accounted for by the fact that man is not the only oyster-eating animal. The starfish loves the oyster, and preys upon it unceasingly. A variety of whelk is also very fond of young oysters, to get at which it bores right through the shell and sucks the fish up through the hole thus made.—Pearson's Weekly.

HOW IT IS DONE.

A great many of the dormant retail grocers are constantly finding fault with their up-to-the-times confreres, says the Retail Grocers' Journal, of San Francisco. The cause for complaint is that they (the live grocers) are selling too cheap. "Why," some of them will say, "I could not sell at that price simply because I paid more by the case than he is retailing them by the single package." And their statement is true in every particular. But whose fault is it? The live grocer keeps posted by reading trade papers and watching the movements of the market, while the other would rather prefer to play pedro or else do most anything except what relates to and would benefit his business, and as for reading trade papers, that is time wasted—the reading is too dry; there is not the pith to it that is contained in an account of a prize fight, and so on. But when it comes to finding fault, then he can waste plenty of time. To approach one of these men with an application to subscribe for a trade paper produces about the same result as does the request of a slow-paying customer who has already a large score recorded against his name, for the loan of fifty dollars to buy Christmas toys for the Children.

However, it is the same with trade papers as it is with everything else; one must be brought up to the use of them in order to be able to grasp the benefit to be derived from their perusal. With a few lessons, such as some of the retail grocers will receive this summer, we think that many of them will become apt scholars and profit by their losses, not only in having to pay more for their goods, but also on account of losing trade by not being able to cope with the up-to-the-times grocers. If less time were devoted to fault-finding, and more in ascertaining in what way they could be up to those in the same trade, and sell at the same price, and make a profit, it would be greatly to the interest of the dormant grocer, who expects that all matters in the trade should be shaped to a mould of his own making.

NUTMEG CULTIVATION IN JAMAICA.

In the Bulletin of the Botanical Department of Jamaica it is stated that a large stock of the very finest nutmegs for seed have been imported to Jamaica from Grenada, and has been sown in the Hope Gardens, and when ready for distribution, will be sold at the very low rate of three half-pence each, in large or small quantities. It is hoped that these arrangements will tend to develop the planting of nutmegs on a large scale in suitable districts in Jamaica. It is stated that already one order has been filed for 10,000 plants, and another for 5,000. The germination of the seed in large quantities, and the care of the seedlings, is said to require the strictest attention, to prevent extensive loss. From the seed beds the seedlings are transferred to bamboo pots, and when they have quite recovered from the transplanting, and have formed good roots, they are ready for the nutmeg plantation. The planters must now exercise strict supervision over the laborers, to see that the bamboo pot is carefully slit down on one side, and the plant, with the earth undisturbed round the root, gently placed in the hole prepared for its reception. If this operation is done too harshly or clumsily, the tip of the tap root is broken, and the plant soon dies.

The trees are a long time coming to maturity, not producing a crop, as a rule, till they are nine years old; and when they first flower, at six or seven years of age, it is possible to determine whether they are male or female. A very small proportion of male trees is left for fertilization by insects; the rest are cut down, and fresh plants are substituted. The fertile trees continue to produce for seventy or eighty years. On an average each tree will yield ten pounds of nutmegs and about one pound of mace every year; and, when highly matured, it is said they will produce ten times that amount.

In connection with the same subject a note on the curing of nutmegs in Grenada is given in the November number of the Jamaica Bulletin, the details of which may be of service to those who are starting the culture. The process is said to be that which is adopted for preparing the nutmegs for the London market. The nutmegs are picked up from under the trees every day except Sunday. On being brought into the boucan, the mace is peeled off and pressed flat between heavy blocks of wood, where it is left for two or three days, then put into a case and left till it reaches the proper color. The nutmegs are put into receptacles (with fine mesh bottoms so that the air can pass through), inside the boucan, and left there for three weeks or a month, or, in fact, until the nut begins to shake inside the shell. They are then shown the sun for a couple of hours a day for two or three days. After this they are cracked. Great care is necessary here, for if the outside shell is struck too hard it makes a black spot on the nutmeg, which affects the value considerably. When cracked, the nuts are sorted according to size, put into ordinary flour barrels and shipped. Regarding the value of the produce of nutmeg trees when in full bearing, it is stated that one grower in 1883 realized from two trees as much as £30.

JUDGING THE AGE OF POULTRY.

Examine the feet and legs; the size and appearance of the spurs, form a guide, as we are told by an expert in The New York World. The skin of the pullet or cockerel is smooth and has a fresh appearance, while that of the adult fowl yearly grows coarse and more shriveled. Place the thumb and forefinger on each side of the back near the "poor's nose," and press. In young birds the part is supple, in old ones it is difficult to bend. If in feeling the tip of the breast bone the grizzle forming there is tender and supple, the bird is young. Ducks that have arrived at the age of two or three years have a deep depression down below the breast feathers and their waddle becomes more and more ungainly.

OLIVES AT POMONA.

The olive industry has proved unusually profitable in the Pomona district the present year if we may fully rely upon the various reports coming from that section. It is alleged that $250 per acre has been made by numerous olive growers, and we have no reason to doubt the statement. What is more to the purpose, however, is the fact, so great is the demand for olive pickles that it can only be partially supplied. It is announced that an order from New York for 20,000 gallons of Pomona pickled olives had to be declined for want of stock. A great advance in olive planting will certainly occur during the coming season.—California Fruit Growers' Journal.

BRAZILLIAN COFFEE.

In view of the constant complaint over the quality and condition of Brazilian coffee, the following epitome of a report from an attache of the British Legation at Rio de Janeiro is interesting: "At the present high prices quantity more than quality is the object of the planter. Careful preparation entails heavy expense and delays, while the profit is so great that everything which comes with coffee, viz., huss, sticks, etc., all go into the bag to increase the weight. Low fair channel, or type No. 6, became the 'good coffee' of the market, and at last even type 7 was difficult to obtain, the stock being almost wholly composed of lower grades. The difference in price between the grades grew to be very large, and finally dealers refused to sell good sorts alone, using them to force off larger parcels of lower quality. In spite of the high premium paid on really good qualities, there is thought to be little hope of a marked change for the better until currency prices fall to the point when freight, etc., make the shipment from the plantation of very low grades unprofitable. Owing to the defective railway service and the consequent delays and exposure to the weather, the coffee has been robbed of what color and style it originally possessed when freshly prepared. Two or three months were no unusual journey between plantation and market, the coffee lying during the greater part of that time exposed to the weather at the railway stations. Large quantities were damaged, and a considerable amount rotted and destroyed."

From present indications there will be an immense crop of oranges in Southern California, especially of navels. The fruit is coloring nicely, and is ripening three weeks earlier than last year.—Los Angeles Express.

ST. JOHN, N. B., MARKETS.

ST. JOHN, N. B., Feb. 9, 1893.
GROCERIES.

Trade has not been quite up to expectations the past week, but the slow movement in goods has had no effect in prices, which in certain lines, such as lard, beans and low grade teas are still moving upward. Collections are slow. Orders are coming in fairly well, with prospects for further improvement before the week is out.

Teas—A fair inquiry for all grades.

Sugars—Market firm but limited quantity moving as quoted; granulated $4\frac{1}{2}$ to $4\frac{3}{4}$ c.; extra C $3\frac{3}{4}$ to 4c.; yellows $3\frac{1}{2}$ to $3\frac{3}{4}$ c.

Molasses—Very dull; market with a good supply is quoted. Barbadoes 32 to 33c., Porto Rico 31 to 33c., Antigua 30 to 32c.

Syrups—Sell very slow at $2\frac{3}{4}$ to $3\frac{1}{4}$ c. per lb.

Butter—Is scarce and sells readily at 21 to 23c.

Eggs—Are in good demand at 22 to 24c.

Cheese—Market very firm, and sells readily at $11\frac{1}{4}$ to $11\frac{3}{4}$ c.

Beans—Have advanced about 30c. per bush.; stocks light. Quotations are $1.80 to $1.85 for mediums and 10c. higher for hand-picked.

Fish—Have been dull, but higher prices are looked for. Large cod are quoted at \$4.75; mediums, \$4 to \$4.25; bay, half-brls., \$1.60 to \$1.75; fresh cod, 3 to $3\frac{1}{2}$ c.; smoked finnan haddies, 6 to $6\frac{1}{2}$ c.; smoked herring, 8 to 10c.

Flour—While dealers are holding prices firm, anticipating further rise in values, buyers are holding off, and as a consequence very little is moving. Manitoba is quoted at $5.15 to $5.25; high grade Ontario, $4.30 to $4.45; medium patents, $4.15 to $4.30.

Oatmeal—Market firm, at $4.20 to $4.30.

Cornmeal—No change, demand light, prices firm; quoted at $2.75 to $2.85.

Feed—Prices steady at advance; $21 to $22.50 per ton.

ONLY ONE AROSE.

An eastern paper tells the story of a certain grocer there who attended a religious meeting when a revivalist preached a powerful discourse upon personal integrity, and urged upon all Christians the duty of debt paying. Delinquents were handled without gloves, and to clinch matters, at the close of the discourse, he asked all who paid their debts to stand up. The congregation almost to a man arose. After they were seated, the preacher invited those who did not pay their debts to stand up, and up rose one solitary forlorn individual. Hesitatingly he got onto his feet, and in faltering tones explained that he found himself in the ranks of the poor-pay class, but unwillingly. He could not help himself, as he was the owner of the local grocery and could not pay up, as every member of the congregation owed him for groceries. It is said that money poured into the grocery store next morning in a lively manner, and the grocer is glad he went to church and spoke in the meeting.

COMPETENT HELP.

The advisability of securing competent and intelligent assistants is being recognized more and more every day by merchants in all branches of trade; and more especially among the retail storekeepers is this essential, where the clerk is brought into contact with scores of people daily. A few years ago the grocer's clerk who could add a fair-sized column of figures and knew the number of ounces to the pound, was considered perfectly competent to attend to the wants of the customers; but now he has been superseded by the intelligent and polite assistant, who knows the names of all the regular customers, so that a lady entering the store is greeted with a "Good morning, Mrs. A.," followed with a remark regarding the current topics; or, "Were you pleased with the new brand of flour we sent you last week?" etc. By the interest taken, the customer feels at once that the clerk is directly interested in supplying her with a good quality of goods, and will often seek his advice and rely on his judgment regarding intending purchases.

It is policy, also, in addition to having a competent corps of assistants, that the force be of sufficient number to attend to the wishes of your customers without subjecting them to unnecessary delay. Would-be purchasers after waiting in a store for five minutes without receiving the attention from anyone, are very likely to make their exit without purchasing, and you will find that their future orders will be left with your competitor. Our friends, when calling on us at home are not neglected in this manner, and why should not this friendly feeling be extended to our customers at the store?

The wide-awake grocer nowadays also prepares for the Saturday rush, not only by having a sufficient force of assistants, but sees that the staple goods during the week have been wrapped in packages of different weights, so that when a pound or two of sugar, coffee, tea, or other commodity is called for, it is not necessary then to be weighed and wrapped. In this way a great deal of valuable time is saved, and the regular force in some cases will be sufficient to attend to the Saturday's trade. During the week your clerks will often find a half hour when this work can be done, and by observing this rule you will find by the end of the year that you have saved considerable in your expense account.

The system of delivering goods has been adopted by all grocers who wish to keep up with the times. Among the larger stores the order clerk will call during the week on the customers, and receive their orders for Saturday's delivery. A bright device which is furnished housekeepers for recording grocery orders consists of a board about a foot in length by three or four inches in width, upon which the names of the different articles handled in the grocery trade are stamped. Opposite each item a hole is made in the board, and when the housekeeper finds the supply of a certain article running short a pin is inserted in this board opposite the corresponding name of the article. By this method a great deal of time will be saved when the clerk calls for the order. And, again, items which would be very apt to be overlooked by the housekeeper if entrusted to her memory, and consequently be omitted in the list furnished the clerk, will by this method be ensured. When it is considered that these items will be very likely purchased at a more conveniently located store, the value of this arrangement will be very readily perceived, and among grocers who enjoy a suburban trade, this plan will be found very practicable, also a stimulating factor to increased patronage.—Joseph Heritage Ingersoll.

ORANGE BUYING.

The expert orange buyer, says a contemporary, does not select the smooth, clean-skinned fruit invariably, nor does he object to a heavy percentage of rough, dirty skins. The latter are not always easy to sell, but they invariably give the greatest satisfaction. This is because in the case of oranges, as with almost any fruit, beauty is only skin deep, and the insects which infest orange groves and extract sweetness from the fruit much as bees draw honey from the finest flowers, only attacks the sweetest and choicest to be bored. The effect of their efforts is to roughen the skin by perforating it, and hence dust is retained, instead of either falling off or being brushed off the untouched skins. The fruit within the latter having been rejected by the insects on account of the lack of sweetness is not so palatable as that in the rougher looking skins; and it is decidedly a good plan to follow in the footsteps of the busy little creature who can tap an orange and ascertain how sweet it is in a manner no man could attempt.

PRUNE CULTURE.

That favorite variety of plum known as the prune, and familiar to all in its conserved state, is cultivated in many parts of the world, and very largely in France, Turkey and Austria. Until the tree was introduced into California our entire supplies, which aggregated thousands of tons yearly, were imported from these countries. The cultivation and growth of the tree in California has within the past three years made wonderful strides, and in a couple of more years the state will produce all the prunes required in this country and some to spare. In regard to the relative quality Californians claim precedence, but, laying aside all prejudice, we prefer the French in point of flavor and tenderness of the fruit. This may be in the preparing, and when the growers in California become as skilled as the French are, the quality of the fruit may be fully equal, if not superior, to any in the world. The process of curing the ripe fruit is simple. In Europe it is mostly done by putting it in ovens, and in California they rely to a great extent upon the sun, the fruit being placed on trays. This fruit properly prepared for the table is not only delicious, but very healthful. Few people in this country know how to properly prepare the prune for the table, and we advise our readers to try the French way: Take, say, one pound of good sized fruit and place in a vessel with sufficient sweetened cool water to merely cover the fruit. Set aside for 24 hours or even more and serve them on the table, and you will find a great improvement over the cooking process, during which much of the aroma of the fruit escapes with the steam.—Winnipeg Commercial.

YOUR BALANCE SHEET.

Have you taken stock, balanced your books and found out how your business has paid you during the past year? If not, believe us, the sooner you get to work and satisfy yourself about it the better for yourself.

A merchant who goes on from year to year without taking stock and having his books properly balanced, is a good deal like a man walking along an unknown road in the dark, and liable at any moment to come to grief by tripping over obstacles or stumbling into pitfalls of which he has no knowledge. What a good lantern would be to such a traveller by showing him how to avoid these dangers, an annual audit and investigation of his business is to the wide awake merchant.

This is not the first time that we have referred to the necessity of a yearly stock taking and balancing of books; indeed we are sometimes of the opinion that our readers will be wearied by its repetition. But even at the risk of this, we think that we would be derelict in our duty towards some, at least, of our readers did we fail annually to deliver this message of warning.

No business man is safe who allows his affairs to run along by chance, and refuses the help that such an annual investigation undoubtedly brings with it. We know of half a dozen cases of this kind, where the merchant never took stock or balanced his books, and only learned how he stood when the assignee took possession of his estate and got out a statement for the information of the creditors.

Success is dear to the heart of every man, and with the keen competition of to-day, no merchant can expect to succeed, who fails to take advantage of such a safeguard as is thrown around him by a thorough annual investigation. While such a course has nothing against it, it has everything in its favor from a business standpoint. Does it do any good to a business to have its stock periodically overhauled, its book accounts investigated; to find out the business rat-holes; what lines of goods have paid the best and which give the least return on the capital invested? If this information and much other that comes out of an annual overhauling of one's business is of no use to you, don't do it. If it is useful, however, and we think it is, you can't do it too soon or too thoroughly.—Commercial Enquirer.

One sometimes hears it said that a merchant is not honest in offering goods at cost, or in announcing a clearing sale at prices below what seems reasonable. Conservative competitors of such a merchant sneer at him and say he is a fraud. It does not follow that such is the case, by any means. A lively, ambitious merchant may fall into error of judgment as to the selling qualities of a line he is at first confident will go. No man can predict exact results. Fact is, every merchant has had experience in this way that has cost him dear. The goods are all right, but at the price first placed on them they prove slow sellers. In such event it is far better to sacrifice all profits and get clear of the stock than to carry it along. Like a captain at sea, who has a big cargo, when the storm comes up, he feels that it is wiser to lose part of the deck load than to risk all on board. By lightening the load he saves the vessel and part of the goods. A clearing sale may make trade somewhat demoralized for a time, but better than crippled credit. Few merchants are able to buy for cash. They must make sales in order to meet bills. The momentary inconvenience of forcing trade is offset by the healthier activity that follows putting in a new and popular stock. It does not pay to carry dead goods.—Exchange.

The general stock of Mrs. F. Strand is to be sold by auction 13th inst.

The stock of Joseph J. Phillips, clothier, Brockville, is advertised for sale by auction.

George B. Forsyth has been admitted a partner to the dry goods firm of T. A. Mara, London.

J. W. Harrison, grocer, flour and feed of Havelock, has sold out his flour and feed business.

The stock of Joseph Girard, general dealer, Moose Creek, Ont., is to be sold by auction on Feb. 13.

The stock of W. H. Bentley of the American Fair, Yonge street, has been sold at 59 cents on the dollar. J. F. Russell was the purchaser.

FIRES.

Mrs. Crowe's grocery store at 509 Bloor street west, this city, was damaged the other day by fire to the extent of $100.

DIFFICULTIES, ASSIGNMENTS, COMPROMISES.

B. Paynet, grocer, Quebec, has assigned to Kent & Turcotte.

Douglas & McVie, crockery dealers, Montreal, have assigned.

The bailiff is in possession of the grocery of M. T. Robinson, Toronto.

Donald A. Sutherland, general merchant, Kensington, P.E.I., has assigned.

W. H. Millman, apples, etc., of Woodstock, is offering to compromise.

W. C. Goetz, boots and shoes, of Guelph, has assigned to George H. Coffee.

Thomas A. McPherson, dry goods dealer, Omamee, has compromised with his creditors.

Pigeon, Pigeon & Co., dry goods, of Ottawa, are offering to compromise at 50c. on the dollar.

F. X. Berthiaume, general dealer, St. Genevieve, Que., has compromised at 40c. on the dollar.

J. H. Honde, general dealer, St. Bridgette des Sautes, Que., is offering to compromise at 65c. on the dollar.

J. B. McDonald, general merchant, Charlottetown, P.E.I., is offering to compromise at 40 cents on the dollar.

The creditors of D. A. McLean, general dealer, McIntyre, Ont., are to meet at Henry Barber's office, Toronto, on the 9th.

G. W. Woodland, general dealer, Durham, Ont., has assigned to H. H. Miller, of Hanover. His creditors will meet on Feb. 13.

Biggs & Co., general merchants, Collingwood, have assigned to John McClung. Liabilities and assets are about the same and reach $20,000.

Mr. N. H. Davis, of Yonge street, importer of fancy goods, has assigned to G. M. Gardner. The stringency of the real estate market, together with other large losses, is the cause. The estimated surplus assets over liabilities are $8,000 to $10,000.

G. S. Wood & Co., dry goods merchants, of St. Thomas, have assigned to S. O. Perry. The firm was enterprising and during the three years it has been in existence fought hard to make business a success. But energy could not make up for insufficiency of capital, hence the assignment. The liabilities are estimated at $11,000.

Douglass & McNiece, crockery merchants, of Montreal, have made an assignment at the demand of the Diamond Glass Company. The liabilities are about $40,000, of which $12,058 is due the Diamond Glass Company; W. & D. Yuile, $9,300; D. J. Macdonald, $4,925; St. John's Stone and Chinaware company $2,267; Banque du Peuple, St. John's $1,315.

FUTURE OF TAPIOCA.

The future of tapioca is a question which is of a great importance to the majority of the trade, though one party in particular is probably more deeply interested in the course of the market than all the dealers of the country put together, says Commercial Bulletin. For several years past this article has been in a dull and depressed condition, prices ruling extremely low, and affording little or no return on the profit side to those who have ventured upon the importation in the hope of realizing something like a decent return upon the import cost. The consumption during this entire period has continued large, and it is undoubtedly increasing, but the methods of conducting the business have changed, and harmony appears to be lacking among those whose interest it is to sustain and support the market upon a basis that will net some slight percentage for the cost of doing business. In former years the importation of this article was confined wholly to the merchants of this city, and from this source the entire country was supplied, but of late years representatives of Singapore houses, not satisfied with filling up the hands of local dealers, have turned their attention to the large jobbing houses of the West, and by soliciting orders for shipment upon same basis of cost as they do to this port, they put stock into the hands of, first the natural importers here, and second the very customers through whom local houses are expected to distribute to the consumers of the country. At the opening of last year the price of medium and fine pearl stood at 3 to 3½c. and flake 3½ to 3¾c. but by April the price had receded to 3c for flake, 2¾c for medium pearl and 2½c for fine do.

At about that time speculative interest was drawn to the article by what were considered the extremely low price, and the more favorable advices received from primary sources, with the result of large purchases of spot and to arrive goods for the purpose of concentration, the operations running up to many thousand bags of the several varieties. The leading spirit in this move after completing these vast operations confidently predicted one of the greatest booms in history, believing he possessed the key to the whole situation, and that the country at large must pay tribute to his long-sightedness. The first act was to advance the price of flake to 3 to 3½c, and fine and medium pearl to 2¾ to 3. The country at this time showed some little disposition to respond, and several fair-sized parcels were taken up by interior merchants under the belief that the scheme was a good one, so to still further improve the position another eighth to a quarter cent per lb. was subsequently tacked on to the value. Such an advance was indeed too much prosperity for the Singapore producers, and they determined to reap some of the benefits that the quotations of the market afforded. They began by soliciting orders for forward shipment from all outside importers, and they adopted the old tactics of going into the country for business. This action immediately put a check upon important demand from the stocks held in this market, and from that time to this, say a period of eight months, the market has exhibited no signs of life, notwithstanding holders have endeavored to coax inquiry at a material concession from the extreme views entertained. In fact not only has the entire advance been lost, but in some instances the price has receded to a point below that from which the movement was originally started. As an illustration flake in a quantity way can be had to-day at 2½c., medium pearl at 2¾c. and fine do. at 2½c. The stock in transit to-day is estimated at 10,000 to 12,000 bags all kinds; the spot stock is not positively known. Shipments are offering February-April at Singapore at the round price of 2.60c. for the three kinds, with intimation that probably a shade less might be done upon a firm bid, but this value does not appear to be attractive to buyers, as we learn of no important operations resulting. The future of the article is indeed in doubt, but one thing is certain that the boom engineered in 1892 has proved a complete failure.

Give your children a cup of Burnham's Clam Bouillon each morning at the table instead of tea or coffee; they will like it better and it keeps their little stomachs in good order and forms bone and muscle.

Competition is keen and active and the only way to meet it successfully is to buy from the best houses, and at lowest prices.

The New Era Pattern

AS the year 1893 marks a new era in the Glass Trade, with its improved facilities for producing better and cheaper goods than heretofore, and being always on the alert studying the requirements of our customers and the growing demand for cheaper, yet serviceable goods, we have much pleasure in offering our patrons

at prices that speak for themselves the best value in the market.

For the convenience of ordering a sample lot, thus avoiding over-stocking, we have had "THE NEW ERA GLASS" put up in small assorted cases (no extra charge for package) containing thirty-nine pieces as follows:

- $\frac{1}{4}$ Doz. Large Table Sets (Sugar, Butter, Cream and Spoon-Holder).
- $\frac{1}{2}$ " Half-Gallon Pitchers.
- $\frac{3}{4}$ " Fruit Bowls, High Foot.
- $\frac{1}{2}$ " Covered Bowls, High Foot.
- $\frac{1}{2}$ " Cake Stands.

Each of these articles can be sold retail at 25 cents, and is an honest bargain at this figure.

Your customers want these goods and you cannot do without them if you want to keep abreast with the times, so don't let your neighbors get ahead of you but order at once, the goods will sell themselves. If you cannot order ten cases now, send for a sample package: we know you will soon want more.

The new railway rates in England are still the cause of a good deal of agitation among the business men over there. It seems that the railway companies have issued special reduced rates on some kinds of freight, urging that this would be compensation for the increase in the general rate. As far at least as the grocery trade is concerned these reductions are more apparent than real, and the trade is noway backward in saying so. Another way in which the new rates have incurred the displeasure of the wholesale grocers is in regard to the preferences given to foreign goods and particularly to sugar. Even the agriculturists of the country have amounted their high horse of indignation and are asking the Government to exercise its power in the matter. It is difficult to turn the average railway company from its purpose, but it is just about as hard to withstand the steady and preconcerted attacks of the merchants who have a grievance, especially when they are assisted by the yeomanry of the country.

Great is the Sugar Trust of the United States. United States officials have been investigating the affairs of the American Sugar Refining Company, and evidence was adduced showing that there are only two refineries in the country that are not included in the combine.

There is a marked and growing tendency of late among business men to call in expert accountants to examine their books. Not a few have ordered stated periods for these visits. In this way more extensive fields are being opened up to this class of professional work. And it is a good sign of the times. One of the most prolific causes of failures is indifferent bookkeeping. Bookkeeping is something more than merely keeping a record of goods bought or sold. That is only the rudiments of the profession. Beyond that there are depths into which none but experts dare venture. In a word, bookkeeping is a science, and a pretty intricate one at that. In the days gone by, when competition was far less keen and profits proportionally larger, there was not the same necessity for a close scrutiny of the books. The exigencies of to-day, however, demand that every leak shall be searched out and stopped. This can only be done by efficient bookkeepers. There are a large number of business men who cannot afford to steadily employ a first-class bookkeeper, but they can call in an expert once a week or month or just as the occasion may demand. And this is what they are doing. Yes, and not only are the smaller houses doing this, but some of the larger ones are getting into the habit of it. The practice is one that will need still further extension. There are men running stores without absolutely any system of bookkeeping whatever. And there are others who, while keeping a rough record of goods sold on credit, have neither a cash book nor a substitute for one. Others again never strike a balance sheet, thus allowing themselves to drift in blissful ignorance as to whether they are sailing towards success or destruction. A good many only learn when they find themselves hard and fast aground. Then they call in the assignee, while if a year or so before they had called in perhaps the same man in his capacity as an expert accountant disaster might have been averted. Bookkeeping is the business man's chart. Use it, and take an expert pilot on board occasionally to make sure you are steering right.

* * *

It is understood that prominent members of the Toronto Board of Trade are devising a scheme for putting into practice President Wilkie's suggestion for an extension of the principal of arbitration. As is well-known, there is now a board of arbitration in connection with that institution, but in what manner it is proposed to extend its functions is not known. At present where there is a dispute between members they can be compelled to submit their case to arbitration. Even a matter in dispute between persons who are not members the board will arbitrate provided the disputants make application and agree to accept as final the finding of the arbitrators. It is rare, however, that the functions of the board of arbitrators are exercised in settling the difficulties of those other than members.

Encouraging as have been the results, the present movement to extend the system has drawn its inspiration from another quarter. This particular incentive is the London Chamber of Arbitration, which was established two or three years ago, and the success which has attended it seems to have created a general desire everywhere to extend the principal of arbitration so that it may even appropriate at least some of the functions of the courts of law. The Chamber of Arbitration that is now attracting so much attention was established by the corporation of London in concert with the Chamber of Commerce. It is managed by a committee of twelve, each of the two formative bodies appointing six. The parties to a dispute may select, or at their request the registrar will appoint one, two or three arbitrators, as the case may be. When two arbitrators are appointed they in turn choose an umpire within ten days. Then there is what is termed a legal assessor, who must be a barrister of at least seven years' standing. His duties are to sit with and advise the arbitrators. Any number of parties may join in submitting a case for arbitration, and a submission once made cannot be revoked by either party without the consent of the other unless by leave of the court or a judge. An award can be enforced in the same manner as a judgment or order of the court. Witnesses are either sworn or compelled to make an affirmation. The sittings of the arbitrators are private, but newspaper reporters are allowed admission on the consent being obtained of all parties interested in the case. Regarding arbitrators' and umpire's fees, they are two guineas for the first hour and one guinea for each subsequent hour. The fees are paid on the award being taken up, except in a case of reconciliation, when the fees due are payable by the several parties in equal shares. The fee of the legal assessor is five guineas for three hours and ten guineas if the period of his services exceed that time. The court fee is one guinea, and for copies of documents supplied by the registrar fourpence per folio of 72 words is charged. Last year the board of arbitrators disposed of several thousand cases.

The principal of arbitration is no modern devise. It came down to us from the Rome in company with the foundation of our law. And that its expansion should have been so small in comparison with the growth of the centuries is surprising. But it looks as if the nineteenth century is hastening in its dying years to make up for some of the time lost by its predecessors. Cheapness and efficiency without distracting technicalities is what is wanted for the settlement of disputes between man and man. And arbitration seems to be nearer possessing these qualifications than is the present law in its general acceptance. The chambers of commerce in some of the large cities and towns in England are moving in the same direction as the chamber in the metropolis, and now Toronto appears to be falling into line. Not long ago the state of New Jersey adopted an arbitration law for the settlement of disputes growing out of employer and employees. The local board for the adjudication of such differences is to consist of five persons, two of whom are to be designated by the labor organization whose members are involved and two by the employer, while the four thus chosen are to designate a fifth person to act as chairman of the board. An appeal may be taken to the state board of arbitration which is a permanent commission of three members holding office for terms of five years each, one of the three being a member of a bona fide labor organization of the State. New York has a similar law.

The Montreal Retail Grocers' Association is an aggressive body. There is a bill before the Quebec Legislature providing for the closing of stores at 8 p. m. This the grocers of the commercial metropolis do not think goes far enough. At a meeting held the other night they unanimously adopted a resolution favoring 7 o'clock as the hour for closing, and it was furthermore resolved to send a deputation to Quebec to endeavor to get the desired change made. At the same meeting it was also resolved to take a hand in the municipal contests and to support only those candidates whose views are in accord with those of the Association.

The successful grocer in these days is the man who holds to the axiom, "small profits and quick returns," and practices it. But the man who wants to carry the maxim out to its logical conclusion, as it were, needs to possess something more than the mere desire to put it into practice. He needs to possess the capital and the ability to buy right. Either one of these is handicapped without the other, and therefore the man who has the capital needs to have the practical experience before he launches into business for himself, or vice versa. Many a bright young man has learned this to his sorrow. An apprenticeship to the grocery business is as necessary as in other branches of business or in the professions. A can cannot instantly become a fullfledged grocer by his own volition any more than he can become a physician. This is something that a good many seem to forget. Mechanics, clerks, teachers, farmers, when they get tired of or fail in their several avocations often think they have only to drop into a grocery or general business and all will be lovely. As a rule when they do drop in they find they are like chicks that have essayed to follow ducklings into a horse pond. Some of them may under exceptional circumstances come out all right, but the failure list shows that a good many do not. And here is a sample of what is often found on the head stones of their business careers: Mr. Jonas Jones was a young and prosperous farmer (or clerk or mechanic, or teacher, as the case may be), who sold out a few years ago, and invested his capital in a grocery business in this town, imagining that life would be easier and profits larger in weighing out sugar and tea than in cultivating the soil. He has now learned his mistake, having found it necessary to place his affairs in the hands of Assinee Smith.

In spite of repeated warnings there are still to be found business men who entirely neglect to insure their stock against fire. How many there are is a query, but fire reveals one now and then. One of these revelations came a few days ago when the postoffice and store at Moffatt, Ont., was destroyed, together with the stock and a trunk containing $300 in cool cash. True, the store had only recently been purchased by its present owner, but he was in possession time enough to have had his premises insured. When a man wants to insure his person or his chattels he has no trouble to secure the desideratum. The moment he utters the word the ubiquitous agent is at his command as quickly as the small boy hies to a sugar barrel. Not only should a business man be insured but he should be insured to at least 60 per cent. of the value of his stock. In justice to his creditors he should do this, if for no other reason.

Ceres, the goddess of tillage seems to have taken an especial interest in the canners. At the beginning of last season they found themselves with large stocks on hand from the previous year, and dismal was the outlook. But fortune always favors the brave and the darkest hour is before the dawn. Just when the worst was expected nature issued her edict. The tomato and pea vine did not yield as bountifully as was wont, and the canner was accordingly saved.

A petition has been presented to the House of Commons by a number of the residents of Napanee praying that the standard weight of a bushel of onions be reduced from 60 to 50 pounds, and that the weight of a bag of onions be fixed at 75 pounds exclusive of the bag, and of a barrel of onions at 150 pounds exclusive of the barrel.

CHATS WITH RETAILERS.

"Say, there is one thing I would like to see ventilated," remarked a west end retailer. "And it is just this: Do you think it fair that the biscuit manufacturers should allow business men in one part of the city to get their goods at less than those in other sections? Now those fellows down there at the market get their biscuit one-half cent a pound less than I do. I say it is a shame. When this privilege was first accorded it was because the grocers around the market also did a jobbing trade. But there is no jobbing trade now, and consequently, even if these concessions were just some years ago, the reason for their continuance no longer exists. There is a good deal of feeling arising over the matter," he added as he wiped his mouth with the corner of his apron and hurried away to wait on the customers who had in the meantime congregated in his store.

"Do you know, I think it would be a good thing for all concerned," said a retailer yesterday, "if the retail and the wholesale men could be brought into closer touch with each other. If this could be accomplished I feel sure that a number of the present irritating matters would be removed. I fancy that an understanding might also be arrived at whereby the wholesaler might be induced to refuse to open up an account with a man starting into business who was without sufficient capital, experience, or whose business methods were questionable. This would tend to do away with one of the worst forms of competition that the legitimate grocer has to contend with."

ANOTHER ADVANCE IN SOAP.

Another advance is announced in the price of soap. It took place Monday, and came as suddenly as did its predecessor two weeks before. The advance in this instance is ostensibly half a cent a pound, but in reality it is more, the discount on common soap also having been reduced 5 per cent., while the 10 per cent. discounts on toilet soaps will not be allowed in future. Without allowing for the discounts knocked off, the advance in the two weeks is one and one-half cents a pound. The retail price before the first advance went into force was 15 cents a bar. Then it was raised to 18 cents, and now 20 cents will be the ruling figure. Some retailers are finding fault with the soap manufacturers for announcing two advances within such a brief period. It is not the advance itself that disturbs them. That they acknowledge is warranted by the condition of the raw material market. It is with the manner in which the prices were raised that they take umbrage. They contend that the manufacturers might have advanced prices one and a half cents a pound at a bound instead of taking two steps to accomplish it. Had this been done, the retailer holds that it would have been necessary to have made one explanation only to the consumer, while now the work of mollifying his customer will be doubly as hard. Further advances in tallow, the most important of the raw materials entering into the manufacture of soap, is responsible for the further increase in price.

RETAIL GROCERS' ASSOCIATION.

President Clarke occupied the chair at the regular monthly meeting of the Toronto Retail Grocers' Association held in Richmond hall Monday night.

Mr. J. G. Gibson, chairman of the "At Home" committee, reported regarding the entertainment held at Webb's Jan. 18, that "everything went off very nicely. It was the most satisfactory one we ever held." He concluded amid a unison of "hear, hear's" from the members.

Mr. Robert Mills, the treasurer of the committee, reported that there was a balance on hand of $61.45.

On motion of Mr. Gibson the report was adopted, and the amount was ordered to be placed to the credit of the reserve fund.

The committee appointed to arrange for speakers and essayists on trade questions reported that they had been too much pressed for time to make the desired arrangements.

Mr. Gibson, one of the members of the committee, said that he really had not time to devote to it. He had already too many meetings to attend, and it was a principle with him not to allow his name to be on a committee when he could not find time to work with it. He moved, seconded by Mr. McMillan, that his name be struck out, and that the name of Mr. White be substituted.

Mr. White—I would rather not go on the committee. Anyhow, I think Mr. Gibson is only joking.

Mr. Gibson—I was never called a joker before. Anyhow, I am in earnest.

The motion was defeated, but Mr. Gibson persisted, and eventually his name was struck from the committee.

Mr. Martin McMillan found fault with the present place of meeting, and he moved that Mr. Mills, Secretary Corrie, Mr. Booth and the mover be a committee to look for a more suitable room.

Mr. Gibson favored the idea. He was anything but satisfied with the way the association had been treated. The room was uncomfortably cold every meeting night.

The motion was carried unanimously.

Mr. Booth gave notice of motion to amend the constitution to provide that seven members constitute a quorum instead of eleven as at present.

Mr. Gibson referred to the advances in soap, and said he wished the manufacturers had raised the price at a jump instead of piecemeal as they had done, as the consumers would complain a good deal at prices being raised twice.

Mr. McMillan—They should have put prices up two cents at once, and they ought to be censured for not doing so. It makes regular fools of us. We had first to raise the price to 18 cents a bar, and now we'll have to put it up to 20 cents.

On motion of Mr. A. G. Booth, seconded by Mr. Bond, the printing committee was instructed to make a yearly contract for the printing of the monthly notices.

Mayor Fleming wrote expressing regret that owing to pressure of civic business he was unable to attend the At Home. The Single Tax Association sent in a communication asking permission to present its views to the members. The missives were received and filed.

These were received into membership: W. H. Hunter, 117 Carleton street; McAuliffe & Co., York street; W. G. Walker, 123 McCaul street.

The meeting adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

KINGSTON BOARD OF TRADE.

At the annual meeting of the Kingston Board of Trade on Friday evening, the 10th inst, the officers elected were: President, G. Richardson; first vice-president, J. Hewton; second vice-president, Chadwick; sec'y-treas., F. King. Council of board, L. B. Spencer, B. W. Robertson, G. E. Hague, G. Y. Chown, R. J. Carson, J. Muckleston, James Minnes, Capt. Gaskin. The report of the council showed that efforts were being made to induce Mr. Rathbun of Deseronto to start smelting works here, and that ten million bushels of grain were handled here last year. Motions were adopted asking for a Dominion insolvent act, to do away with unfair preferential assignments, and recommending the subsidizing of a fast line of steamships between Canada and Great Britain. A motion was defeated asking for a reduction of the import tax on agricultural machinery, implements, tools, and all raw material imported from the united kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and also on corn, binder twine and coal oil imported from the United States to Canada. While all the speakers thought the tariff might be modified to the advantage of the people the board thought the motion was too sweeping in its character.

CALIFORNIA ORANGES.

Says the San Francisco Grocer:—Early in December, after a visit to Southern California, we set down the orange crop on the trees of 1,800,000 boxes. The Santa Fe Railroad Company a month later, after a careful canvass of the whole southern section, gave details of its work which resulted in an estimate of 1,767,590 boxes. This is the equivalent of somewhat less than 6,000 cars of 300 boxes each. Other estimates set the crop of 6,500 cars and some as high as 7,000 cars. D. W. McLeod, a Riverside grower, complains of these high estimates as being the outgivings of the buying interest, and gives his own figure as 5,000 cars.

CANADIAN PACKERS ASSOCIATION.

The annual meeting of the Canadian Packers' Association was held at the Walker House, Toronto, February 9-10. There were present, W. Boulter, president, in the chair; W. A. Ferguson, Delhi Co.; A. E. Carpenter, Ontario Co.; H. I. Matthews, Lakeport Co.; W. M. Miller, L. A. Wright, A. C. Miller & Co.; J. Anning, Belleville Co.; Fred F. Miller, Miller & Co.; N. Douglas, Strathroy Co.; S. S. Potter, Mountain View Co.; W. P. Innes, Simcoe Co.; J. D. Dolan, Niagara Co.; W. C. Breckenridge, Morton Mfg. Co.; L. J. Coryell.

The minutes of the last annual meeting and the special meetings were read and confirmed. Letters were read from several members regretting their inability to be present.

The President delivered his address as follows:

Another year's work has passed into history, and we meet to-day to elect our officers, talk over our past experiences, and as business men endeavor to benefit ourselves for the future. Commencing with the past year's operations, each of us found ourselves with large quantities of unsold goods on our hands from the pack of 1891. We found in different parts of Ontario efforts to build additional factories, and we say unfortunately a large number were built, fully equipped and are putting up goods for a now overcrowded market. Prospects for those long engaged in the business were not of the brightest, and it was only by nature withholding in some localities supplies of fruits and vegetables that many of us do not find ourselves loaded up with more goods than we have at present. The new members who have joined our association we are pleased to welcome amongst us, believing they had a perfect right to launch out in the business, not that "misery loves company," but as their capital is now invested, we wish them to counsel with us as to the future that all may be benefited and our mutual interests, by so co-operating, be protected, and so regulate our business that we may not lose what capital we have got invested or impair it by a haphazard way of business, but that we may counsel together for the future and determine what will be for the general good of us all.

You all have received the reports from our secretary. By them you can easily see something must be done by us. Either cut down the present output to the requirements of the country or else by united help to find a market in the motherland for our surplus pack, which has heretofore been principally supplied by our American friends. We cannot possibly, even with the supposed short pack last year in the United States, expect to send any of our surplus stock over there to relieve our market. McKinleyism has barred us out, and I do not look for any radical change in their government that will be advantageous to us as manufacturers for some time to come. Notwithstanding the unwished for proffered advice of those unpatriotic Canadians, who forget that Canada is the land of their birth, and have invested no capital to advance its interests, wish us to bow our heads and ask favors of them to aid us, and expect them to drop their tariff for us if we would commence first so to do. No, we will, as an association, stand by the loyal principle we have adopted, of Canada for the Canadians, and cultivate a trade with that glorious empire of which we form a part.

I am much pleased to know that special efforts have been made to place our goods on the markets of England by some of our members, and with success. I am pleased that one of our old members, Mr. A. E. Carpenter, of the Ontario Canning Co., Hamilton, went over last season and was enabled to convince our people over there that Canadian canned goods were equal to those they had been supplied with formerly by our American friends, and that he can give us some information as to the future that will be beneficial to us. We know we are packing canned goods equally as well, and we believe, better, than the general pack in the United States. We have convinced our people here, and we believe we can convince those in England. Our government wisely, at our suggestion, took the duty from tin plates, and gave us a fair measure of protection that has enabled us to build up a new industry giving employment to thousands of our own people, creating a market for fruits and vegetables that did not exist, and distributing annually amongst our people large sums of money that otherwise would not have been done but for the fostering care of our national policy, and not only in so doing for all benefited, but manufacturers of canned goods machinery were obliged to locate in Canada. The mammoth establishment of the Norton Mfg. Co., of Chicago, shipped their plant here, and have built up a large business in the city of Hamilton, turning out, in addition to paint and other cans, over 50,000 fruit cans daily, supplying British Columbia, and now the lobster canneries of Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland. We wish them success, but hope by their energy they will not be the means of establishing any more canning factories at present in Ontario. We return them our thanks for their kindness in tendering to us the different banquets in the past. Referring to work entrusted to your committee in re legislation, we regret to report nothing has yet been done definitely, but hope soon to report more favorably. The committee appointed at our last meeting in Hamilton, as to securing a uniform rate as to weights in shipping our goods, I received a communication from a representative of the C.P.R. that it had not been neglected, but that the tariff association had it under their consideration. Their general agent, Mr. Mayfield, called at my place a short time ago, and the weights of the different classes of goods were thoroughly gone into. To-day I called on the chairman of the traffic association, Mr. J. N. Sutherland, of the C.P.R., and he assured me that at their next meeting in this month it will be brought up, and I have reason to believe it will be definitely settled to the satisfaction of our request, which I am sure will be very satisfactory to us all. Representatives of both C.P.R. and G.T.R. will be present at our meeting to-day. I also wish to call your attention to an infraction of the canned goods law. As reported in The Empire, lately, at considerable expense and time, the present canned goods law was placed on the statute book, and we do not think it should be allowed to be infringed on as at present. I have had copies printed for your perusal. There is considerable new work to come up before you to-day, one particularly as to some uniformity as to prices to be paid for produce for our factories, which should be definitely settled; rates of freight to be allowed on shipments to Maritime Provinces, etc. And now, gentlemen, allow me to tender to you one and all my thanks for the uniform courtesy extended to me in my position. For ten long years I have endeavored to discharge the duty assigned to me. How far that has been done to meet your views I leave you to judge. I think you could now select someone amongst yourselves to fill the position. I will in the future do my best to keep together the association, believing its usefulness has not ceased to exist, but that we should more closely band ourselves together, and in so doing we have not done any injustice to the consumer, canned goods being cheaper in Canada by at least 25 per cent. than in the United States. In conclusion, difficulties and jealousies may crop up, but let us meet them like business men and endeavor to settle them, and to inspire more confidence amongst ourselves. I again thank you, gentlemen, and wish our association success.

The secretary-treasurer presented his annual report in which he stated that the association was never in a more prosperous condition than at present. There were three times as many members as when he assumed the duties of the office five years ago. He referred at length to the condition of the trade, and expressed the opinion that, though most desirable, it would be useless to attempt to curtail the pack. It had been unsuccessfully tried in other industries. The aim of many packers, he pointed out, had been to put up as large a quantity of goods as possible regardless of quality. They should reverse that order, and see that the quality was good regardless of quantity. The object of the association should then be to increase the consumption in Canada, and open up and develop the export business. He submitted a financial statement showing a balance on hand of $127.14.

It was decided that the entrance fees of the new members who joined in December, 1892, should be dated from January 1, 1893.

Messrs. Boulter, Innes, Ferguson, Carpenter and Breckenridge were appointed a committee to confer with the Freight Traffic Association on February 16 regarding rates and uniform weights.

It was decided to ask the Government to amend that part of the canned goods law referring to the label to read as follows: "Except in the case of goods packed previously to 1893 every package of canned goods packed or sold or offered for sale in Canada shall have attached thereto a label setting forth in legible characters, the name and address of the person, firm or company by whom the same was packed." And in Sec. 4, referring to fines, that the following be added: "One-half of the fine to go to the informer."

Officers were elected as follows:

President—W. Boulter, Picton.

Vice-president—W. A. Ferguson, Delhi.

Sec'y-treas.—J. B. McLean, Toronto.

Assistant secretary—W. C. Breckenridge, Hamilton.

Executive committee—W. P. Innes, J. D. Dolan, A. E. Carpenter, Fred. F. Miller.

GROCERY METHODS IN 1892.

A member of the Grand Rapids Association, Mr. Peter Schuit, a native of Holland, recently gave the Michigan Tradesman some interesting particulars of the grocery methods of that country.

"A grocery store in America," said he, "is quite a different sort of an institution from a grocery store in Holland. Our tea stores are very much like the old country grocery stores in appearance. Here a grocery store is a combination of what, in Holland, would be four separate and distinct kinds of business, namely, a grocer, a dealer in green fruits, a vegetable dealer, and a dealer in butter, eggs, cheese, soft soaps, etc. The Holland grocery, being free from these other lines, is much neater and cleaner, of course, than the stores in this country.

"In one sense, the Holland grocery has attached to it a sort of factory feature, that is, a large amount of labor is expended in preparing the goods and putting them in proper condition for sale. Goods do not go out of the store in the same condition in which they come into it, as in this country; for instance, currants, raisins, rice, teas, sugars, etc., are received in condition, just as they are here, but the currants and raisins must be cleaned for the table; the rice must be sifted and screened, making several grades at corresponding prices, and the sugars must be kept free by pulverizing, in order that they may easily be handled and readily mixed. A grocer is supposed to be able to duplicate, by mixing, any sample which may be sent to him by a customer. In teas he must also know how to sift, mix and grade to suit his customers. Coffee is always bought in the green state and roasted by the grocer. The roasting process is more perfect than that in vogue in this country. A full hour is required for the roasting, and the cooling should be gradual. The roasted berry is larger and more uniform which proves the superiority of the Holland process of roasting. The Holland grocer makes his own cocoa and chocolate. He buys the cocoa seeds or beans, which are about the size of a peanut, and roasts, pulverizes, melts, flavors, sweetens and manufactures them into different articles of cocoa and chocolate.

In answer to a question, Mr. Schuit said: "Oh, yes, the trade is bothered more or less by price cutting competitors. That reminds me of a funny incident relating to price cutting. A German opened up a grocery store in our vicinity, and being anxious to catch trade, he cut a cent or two on coal oil. We followed with a lower cut. He led again, and we responded. Once more he led and then the order at our house was: 'Boys, roll two barrels of oil out on the street, knock in the heads, hang a dipper on the side of each, and place a card over them with the invitation printed on it, 'Come early and help yourselves.''" This brought our German competitor in with enquiries as to what we meant by such work. The head of the house informed him that it was a first-class advertising scheme, and he thought he would give it a good long trial before abandoning it. This cured our German friend of the price-cutting habit."

Honor and stability go hand in hand, and Mr. Schuit but adds to the general opinion held by our foreign born citizens generally, when he asserts that honor and stability are more sought after and more highly prized in the old country than in this. As an evidence of this, he states that the good-will of an established business is often a source of considerable wealth. To purchase a business, one must not only pay 100 per cent. of the invoice value of the stock, but he must also purchase the good will of the business, which is generally appraised at a sum equalling one year's sales of business. So much for business stability. As to honor, Mr. Schuit states that a disputed account is a very rare occurrence. Bills are paid and no questions asked. He relates one very curious custom in relation to collections. It seems that the servant girls are entrusted with the duty of paying the grocery bills by the presentation of checks, and each in return receives a little donation from the grocer, equivalent to one per cent. of the bill or account. This acts on the girls as an incentive to see that the master pays his grocery bills promptly.

COFFEE CONSUMPTION IN 1892.

This was the largest for any year on record, reaching a total of 691,691 tons for Europe and the United States, a gain over 1891 of 31,835 tons, and over 1890 of 81,477 tons, says American Grocer. This is a remarkable showing, in view of the high cost of the article. Almost the entire increase is credited to the United States, the gain in Europe being only 2,695 tons. Europe used 422,801 tons of coffee in 1892; the United States 268,891 tons.

The future Brazil supply is variously estimated, and is thought cannot exceed 5,500,000 bags from Rio and Santos.

The Java crop of 1893-4 will show a heavy decrease; some estimating a falling off of two-thirds. Nicaragua is expected to furnish the largest crop ever grown. The reports from the United States of Colombia indicate a reduced yield; similar accounts come from the Malabar coast and Manila.

There are no indications that the world's production is likely to overlap its requirements to an extent large enough to inaugurate an era of low prices.

INVENTION OF POSTAGE STAMPS.

The invention of postage stamps is said to be due to a printer of Dundee, Scotland. England, 52 years ago introduced the system of prepaying letter postage, and, according to a decree of December 21, 1839, issued the first stamps which were to be put before the public on May 6, of the following year. A year later they were introduced in the United States and Switzerland, and within three years had become common in Bavaria, Belgium and France. One of the most important and valuable collections of postage stamps and other postal devices in the world is in the German Imperial Post Office Museum at Berlin.

It takes 80 men and women to make a postage stamp. First the white paper is cut into sheets, each large enough for a hundred stamps. The stamps on each sheet are counted 26 times to make sure the number is correct. The printer counts and passes the sheet to the gummer, the gummer gums the back, and being counted, gives it to the perforator, who divides the stamps by rows of little holes, not forgetting to count. It is surprising how quickly and accurately the hands work. Seven hundred millions of postage stamps are made every year in the United States. New York city uses 8,000,000 a month.—American Stationer.

A dispatch from Mexico states that the coffee crop in all the coffee growing districts will amount to $8,000,000. Agricultural exports will be larger than ever during the coming year, thus tiding the country over the trouble occasioned by the decline in silver.

A TEXAS SUBSTITUTE FOR COFFEE.

In a recent issue of a St. Louis daily paper there was a glowing account sent in by a special Texas correspondent relative to some wonderful coffee substitute discovery, which had been made by an ex-St. Louis resident. This wonderful substitute which is to knock the spots off of the old-fashioned coffee is to be made from the bean of the mesquite tree.

The correspondent in enthusiastic terms described how the inventor roasted some of these beans and found them to be exactly the same flavor as that of the best of coffee. This made him put on his thinking cap, and after several nights of restless sleep and of mixed dreams and great research in encyclopaedias, he found that the mesquite tree belonged to the same species of plants as the coffee. That this statement is false, of course, makes no difference with the introduction of the substitute. The mesquite tree yields these beans very freely, and the tree will give a much larger yield than a coffee tree. Besides, as the plant grows wild there is no expense for cultivation. The correspondent states a chemical analysis of the bean was made, and it was shown that the ingredients were much the same as those of genuine coffee only a little more so.

The inventor worked away until his anatomy had shrunk to a mere shadow, but he finally succeeded in devising a method of preparing the bean, which he claims he has patented, by which it equals the best Java coffee. It is said to have a delicious and inviting aroma, and while it is very pleasant to drink, leaves no bad after effects. It is also very nutritious, and under its stimulating and muscle-giving influence, the inventor himself gained all his lost avoirdupois and considerably more.

It is stated that a company with a capital stock of $500,000 has been incorporated to manufacture the coffee substitute, and that a wholesale grocer in Texas is president of the company. An extensive plant is to be erected, and the work of roasting, grinding and bolting the bean and placing it on the market will be actively pushed. The projectors of this remarkable enterprise think that they will knock the genuine coffee market into smithereens, and that the price of the bean will fall to a mere nominal figure. They claim that the mesquite can be sold cheaper than chicory, and as it is superior to the best Java, of course no one will use the genuine article but will buy the substitute.

We do not think that holders of coffee need be nervous over the future of the market on account of this great Texas discovery. There have been many other wonderful inventions written about by the daily papers, at so much per line, and this wonder comes under the same head. It is our place to give all the news pertaining to the trade, and of course we cannot omit this wonderful item. Long life to the Texas inventor, and may he announce soon his authority which says that the mesquite tree belongs to the same species with the coffee plant.—Grocers' Bulletin.

THE OLD AND THE NEW.

There is a feature of merchandising that requires too much explanation to pierce through its integument of mystery. Ordinarily a serious-minded man is satisfied to own an article of thoroughly established reputation. In traffic this state of the case is subject to reversal in many cases. Retailers—not all of them—will keep a well advertised article in stock for years, and in the face of large demand for the same risk their present value of sale in the adoption of some new commodity in the same line. Why holding on to a good thing is not better than attempting something whose value has yet to be approved by patrons, is not at this writing apparent. It does not explain the case to recall the fact that allowing the merchant a larger margin of profit may be responsible for his conversion.

Good business methods can always prove that an undoubtedly superior article always pays better in the end. In the one instance you have already proved your case, and the logical result of patronage will follow. In the other, you have a new case to introduce, with all the delay and argument incident thereto. Grant if you like that the new arrival is good, it has still to run the gauntlet of criticism, and to suffer the condemnation which a stranger usually provokes. In the meantime the good old standby continues to be in demand, is generally advertised by its manufacturers, and requires no effort on your part to get it into the hands of the consumer. It ought not to be difficult to make a wise choice, yet it often seems impossible.—Trade.

WHAT CONFIDENCE DOES.

Confidence is worth far more than actual capital in most business transactions. For instance, all the money in the United States, could it be gathered together in a single city, would not suffice to conduct the business of that city, were actual cash the sole medium of purchase and sale. Credits, notes, drafts and checks constitute the machinery by which exchanges are facilitated, where most business is done, and these are as sensitive to commercial disturbances as the barometer to a change of weather. Not one firm in twenty could do business, at a profit, on its actual cash capital; it must trust and be trusted, counting upon bills receivable to liquidate bills payable, and springing, as eagerly as a sentry upon a spy, upon anyone who shows any signs of trying to shirk his responsibilities.—John Habberton, in Grocers' Review.

BE PROMPT.

"Do it to-day," says a writer in The Merchant Sentinel. "Meet the day's demands with promptitude, regardless of their seeming insignificance, for there is no better way to place your name between the lips of undesirable business gossips than by showing this lack of promptness in small matters. This does not alone apply to the strictly financial part of your work. There are thousands of opportunities which present themselves where it is possible for the business man to take advantage of the 'stitch in time saves nine' axiom. The 'stitch' is but an insignificant factor in the make up of the long binding seam, but the neglect of the one broken thread, and procrastination's prevention of its prompt repair, is the ruination of the entire garment. So we find men in their business transactions constantly putting off that which should be done to-day, until an accumulation of the little neglected details form an aggregate with a crushing weight, when the time comes that circumstances give the mandatory command. It must be done! How often do we hear the merchant who is his own bookkeeper lamenting an unpardonable negligence in himself—in the matter of keeping his accounts entered up to date and his books in a condition of intelligent management. A negligence which he would not tolerate in any one in his employ. So easy is it to thoughtlessly 'put off' that which does not make a peremptory demand upon our time, that we are liable to fall into the habit of being behind the details. Better, by far, be ahead of time than constantly lagging. Do everything as it presents itself, for just as sure as you 'put off' until to-morrow, your time will be fully filled by the duty of the day, and you have lost the only opportunity of life open to the neglected work."

HE GAVE AN ORDER.

A drummer for a New York grocery house took shelter from a thunder shower in a small grocery kept by a colored man in the suburbs of Nashville, and pretty soon the proprietor asked:

"Was yo' a stranger around yere, sah?"

"I represent this house," replied the drummer, as he handed out a card.

"I see. Does yo' own de bizness yo'-self?"

"Oh, no."

"Was yo' de senior pawdner?"

"No."

"Was yo' backing de concern wid yo' capital?"

"No."

"Jist sent out to take orders?"

"That's all. Perhaps I can take an order from you?"

"Wall, sah, if dat house has dun sent yo' clean down yere to git an order from me, I ain't gwine ter be mean about it, put me down for fo' pounds of grown sugar, an 'draw on me arter sixty days fur the bill."—New York World.

THE VALUE OF AN ATTRACTIVE PACKAGE.

The next thing to a good name is a good appearance. It is doubtful, indeed, if the majority of people give second place to appearance. At all events, it is very frequently made to do service in default of a good name, and often with success. The part that attractive labels play in trade is an important one. Manufacturers recognize this to a very great extent, and usually mark their packages with wrappers that appeal strongly to one's sense of beauty. The demand for any given class of goods may have its fundamental basis on another sense entirely, yet the sight is sought to be captivated as it is well known to be an important selecting influence. The relation between the taste and the sight is close and made the most of. Hence, manufacturers of edibles put up in packages rarely neglect to dress up the exterior with a captivating label. Our canners go in for handsome labels, and the development of labels in this country has made quite satisfactory progress in the main, though there is still room for improvement. Some very appetizing designs are embodied in labels now in use, while others are defective in this quality. The canner should take a leaf out of the variety show manager's book. The latter advertises by means of pictures that are suggestive in a certain way; they are objectionable to be sure, but they suggest feelings that are the basis on which such concerns are maintained. The canner ought to aim to have pictorial labels as seductive to the appetite, labels that suggest a longing to eat of the contents of the package. The goods will seem tempting, succulent, toothsome and mouth-watering, if labels are made the most of. Thus will they promote business, and the grocer, as well as the canner will appreciate the effect of art in labels.—Ex.

THE ORIGIN OF TOBACCO.

There is no longer any doubt about the Spanish origin of the word tobacco, neither about the country where the Europeans saw it for the first time, says The New York Sun. Its discovery dates from that of America, and it was at Cuba on the 28th day of October, 1492, that the bold representatives of the Old World saw the fragrant smoke puffed out from the lips of the inhabitants of the new world. (Another reason, lovers of the weed will say, for celebrating worthily the forthcoming anniversary of the discovery of America). Tobacco was the name given to the plant by the Indians whom Columbus saw, but in Brazil and in Florida the natives called the tobacco plant petun, which word the Orientals have changed into tutum. However, the word tobacco prevailed everywhere as the generic term of the plant that the early Americans called the "cure all" and the "holy herb," probably because it seemed to them to be the consoling plant and one fruitful in happy inspirations. The plant also had its place marked in Indian mythology, and all the tribes of red skins who still hunt the buffalo have faithfully preserved for tobacco the cult transmitted to them by their ancestors.

It was in 1560 that Catherine de Medici received from Jean Nicot, the French Ambassador in Portugal, the first lot of tobacco seeds. But curiously enough, though the people of Lisbon took snuff and the inhabitants of Madrid smoked, of the plant for its medicinal qualities; the English, on the contrary, became enthusiastic over the intoxicating odor of the fragrant smoke. As soon as its use spread to all classes the era of persecutions began.

Although the method of cultivation is the same in all countries, the differences that exist in the taste and perfume of tobacco come from the natural richness of the soil and the excellence of the temperature. The best tobacco is grown in Cuba, Mexico, Brazil, and, above all, in the United States, where the soil is fertile and the sky is full of sun. After Cuba, the choicest tobacco comes from Virginia, Borneo, Ceylon, and the Philippine Islands.

In Asia, and principally in Persia, the cultivation is carried on extensively. As for the Turkish tobacco it is extremely aromatic. The best brands come from Roumelia, Syria, Nomadan, Karamania, and the borders of the Persian Gulf. China furnishes a straw yellow tobacco, which is smoked a good deal in England, Japan, Cochin China, India and the Tonkin produce only mediocre varieties. Burmah is more favored. At Manila the cultivation is more and more important; Manila cigars are sent all over the Orient. Holland has valuable lands at Java and Sumatra. The products are sold at Amsterdam, and are used as wrappers for costly cigars.

The United States is the most productive country in the world, and at least half of its production is exported. Mexico and Brazil furnished very aromatic tobaccos; that of Brazil being the most combustible in the world. A great variety of species is also cultivated throughout Europe, but these are generally of very ordinary quality, and are consumed at home. England is the only country where tobacco is not grown. The German tobaccos are mostly cultivated on the banks of the Rhine, at Baden and at Mayence. They are fresh and light, but of poor flavor.

In France, tobacco being a government monopoly, can be grown only by permission. The cultivators have the choice of selling their crops to the government or of exporting them. No Frenchman, other than that supplied by the government, can get permission to grow a stock of tobacco, and that stock cannot exceed twenty pounds. There exist in France nineteen tobacco factories, of which two are in Paris. The ordinary caporal, or, as it is officially called, scaferlati tobacco, is sold at $1.20 a pound, and the superior scaferlati at $1.60 a pound. This tobacco is put up in small packages of different colored papers. This monopoly yields the government nearly $50,000,000 annually.

PACIFIC COAST TRADE.

The San Francisco Call in reviewing the tables of trade of the Pacific Coast for 1892 says, the exports of San Francisco for that year foot up $31,711,499, and the imports, $45,607,750; so that the total movement of trade for the past year was $77,319,449. This indicates a diminished activity in trade. In 1890 the volume was nearly $85,000,000. One cause is probably to be found in the increased movement from Seattle, Tacoma, and Vancouver. The former ports are sending out considerable lumber and flour which used to go from here, while the Canadian seaport is receiving tea which used to come here by the Pacific Mail steamers. Within a few weeks the Canadian steamers have been gaining on the Pacific Mail and O. and O. steamers in passenger business, in consequence of the marked superiority of the table of the former. This is only a fair admission to make. The P. M. and O. and O. have fallen behind in the competition because they fail to serve the public as well as do their rivals of the Canadian line. Our contemporary advocates more vigorous measures to secure the trade of Central and South America, and with Japan, with the latter of which Great Britain, though separated by nearly half the circumference of the globe, does five times the amount of business, though the port of San Francisco is only 4,700 miles away. It is confidently stated that a little energy would transpose these figures. Would not, it may be asked, the exercise of a similar amount of the same quality have quite as good result as the policy of coercion and retaliation which is now being employed towards Canada? —British Columbia Commercial Journal.

THE BAKER GOT EVEN.

This is how the baker got even with the butcher:

"Fine morning," said the baker to the butcher; "been taking a walk?"

"Yes; just came from your shop with a half-dozen loaves of bread."

"Where are they, then?"

"Under my hat; plenty of room for them there."

The baker did not forget this insult, and when the butcher next met him on the street and asked him where he had been, he promptly answered: "Been to your slaughter house. Bought a calf's head."

"Where is it, then?"

"Under my hat," he retorted, and walked away triumphantly.—Helper.

INDIAN TEAS.

According to the Produce Markets Review the bidding for the lower grades of Indian teas continues active, and the bulk of the supply brought forward has been readily taken at quite previous rates, comparatively little selling under $7\frac{3}{4}$ d. If importers, as is generally reported, are not disposed to force their teas forward until the market generally is more active, any material decline in the value of the lower sorts does not appear likely just yet. At the same time, it must not be overlooked that important shipments of Ceylon tea may shortly be expected; and if they should be heavier than at one time anticipated, it is not improbable they may affect the above grades of Indian adversely, but the statistical position of the market is too strong for prices to fall to any extent.

BIG MONEY IN LARD.

The wonderful advances in pork products of the past few months have been very profitable to those who happened to be on the right side of the market. For instance, it is claimed by a writer in the daily press that more than $1,500,000 has been cleared this season by two firms which control the lard market. There are only about seven thousand tierces in Chicago and there are shorts to the extent of twenty times that quantity. It has been well known for a long time that N. K. Fairbank held a controlling interest in the business, but although known to a few, it was not so well authenticated that the Cadahys were equally interested with him in the present deal, but such is the case. Those obstinate rich shorts who are calculating that May is a long way off and they have still a good fund to draw upon for margins, and are relying upon the chapter of accidents to help them out, are perhaps not aware how tightly the market is tied up. Hately Bros. Company sold lard for shipment to Liverpool early in the past week at 60 cents per hundred weight, which nets as high a price as May lard is worth. The firm named, which has acted through the deal as the brokers for the Fairbank Cadahy combine, have already paid over $700,000 of realized profits to their principals, and have as much more to the credit of the syndicate without taking account of the enormous profits still in sight on outstanding unsettled shorts. Charles Wright is one of the heaviest shorts whose line is still out, and the former limited partnership which he had in ribs with the Cadahys will not prevent them from squeezing all his short rib profits out of him if he has committed himself on the short side of lard to a sufficient extent. There are certain other heavy shorts in lard who bore with a very big auger in the wheat pit, and who are still waiting for Providence to put lard on the sides of the rising generation of pigs to help them to fill their short sales of that brilliant of the frying-pan. Many of the still unsettled short sales of lard were bought by the syndicate at about 7 cents per pound, which, with the value of the article now up to 12 cents, leaves the poor bears up a very tall tree.—Chicago Grocer.

THE COFFEE SITUATION.

The N. Y. Journal of Commerce of Monday, in its review of the coffee market for the previous week, says: One of the interesting features of this market is the statistical position which seems to favor the bulls. The quantity of coffee afloat is comparatively small, being, say, 183,000 bags. Last year on the same date the quantity afloat was 320,000 bags, and on Feb. 29 last year the afloats were increased to 425,000 bags. On the 1st of April last year they came up to 5,000,000 bags. The deliveries continue to run large. The world's visible supply on Feb. 1 was 8,058,560 bags, against 3,106,271 a month ago, thus showing a decrease of 47,711 bags or about 20,000 bags more of a decrease than was expected, and further, it is said that the drouth is doing serious damage to growing Rio and Santos crops, and a Santos cable said that yellow fever is very bad there, and as a consequence great difficulty would be experienced in shipping coffee.

COMMON USES FOR SALT.

Concerning the usefulness of salt, there is much to be said. It is one of the most effective remedies for many ills. If used persistently enough it will cure nasal catarrh. A weak brine should be made and snuffed up the nose, allowing it to run down the throat.

One of the most effective remedies known for a sick headache is to place a pinch of salt on the tongue and allow it to dissolve slowly. In about ten minutes it may be followed by a drink of water.

There is nothing better for the relief of tired or weak eyes than to bath them with a strong solution of salt and water, applied as hot as it can be borne.

Salt is most excellent for cleaning the teeth. It hardens the gums and sweetens the breath.

A fresh ink stain on a carpet may be removed by immediately applying a layer of salt. The ink will be absorbed, and when the salt is black it should be removed and another layer applied, repeating the operation until all the ink is removed and the carpet returned to its former pleasing appearance.

Salt enters into the composition of a sure cure for a felon. Take the common rock salt and dry it thoroughly in the oven, pulverize it, and mix with an equal quantity of spirits of turpentine. Keep a rag saturated with the solution applied to the affected part for twenty-four hours, and at the end of that time the felon will have disappeared.

Salt rubbed on the black spots on dishes will remove them, and salt placed over a fresh claret stain on the table linen will assist it to disappear when washed.

GOOD LEMONADE.

"learned a new thing," said a woman recently, "while visiting last week an English friend who is living in this country. We had a small dance one evening of my stay, and my hostess served the most delicious lemonade I ever drank. I spoke of it the next day, and she told me it was made of freshly boiled water, the secret, she said of thoroughly good lemonade. 'I have a regular rule,' she further informed me, 'which insures success if I am making a quart or a gallon. For a quart I take the juice of three lemons, using the rind of one of them. I am careful to peel the rind very thin, getting just the yellow outside; this I cut into pieces and put with the juice and powdered sugar, of which I use two ounces to the quart, in a jug or jar with a cover. When the water is just at the tea point I pour it over the lemon and sugar, cover at once and let it get cold. Try this way once and you will never make it any other way.'—New York Times.

A YEAR'S POSTAL WORK IN CANADA.

The annual report of the Canadian Postmaster-General for 1892 shows that at the close of the year the mail service was established on 1,238 miles of additional railway lines, 510 miles of which was on the Canadian Pacific railway, 16 on the Grand Trunk, 168 on the Intercolonial, and 211 on the Northern Pacific. The actual length of railway in miles over which mails were carried was 13,303. Compared with 1891 this shows an increase of 1,182 miles in the length of railways in operation. The total distance travelled daily was 45,106, and yearly, 14,118,303 miles, an increase over 1891 of 2,827 miles daily and 884,425 yearly. regard to the Atlantic mail service the report says that the contract entered into with the Allans for the weekly mail service between Quebec and Liverpool in the summer and between Halifax and Liverpool in the winter, has been renewed for another year, that is until 24th December, 1893. In the Pacific ocean mail service, it appears that a very large increase has taken place in the amount of correspondence passing between Canada and China and Japan, the number of letters having increased from 61,375 in 1891 to 109,411 in 1892; newspapers from 20,112 to 34,900, and miscellaneous matter from 14,264 to 23,441. The gross postal revenue for the year was $3,542,611.02, showing an increase of $167,723.36 over last year, and the expenditure was $4,205,985.26, an increase of $185,245.32. The large increase in the expenditure is owing to the payment of $53,994.42 to the Canadian Pacific railway for additional mail service, and of $44,673 to the Montreal Ocean Steamship Company for conveyance of mails between Canada and the United Kingdom.

The New Orleans Sugar Bowl says of crop prospects: "The past week has been much more favorable for planting than any for a month past. The temperature having greatly moderated, the sun has warmed up the earth, and cane planting has been resumed. Many have already finished that work. Seed cane is universally good, and in consequence the planting will be large.

On the Havana tobacco market a quieter tone is prevailing inasmuch as the bulk of the American buyers have returned home after having covered their most urgent wants.

San Diego has begun the preparation and shipment of lobsters, fish, etc., to Eastern markets in carload lots, the first carload being sent out last week for Philadelphia. A cannery is to be established at San Diego.

One of the speakers at the recent California Fruit Growers' Convention predicted that five years hence the prune crop of the Santa Clara Valley will reach the amount of two hundred million pounds.

Last year's exports of dried apples from this country amounted to 16,295,938 pounds, against 18,530,093 pounds the preceding year. December shipments were only 1,357,887 pounds for 1892, against 5,510,878 for 1891.

Some Western packers have as yet refrained from following Armour's lead in advancing prices for canned beef. At least two well-known brands may yet be secured at $1.80 for 2-lb. tins from first hands, says N. Y. Commercial Bulletin.

Shipping sugar in bags is becoming more common every year in the West India Islands, and naturally to the serious detriment of business in cooperage stock. A letter from Barbados says the demand for staves, shooks, etc., is reduced to a retail character, and no quotations are given for bulk lots.

The London Grocer of Jan. 28th says:—"Within the last day or two inquiries have sprung up from America for thousands of tons of raw beet to be shipped thither without delay, and the market in consequence has acquired a firmer tone at the close, though no smart advance can be quoted."

Taking into consideration the quantity of sugar heretofore turned out by the largest plantations and advices received from the principal sugar regions of Cuba, the Revista de Agricultura calculates that the decrease in this year's production will amount to about 200,000 tons, as compared with the previous one.

Pickled Siberian salmon, halved, boned and head off, particularly adapted for smoking, is the latest thing in the New York salted fish market. The goods are in "kite"-shaped packages, holding about 1,000 lbs. The fish, in natural order, originally weighed 25 to 40 lbs. each.

After water and wine, tea is perhaps the oldest drink among men. The Chinese annals of the earliest period speak of it, and it was certainly known among them fully 4,000 years ago. At the beginning of the present century, it had made its way nearly over the whole world, being everywhere esteemed and appreciated.

A large plant is to be established at Kalama, Wash., for the purpose of freezing sturgeon. Its capacity will be twenty-four tons of fish every twenty-four hours, and when the machinery is in operation it is expected that the greater part of the sturgeon-packing business on the Columbia will be transferred to that point.

Exports of canned beef from the United States last year amounted to 90,112,775 pounds, against 86,125,190 pounds in 1891. The increase was chiefly in shipments to France, 9,576,751 pounds having gone to that country in 1892, against 5,756,106 pounds the preceding year. Exports to England, however, increased from 61,464,515 pounds to 62,500,988 pounds.

An effort is to be made to put a product of the mesquite bean on the market as a substitute for coffee. During the past two months many grocers in New York have been robbed of their horses and wagons. In some instances the horses have been recovered. The wagons which are painted with the addresses of the grocer are generally left in the streets. It is believed that there is an organized band of three thieves, who have their headquarters in Brooklyn.

Mr. Burden, who recently bought out the store and post office at Moffat, was burned out on Friday night. He was ascending a stair when he fell, and the lamp he was carrying exploded. Burden succeeded in rescuing the mail matter in the post office, but almost everything else was consumed including a trunk with $300 in it. There was no insurance.

New Orleans makes claim to be the leading banana market in this country, and figures are given in proof. In 1892 New Orleans received 4,483,351 bunches of bananas; New York, 3,715,625; Boston, 1,840,519; Philadelphia, 1,818,328. A few years ago Galveston and Tampa set themselves up as banana markets, remarks Grocers' Bulletin, but the figures of 1892 show they were not in it, the business having almost wholly fallen away.

In a report upon the cultivation of Mexican coffee addressed to a department of the Belgian Government, it is stated that "the average cost price of coffee in small plantations of the interior never exceeds 12 piastres per quintal, and exports effected last winter were made at the average rate of 24 piastres. Prices have even reached 27 piastres per quintal, leaving to the middleman an average profit of 13 piastres per quintal, or more than 118 per cent."

There is a bill now before the Legislature which seeks to permit the incorporation of wholesale and retail houses. As the law is at present a wholesale or retail house desiring to form a stock company is compelled to go to New Jersey for their corporate rights. If the bill becomes a law there will be a large number of firms turned into stock companies, and among them there will be several retail grocers.—N. Y. National Grocer.

Cuban advices state that the inadequate railway facilities for transportation of the cane is more keenly felt this year than ever, owing to the fact that the different companies existing on the island have not increased their rolling material in proportion with the progress realized by the sugar industry, and on this account grinding experiences frequent interruptions, especially in the central part of the island, at Colon and neighboring places.

A Wingham writer says the machinery of the Ingles woollen mills has been sold to a Toronto firm, and will be removed to that city in a few days. The above named firm has done an injury, not only to the town, but to the scores of employes who have lost their hard-earned wages owing to the unfairness of their employer. Wingham has been without a woollen mill for a year, and it will be much better to remain so than have one conducted like this was.

A bankrupt merchant at Acadia Mines, N. S., has been sentenced to two months in jail for having wilfully contracted a debt without having at the time a reasonable expectation of being able to pay it. The news will be received with a grim satisfaction in Montreal commercial circles. A long experience in dealing with trade sharpers in the lower provinces had created a general impression that when a Bluenose bankrupt started in to do his creditors out of their due there was nothing to be done but grin and bear it.—Montreal Gazette.

The present high price of pork products will make the cost of the coming cotton crop much larger than the one just harvested. The Southern planters have to purchase most of their pork supplies, and the increase in price will make an important difference in their expense account. With this increase staring them in the face, it is enough that there will be more attention paid to other crops, and that the planter will diversify his labor and will thus be more certain to get profitable returns.

The California "Fruit Grower," says: "The experiment of shipping dried fruits to New York via Panama steamers has proven quite successful. Prunes and apricots, the principal varieties shipped, have arrived in good condition. Raisins have been successfully shipped by steamer via Panama, the only drawback being the heavy local freight demanded to place fruits in San Francisco ready for shipment." These statements according to receivers on this end of the line, are right in line with the facts. The success of the experiment is something more than suggestive.—N. Y. Commercial Bulletin.

The United States Bureau of Statistics report affords the following comparison of imports of dried fruit into the United States during the past two years:

FRESH EGGS.

That the English language is elusive and hard to pin down to a recognized significance is well illustrated by the phrases "fresh eggs" and "strictly fresh eggs." An entirely honest grocer will assure customers that he has fresh eggs when he knows full well that the eggs he has have been packed in straw for weeks; but if he is really an honest grocer he will not give the assurance that they are "strictly fresh" eggs, because the latter phrase has in the trade a meaning widely different from that of the other. Again, the phrase, "strictly fresh eggs," has different meanings at different seasons. It may mean now an egg anywhere from one day to ten days old, but in the spring it means an egg not above two days old.—N. Y. Sun.

THE SUGAR CURE.

Eminent medical authorities, both in this country and in foreign countries, are strongly advocating the use of pure cube sugar as a medicine in many complaints, notably in abdominal catarrh, dyspepsia, chlorosis, scrofula, consumption, sores, ulcers, coughs, general debility, etc. The healing, hygienic effects of loaf sugar, as well as its nutritive properties, as a fattener, has long been known, but scientists go further in advocating its use in many cases, even to the extent of one quarter to one half a pound a day. The Germans make great use of crystalized sugar, called by Americans "rock candy." The English consume even more sugar than the Germans, and their strength is greater. The fear of uric acid or of excess of sugar in the urine is owing more to the effects of glucose than to pure sugar. "To eat more sugar is good for all. To eat much sugar is good for the invalid."—Detroit Herald of Commerce.

COMMISSION MERCHANTS.

The commission merchant is the faithful factor of his consignor or a dishonest pretender. But many who profess to deal on commission, and spread the impression that they are governed by commission merchants' law, avoid responsibility by buying on credit the goods they handle, and then refuse to make returns. The credit arrangement absolves them from the obligation to render an account of sales, and unless a settlement can be forced by due process of law, they may enter upon the profit side the entire proceeds of the transaction, which is not an unusual thing in any of the large cities of the world. The quack commission dealers are the greatest pests of the business. They bring discredit upon it, to the injury of reputable merchants, and action should be taken to secure legislation making it a misdemeanor to use the words "commission merchant" on any sign, card, or billhead by others than those who are commission merchants in fact. This is a matter which calls for prompt and persistent action.—Chicago Produce Trade Reporter.

"I didn't see anything funny in the story that fellow just told. What made you laugh so over it?"

"Do you know who he is?"

"No. Who is he?"

"He's the head of our firm."—Life.

DRY GOODS.

The past week has been quiet in regard to incoming buyers and house trade, but road orders have been coming in steadily, and for nearly every line of spring goods. Buyers will commence to arrive about the 20th, and the millinery openings take place on the 27th and 28th, when the city will be full of buyers. Preparations are being made extensively for their reception.

NOTES

Gordon, Mackay & Co. have for years devoted special attention to lace curtains. This season their stock abounds in novel ideas, but in low and medium priced curtains, they claim to lead the trade, not in style only, but also in value.

John Macdonald & Co. have opened up several cases of United States sundries, including hairpins in fancy wooden cabinets, curling tongs, towel racks, Lindsay's safety pins, garter webs, combs and dress shields. They have also sorted up in fancy dress buttons, leather stitched braid and creton fringes.

Gordon, Mackay & Co. have gone in heavily for negligee shirts, and report an unprecedented rush on these goods, though the trade for white dress shirts shows a handsome increase.

Wyld, Grasett & Darling are showing some very special lines in linens, prints, art muslins and sateens. Certain job lines are being offered at prices which are likely to move them at a rapid rate.

Printed goods of the delaine variety are in strong demand. Gordon, Mackay & Co. show a long range of these goods and one of the marvels of the trade is the perfection which these fine printed fabrics have attained.

W. R. Brock & Co. have just opened up a shipment of muslins in Manchester, Scotch and Swiss makes in checks, stripes, coin spots, figures, etc., also art muslins and Madras draperies. In laces they have restocked in Irish Point, Silk Gimpure, Chantilly, Oriental, American, Valenciennes, Torchons, Tottings, Ewington, Irish Fringes, Real Maltese, Fancy Cotton, etc. In lace curtains their Nottingham and Swiss effects are numerous and varied. Their 3 1-2 yard curtains to retail at eighty cents and $1 are leaders. In embroideries they are showing four job lines to retail at 5, 10, 15, and 25 cents. In veillings they are showing some new effects and colorings. Six cases of ladies' belts have just been opened up. The range is enormous.

John Macdonald & Co. are showing new goods in table covers, quilts, lace curtains, chenille curtains, and 72-inch inch piano felts in all the leading shades. Every line is very well assorted at present. They are also offering a special line of 90 pieces of best brussels at a reduced price. In the silk and dress goods departments they have been making extensive preparations for the millinery openings in the way of staple ribbons, silks, laces, veillings, etc. Their stock is large enough to meet all possible demands, and they anticipate an increased demand for their goods. Their prices are claimed to be closer than in previous seasons, and they are determined this department shall maintain its leading position, especially with regard to the silk trade. They have held prices down to those of previous seasons or lower, in spite of the advance in the prices of silk and other lines in this department.

Alexander & Anderson are showing a full and choice stock of goods in their smallware and haberdashery departments, consisting as follows, viz., dress trimmings, buttons, cashmere and fast black cotton hosiery, cambric, linen and silk handkerchiefs, collars and cuffs. In frillings the newest thing and greatest novelty is the "new feather frilling," which is having a big run. This firm is also showing specially good lines of lisle, taffeta and silk gloves; also the best makes of kid gloves in laced and dome fasteners, ladies' hygiene, Balbriggan and gauze vests; ribbons, plain and fancy, also satin back velvet ribbons, all widths, cambric and Swiss embroideries, flouncings, etc.; black Spanish and Chantilly laces, Oriental, Torchon, Valenciennes, and other fancy cotton laces, veillings, etc.; curtains and curtain nets, and a host of other things too numerous to mention.

LABELLING CANNED GOODS.

The members of the Retail Grocers' and Butchers' Associations do not approve of the bill recently introduced into the Illinois general assembly recommending a law to force all packers of canned goods within jurisdiction of the state to have the year in which the goods were packed appear upon the label of each and every can, and at their last meeting they set forth their objections in a series of resolutions. They insist that such a law would be unjust to the grocer, while it would not materially benefit the consumer. People would want the new pack of goods, and force discredit upon the old stock, thereby causing a loss. At the next regular meeting, Feb. 15, the proposed change in the state garnishment laws will be taken up. Retail grocers in this city have been slow about realizing the importance of this question, but the interest that is being awakened by the association promises to bring about some favorable results. The members of the organization were requested at the meeting to see the members representing their districts, and personally request them to favor the passage of the law. An attempt will also be made to interest the wholesale grocers of Chicago, and a committee appointed for that purpose, consisting of Messrs. Liddell, Preiss, Sullivan, Crawford and Hyde will call on them this week.—American Grocer.

The Best Grocers Make
a point of Keeping it always in Stock.

[As there is often inequality in the prices of the various sellers on this market, owing to differences in buying conditions and other circumstances, and as prices are modified by both quantity and quality, the quotations given below and in our Prices Current necessarily take a wide range.]

TORONTO MARKETS.

TORONTO, Feb. 16, 1893.
GROCERIES.

The general trade is fairly active for the season, and business both with regard to turnover and margin of profits is said to be better than last year at this time. The feature of the market is the advancing tendency in the price of such staples as soaps, teas and canned goods. In the first-named article there has been a further advance of $\frac{1}{2}$ c. a pound on common, while the discount on toilet soaps has been withdrawn altogether. Coffees are quiet on the local market, and those outside have taken a firmer tone during the last few days. The tea market has developed a still stronger tendency for the bull side, and a fair sorting up trade is being done locally. A feature of the canned goods trade are the shipment of tomatoes to both England and the United States. Business in dried fruits is still limited. There is no material change in sugars and refiners seem just as firm in their views. Payments are reported to be fairly satisfactory.

COFFEES.

The outside market developed a little unsteadiness some days ago, but it seems to have recovered again, the position now, seemingly at least, being stronger than ever. This market, however, has failed to respond to that outside, notwithstanding the lowness of stocks of Rio coffees here, and if prices abroad are still maintained local men will probably have to pay an advance of 2c. a pound when they come to replenish. The statistical position is decidedly favorable to the bulls.

DRIED FRUIT.

Only a small trade is being done in fruits. Currants if anything are moving a little better than anything else in the fruit line. The New York market is a little firmer on Valencia raisins. Prunes are unchanged and in light demand. Much the same applies to dates.

RICE AND SPICES.

Rice is meeting with the usual seasonable demand. Some people seem to have gained the impression that certain quotations on tapioca in last week's GROCER applied to the local market. This is a mistake. The article in question was taken from the N. Y. Commercial Bulletin and credited so, and everybody should know that tapioca is quoted at least 5 per cent. higher in Toronto than in New York, the duty, freight, etc., being included in the price of the article on the home market.

Spices are moving fairly well. Ginger is reported to be a little higher again outside.

SUGAR.

The local demand is still somewhat light, although a few car lots are reported to be moving here and there. Prices are being firmly maintained, Canadian refiners refusing to shade. They seem very indifferent as to whether they do business or not just now, holding that, with raws at their present price, it would not pay them to deviate in the least from the quotations. They still profess to have faith in the statistical position of the market.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES.

All syrups are scarce and it seems that more cannot at the moment be obtained. Prices if anything are higher; demand fair. Molasses are in fair request, but devoid of any feature.

TEAS.

The market is firm, and lines that are sold out cannot be replaced except at marked advances. This one local house had demonstrated to it in a practical manner a couple of days ago. Demand at the moment is principally for sorting-up parcels. Japans, Congous, Young Hysons and Ceylons are meeting with a big demand. Japans continue so high that retailers are working into Young Hysons in consequence. Low grade Japans are getting into small compass on the local market, and one man who last year held several thousand parcels claims he has now only about fifty that he can sell under 15c. It is claimed that before we can get these grades of teas here every pound of existing stock will be exhausted. According to outside advices regarding lowest price Indian teas, May delivery; they could not be laid down here at less than 18 $\frac{1}{2}$ c. a pound. The lowest thing in blacks on the same computation would cost 14 $\frac{1}{2}$ c. laid down, while notwithstanding this there were sales made on this market to jobbers at 14c on Monday.

MARKET NOTES.

[Importers, wholesale merchants and manufacturers should send any items intended for this department so that they may reach the head office not later than Wednesday morning. The editor will always welcome such information.]

Evaporated apricots and peaches have advanced 1c per lb.

Mixed pickles (in bulk) have been advanced in price to 55c per gallon.

Smith & Keighley are offering a good low-priced Young Hyson for 14c.

Cotton seed oil has risen from $7 to $20 a ton, owing to the high price and scarcity of lard.

Sloan & Crowther report that the "Royal" brand of lobsters, talls and flats, are selling very rapidly.

The demand for fish during Lent will be readily met by Eby, Blain & Co., who report good stock on hand.

A subscriber to THE GROCER wants to know of a good opening for a store. Can any of our readers help him?

Eby, Blain & Co. are offering special prices and value in French peas, 1 lb. tins, all grades; finest goods on sale.

W. T. Harris, Chatham, N. B., dealer in general merchandise, offers 200 cases canned lobsters, also dried cod of finest quality.

The Produce Markets' Review of London, in referring to the tea market, says there is a marked scarcity of the grades suited for export, Canada having already taken the bulk of the imports of this description.

A special cable to the Globe from London says that Canadian apples of good quality are in demand. Supplies are still short. Prices have gone up 1s. to 1s. 6d.

At card parties and home entertainments serve Burnham's Clam Bouillon with other refreshments. A small cup of it is very refreshing. Served instantly with a little hot water.

Golden finnan haddies are having a large sale. Mr. L. H. Doblin, of Montreal, the agent for this favorite brand, reports the demand to be almost greater than the packers can meet.

Grocers selling Old Mill Brand Tomatoes say they are the finest goods in the market. Messrs W. H. Gillard & Co., of Hamilton, have purchased the entire pack and are selling at almost the price of ordinary goods.

Messrs. W. H. Gillard & Co's travellers are showing samples of "Crescent" smoking tobacco; it's a new line manufactured by the Myrtle Navy makers. The quality and size of the plug will likely prove a taker with the trade.

J. A. Skinner & Co., Toronto and Vancouver, B.C., are offering a new pattern of glassware, any article of which can be sold at retail for 25c. A large glass covered fruit bowl, half gallon pitcher or large cake stand that may be sold at a profit for 25c., is no doubt what they term it—a leader.

Lightbound, Ralston & Co., of Montreal are offering Japan teas at 13 to 15c, special values 20 to 25c; molasses in puncheons or half barrels, Barbadoes, Porto Rico, Marzanilla, sugar house; tomatoes, Lakeport and J. U. Windsor. They report that the market for tomatoes is likely to be higher owing to demand from England.

A Halifax despatch of Tuesday says: The refined sugar market, which has been very firm for some time, took an upward turn yesterday, and prices were advanced by both Halifax refineries, causing quite a commotion in the wholesale grocery trade. Prices of refined sugar both in upper provinces and United States, so the refiners here claim, are higher than they are in Halifax.

BUTTER AND CHEESE.

There is a continued demand for all kinds of butter, fine dairy, large and pound rolls and bakers' stock. Receipts are a little better than a week ago, and if anything the feeling is a little easier, but all coming in is taken. Bakers' butter is scarce and wanted. Large rolls are quoted at 18 to 19c., pound rolls 20 to 21c., fine tubs 20 to 21c., pails 18c.

Cheese keeps moving at firm prices. There is no surplus stock on hand. Job lots of fall make are selling at 12c.

PETROLEUM.

The Petrolia Advertiser, in its weekly report says: The weather of the past week has been of such a varied and inclement kind that drilling has been almost at a standstill. A large number of pumping wells

MY DEAR SIR:-

I think it only fair, to let you know, that at a Dinner party at my house the other day, we had some of your Canned Peas, and that their was a general expression of opinion amongst the eight people present, that these Peas were far superior to any of the French Peas obtainable in Canada.

It is quite evident that the Lakeport Preserving Co. understand their business, and how best to preserve fruit and vegetables.

are also shut down, and the production this month therefore will be considerably lessened. The price of crude remains the same, $1.18½, with about the average business doing.

Following are the latest quotations at Toronto:—Canada refined oil, 14c.; carbon safety, 17½ to 18c.; Canada water white, 20c.; American water white, 25c.; photogene 27c.

COUNTRY PRODUCE.

BEANS—Some improvement in the demand has developed during the week, and there are not so many offering. Hand-picked are moving in small lots at $1.35 to $1.40, while inferior are selling down as low as a $1.

DRIED APPLES—Not much doing and prices are easy; dealers are paying 4¾ to 5c. and selling at 5 to 5½c.

EVAPORATED APPLES—Not many are being asked for and prices are unchanged at 8 to 8½c. for new and old are nominal at 6c.

EGGS—Demand exceeds the supply and prices are higher; in fact at the moment any one who has strictly fresh eggs seems to be able to demand his own price. The ruling quotation for fresh is 30c., but there have been sales of five case lots at 2c. a dozen more than that figure, and that between dealers too. Pickled eggs are quoted at 25c. a dozen.

HONEY—Good white sections would sell well, but the article is very scarce and the market generally is decidedly dull. Dark sections dull at 8 to 10c. In tins buckwheat is quoted at 5c. and clover at 8c.

DRESSED POULTRY—Demand good and receipts light. Prices are firmer all round. Chickens are quoted at 65 to 75c. a pair, ducks 85c. to $1 a pair, turkeys at 14c. a pound, and geese at 10 to 11c. a pound.

POTATOES—With the nearer approach of milder weather and the consequent opening up of the pits, the potato market is becoming somewhat unsettled. Comparatively speaking not many potatoes are coming this way, the higher prices ruling in the cities and towns in the western part of the province attracting the greater part of them that way. The ruling price on the track is 80c., while five to ten bag lots sell at 90c.

ONIONS—Dull and unchanged at $2 to $2.25 per barrel.

HOPS—Dull and easier; good to choice Canadian are quoted at 16½ to 18c. for 1892's and at 13 to 15c for yearlings.

HOGS AND PROVISIONS.

Dressed hogs are quiet and easier. The packers are not inclined to cut up much stuff at present prices and are dropping out of the market, in the hope that values will soon decline sufficiently to suit their views. A few car lots of packers' weights have changed hands during the week at $8.60. Provisions generally are in good demand and firm. The price of lard is particularly strong. Dressed meats are still in liberal supply and prices easy.

BACON—Long clear 10½ to 11c. Smoked backs are 12½ to 13c., bellies 13½c., rolls 10c.

HAMS—In good demand and firm at 13 to 13½c.

LARD—Pure Canadian is 12¼c. in tubs, and 13 to 13½c. in pails. Compound 10½ to 11c.

BARREL PORK—U. S. heavy mess is $22.50. Canadian short cut is $20 to $22. Canadian heavy mess $20 to $21.

DRESSED MEATS—Beef forees are 4½ to 5½c., hindquarters 7 to 8¼c., veal 6½ to 8c., mutton 7 to 8c., lamb 8c. to 8½c.

THE HOG SUPPLY.

According to the returns of the Department of Agriculture, the number of hogs on hand January 1 was 46,094,807. During the past 10 years the number of hogs reported packed in the United States annually has averaged 35.24 per cent. of the reported supply. Accepting this as a basis, it would indicate a supply for packing of about 16,250,000. In 1885 the supply was 45,142,657, and 1886 was 46,092,043. The packing returns for the year ending March 1, 1886, were 16,600,000 hogs, and for the year ending March 1, 1887, were 16,920,000 hogs. The packing returns for the year ending March 1, 1892, were 21,286,000 hogs.

GREEN FRUIT.

The market seems to be only awaiting milder weather to assume real activity. At least this is what might be inferred from the fact that a mild day gives quite an impetus

CANNED GOODS.

TORONTO.

The situation in canned goods continues to gather strength and people are beginning to display much more confidence in the future of the market. In consequence of this there is a much larger demand for tomatoes. During the week there have been some substantial shipments of tomatoes to both Great Britain and the United States, and the price in both instances is said to have been equal to 83c. net cash f.o.b. This has had the effect of putting prices up on this market at least 5c. a dozen and leaving the market in a very healthy shape. The local demand for tomatoes is very strong, and men long in the business say they never saw it better in this particular commodity. Other vegetables such as corn and peas are also in good demand. The increased activity in canned fruits previously noted continues, and there does not appear to be any surplus stocks on hand. The feature in this line of goods is the strength of peaches. The season for canned salmon is just commencing and the movement is about as usual at this time. Lobsters are also beginning to feel the approach of the lenten season. Sardines are in fair demand but the market is devoid of feature.

MARKETS—Continued

to business. Taken on the whole a fairly good seasonable trade is being done. Oranges are in good demand and prices are stiffening. Seville marmalade oranges are expected next week. In lemons, good stock sells freely at firm prices, but there is still a good deal of "chilled" stock on this market that can be got at almost any price. Bananas are scarce and firm. There is not much doing in pine apples but there is a demand for all that is coming in. There are very few Malaga grapes on the market and cranberries are a little scarce. In apples there is a little outside trade doing, but there is practically no local demand. We quote as follows: Valencia oranges at $4 to $4.50 per case, Jamaicas $2.50 to $2.75 per box, Floridas $3 to $3.25 per box, Mandarines $2.50 to $2.75 per box, Tangerines $3.25 to $3.50 per box, Palermos $2.50 per box, lemons $3.75 to $4, bananas $1.75 to $2.50, pineapples 20 to 30c., Malaga grapes $8 to $9, fancy cranberries $10 per barrel, common $1 per basket, apples $1.00 to $1.75 per barrel.

SEEDS

The excitement among buyers regarding red clover continues, and prices here have forced 25 to 50c. higher, $9 to $9.25 a bushel being paid for prime to choice quality, and offerings are limited at these figures. Timothy is sympathising to some extent with clover, $1.50 to $5.50 being paid. At the moment trade in this article is nearly all speculative, but in another 30 days the price may be expected to get nearer the actual value, as buying for consumption will be due about that time. Alsike is steady at $5.50 to $6.60, the outside price having been paid for best samples. The bulk of the red clover and Alsike seems to be almost marketed.

FISH AND OYSTERS.

The Lenten season in fish is opening up well, trade being quite active. At the moment white fish and haddock is the most inquired after. Compared with a year ago fish is on an average $\frac{1}{2}$ c. a pound dearer. Small fish are very scarce. This applies both to salt and fresh water. Although oysters are again lower the consumption is still small, a good many people seemingly having forgotten that there is such an article on the market. We quote: $7\frac{1}{2}$ c. for trout and ordinary whitefish, $7\frac{1}{2}$ c. for Manitoba whitefish, $4\frac{1}{2}$ c. per lb. or \$2 to \$2.25 per hundred for Lake herring, 10c. for mackerel, 13c. for B.C. frozen salmon, and 17c. for fresh ditto, 5 to 7c. for smelts, 5 to $5\frac{1}{2}$ c. for haddock, 4 to $4\frac{1}{2}$ c. for market cod, 7c. for steak cod, 4c. for flounders, $6\frac{1}{2}$ c. for skinned and boned codfish, \$6 for Labrador herring, \$5 to \$5.50 for shore herring, 11 to $12\frac{1}{2}$ c. for Digby herring, 4c. for boneless fish, 7 to 8c. for boneless cod, 6c. for pike, 8c. for yellow pickerel, oysters, \$1.85 for stds., and \$2.25 selects.

HIDES, SKINS, WOOL, TALLOW.

SKINS—Sheepskins are still marked by their scarceness, and prices are unchanged at $1.20 to $1.40. Calfskins are in good demand, but there are not yet many coming in. Prices unchanged at 5 to 7c.

HIDES—Steady and unchanged at $4\frac{1}{2}$ c. for No. 1 green cows' and $5\frac{1}{2}$ c. for cured. Car lots of cured changed hands at $5\frac{1}{2}$ c.

TALLOW—Scarce and $\frac{1}{2}$ c. higher; dealers are paying $6\frac{1}{2}$ c. and selling at 7c.

WOOL—There is very little doing this week in wool and prices are without change. Fleece and blanket wools are scarce. Pulled wools quiet and unchanged, dealers paying 21c. and selling at 22c. Fleece is quoted at 18 to 19c., and pulled at 21 to 22c. for supers and at 26 to 27c. for extra.

MONTREAL MARKETS.

MONTREAL, Feb., 16, 1893.

GROCERIES.

The grocery trade during the past week has been disappointing, buyers holding back under the impression that prices on the leading staples will secede, but the expectations seem to point to the reverse. Teas are firm, but quiet. Coffees and spices hold firm and there is no material change in sugar, syrups or molasses. Other lines are unchanged.

SUGARS.

The market for refined keeps very steady, with sales of granulated at 4 5-8c. at the refineries and at 4 to 4 1-8c. for choice bright yellows, down to 3 1-2c. for lowest grades, which is about the price of the raw product. Raw sugar is firm in New York and London and at sources of supply.

SYRUPS.

Syrups are moving slowly, but Barbadoes molasses is in very fair demand at 34c. for 25-barrel lots.

TEAS.

The tea market has shown more activity during the past week. Another lot of low grade Japans has been sold for Chicago account at 12 to 12 1-2c., and several small lots have been moved for local account. Blacks are receiving more attention, especially those worth from 21 to 16c. A letter to a broker here from London says that there are no China teas in that market under 6d.

Latest London mails reported a quiet market for China teas. Prices were quoted firm, and the smallest purchases leave a visible impression on the stock of clean sweet common grades; a drop of 1-4d. per pound would induce a large business, but the teas for price all seem to have left importers' hands. In Foochow teas some good to medium Panyongs have realized 8 to 11d., with fair flavory Soo Moos, Padraes, Saayunes and Panyongs at 6 3-4d. to 7 1-2d., principally on account or in anticipation of Canadian orders, while common to good common were in some request at 5 3-4 to 6 1-2d., but with little on offer in first hands.

COFFEE AND SPICES.

The coffee market remains firm and stocks are limited. A lot of Maracaibo sold at 20 1-2c., and we quote:—Jamaica, 18 1-2 to 20c.; Maracaibo, 20 to 22c.; Rio, 18 1-2 to 21c.; Java, 25 to 27c.; and Mocha, 25 to 28c. Jobbing lots are selling at higher prices.

Spices are firm, sales of black pepper transpiring at 7 1-4 to 7 1-2c. Cloves are firm at 8 1-2 to 9c., and nutmegs at 47 1-2c. to $1, as to size.

DRIED FRUIT.

The market has been very quiet during the week, the only sales reported in Valencias being a lot of 500 boxes seconds at 4 1-2c., while prime are held at 4 7-8 to 5c. Valencia layers are firm at 6 to 6 1-4c. Currants are quiet at 5 to 6c., according to quantity.

NUTS.

There is no change in nuts, and we quote:—Pecans, 11 to 12 1-2c.; Terragona almonds, 10 1-2c.; Grenoble walnuts 13 1-2 to 14 1-2c.; filberts, 10 to 10 1-2c.; Ivica, 14 1-2c.; Brazil, 15c.; marbots, 12 1-2c.; cocoa nuts, $3.50 to $4.50 per bag of 100 for old, new $5 to $5.50.

FRUIT.

The green fruit market is quiet and unchanged. We quote the various lines as follows:—Lemons Messina $3.30 to $3.50 prime $2.75 to $3.00 common $1.75 to $2.25. Oranges Fancy Florida $3.25 to $3.50 Valencias $4.00 to $4.25 Messina $2.50 to $2.75 and Jamaica in barrels $5.00 to $6.00 as to quality.

FISH.

The movement in fish, particularly in fresh is active and prices are firm. Herrings are in good supply. Car lots being offered as low as \$3.50. We quote as follows: Haddock 4c., cod 3 to $3\frac{1}{2}$ c., steak cod $4\frac{1}{2}$ to 5c., lake trout 7c., white fish 7 to $7\frac{1}{2}$ c., pickerel or dore 8c.; dried cod, \$5.50; No. 1 green cod, \$6 to \$6; B. C. salmon, \$13 per brl.; Labrador salmon, \$13 to \$14; No. 2 mackerel, \$14 per brl.; do. \$7 per half brl.; Labrador herring, \$6.00 to \$4.00 per brl.; C.B. and N. S. herring, \$4.75 to \$5 per brl.; tommy cods, \$2.50 to \$2.75 per brl.; fresh herring, \$1.85 to \$2. per hundred; haddies, $7\frac{1}{2}$ to 10c.; Yarmouth bloaters, \$1.25 to \$1.50; common do., \$1; fresh frozen mackerel, 10 to 10 $\frac{1}{2}$ c. each; No. 1 lake trout, \$4.75 to \$5 per keg.

APPLES.

The apple market is unchanged and prices are nominal at $1.75 to $2.50 per barrel according to quality.

POTATOES.

The market remains steady with prices firm. Sales of car lots are noted at 95c. to $1, but receipts are fewer than they were, and this may have some effect on prices.

DRESSED HOGS.

The market rules easy, sales of car-lots transpiring at $8.75, which is a drop of 10c. EGGS.

The egg market is easier under milder weather and freer receipts at 25 to 30c. according to quality.

BUTTER AND CHEESE.

The butter market continues firm but business is purely confined to the local trade. Choice fall creamery, 23 to 24c.; creamery seconds, 21 to 22c.; Townships dairy, 21 to 23c.; Morrisburg and Brockville, 20 to 22c.; Kamouraska stock, 19 to 20c.; Western rolls, $18\frac{1}{2}$ to 20c.

The position in cheese is unaltered, and whether the feeling elsewhere furnishes any alteration or not it will have little or no effect with holders here considering the small stocks that they carry. It is said that some stock at present held in the West would be parted with at a concession, but it is likely that if a buyer made an offer full figures would be exacted. The public cable quotation is unchanged, and we quote 11 $\frac{1}{2}$ c. as the nominal idea here.

TRADE SALES.

The following stocks of goods were sold at Suckling's: Miller & Co., furs, etc., Toronto, $1800, sold to John Riach of Hamilton at 23c. on the dollar; Conger & Co., boots and shoes, Pictou, $1580, sold to J. A. Clapp of Gananoque at 52c. on the dollar; A. H. Mellish, stationery and fancy goods, Brantford, in two lots, No. 1 $4800, No. 2 $1900, sold to Mrs. Mellish at 34. and 33c. on the dollar respectively.

It was not until nearly a century after its discovery that tobacco came into general use in Europe. The United States now produces about one-half of the entire world's supply of the weed nicotinean.

FLOUR AND FEED.

TORONTO.

There is not much demand for flour but prices are firm and higher. Straigt roller has sold up to $3.45, Toronto freights during the week. Extra is quoted 25c higher at $3.10, and supplies are short of demand. The water mills are still frozen up. This is causing a scarcity of feed and prices are somewhat higher in consequence. Shorts touched as high as $17, Toronto freights, during the week. Most of the small output of bran is being taken by the farmers and prices for the commodity are about $1 higher.

FLOUR.—City millers' and dealers' prices are: Manitoba patents, $4.60; strong bakers' $4 to $4.10; white wheat patents, $4.35; straight roller, $3.40; low grades, per bag, $1.00 to $1.25; Ontario family $3.35 to $3.85.

Car prices are: Toronto freights—Manitoba patents, $4.30 to $4.50; Manitoba strong bakers' $3.75 to $4.25; Ontario patents, $3.25 to $3.50; straight roller, $3.40 to $3.45; extra, $3.10; low grades, per bag, $1.10 to $1.25.

MEAL.—Oatmeal is $4.00. Cornmeal is $3.50.

FEED.—Bran is $15, shorts is $17 mixed feed $22, feeding corn 57 to 58c., oats 34 to 35c.

HAY.—Baled timothy, demand is good and supply fair at $9.25 to $9.50.

STRAW.—Plentiful and demand limited, at $5.50 to $6.

MONTREAL.

The flour market has been very quiet and even the local trade has been below its usual volume. Strong bakers have a wide range from $4 to $4.25, and advices from the west state that millers are shipping flour to Liverpool and Glasgow at low figures. We quote:—Winter wheat $4 to $4.25; spring patents $3.25 to $4.50; straight rollers $3.55 to $3.75; extra $3.20 to $3.25; superfine $2.60 to $2.90; city strong bakers' $4.15; strong bakers' $3.90 to $4.00.

CANARY SEED.

Canary seed, which in former years was handled exclusively by the druggists, has now passed into the hands of grocers, and is regarded as one of the staples of the trade, though its identity is somewhat lost because of the reason if its being packed in a mixed form, under the label of bird food, etc. Many houses in the trade prepare their own mixtures, while others prefer to secure supplies from those who make a specialty of putting up this line of goods, and who are prepared to execute orders at a very narrow margin of profit above the actual cost of the seed and packing. During the past six or eight months these mixtures have contained a much smaller percentage of canary seed than was formerly the case, this being due to the fact that the price in the wholesale market, or from importers' hands, has advanced over one hundred per cent. during that time, while the course of other varieties which usually forms the mixtures, such as hemp, rape and millet, has been in a contrary direction, so to even up the cost of the whole, those who prepare the goods for market and consumption are sure to see that a liberal quantity of the lower stock is included in the pound packages that are put up for "family use." The appreciation of the price of canary is directly due to the short crops in all producing countries, and speculative influences. When it was discovered last year that the chief source of supply, Turkey, promised a very small yield, due no doubt to the previous low prices which discouraged the planting, scheme was set on foot to concentrate the holdings, and so successfully was this carried out, that a prominent operator here became possessor of a very considerable portion of the world's stocks. Purchases were liberally made in the Smyrna market. London was called upon to furnish additional quantities, and the goods were picked up here from various importers, all these operations being carried on at steadily advancing values, until the bulk of the available supply was brought under the control of one concern. The stock in this market to-day is variously estimated at 10,000 to 15,000 bags. The principal holder is endeavoring to sustain the value at 43-4c. but there are numerous small lots distributed through the trade, and from these outside hands supplies are being dealt out at 45-8. The market, however, is in a condition which makes the purchase of small lots much easier than selections of quantities. There is a feeling that higher prices may possibly rule later on, and with the knowledge that additional round parcels can only be secured from one source, there is a natural hesitancy on the part of sellers to entertain orders upon the present basis of values that would naturally lessen their holdings. The London market has been above us for some time past, which clearly indicates that no surplus is held there, the latest cables received from that source showing the equivalent of 5c. to import. In Smyrna, it is said, the total quantity held may possibly reach 8,000 bags, but from this amount must be deducted the quantity necessary for next year's sowings. Advices from Marseilles report the stocks of Barbarry as exhausted. For some time past doubts as to the available supply of this description, and its effect upon the market, have been entertained, but the reports forwarded of the statistical position are now accepted as conclusive evidence that no relief can be expected from the product of that section of the world. Taking, therefore, the situation as a whole, the indications are certainly of the strongest character, while many of the trade do not hesitate to express the belief that a positive scarcity of the article will be witnessed before the next crop can be harvested and is available for market purposes.—N. Y. Commercial Bulletin.

PURE GOLD EMPLOYEE'S AT HOME.

Pleasant, profitable and entertaining was the annual "At Home" of the employees of the Pure Gold Manufacturing Co., held Friday night last at Webb's. The arrangement was recherche, there being something to entertain every taste. There was a programme of vocal and instrumental music to please the lovers of music. Then at the banqueting table there was a feast of reason and a flow of soul. Dancing concluded what was the most successful "At Home" ever held by the employees of the Pure Gold Manufacturing Co. There were about 150 persons present. Mr. J. F. Ramsay, manager of the company, presided, and Messrs. T. Christy, A. C. W. Soper and T. R. Crowley composed the committee to whose efforts the success of the entertainment was largely due.

HOW CLAY PIPES ARE MADE.

The common clay pipe, like the needle, has to undergo a large number of operations before completion, nearly all of which are conducted without mechanical aid.

The clay, after being levigated, mixed and kneaded to a proper consistency, is rolled out roughly into shape. This the moulder takes, and, placing the head or bowl end in a special support, thrusts a long needle into the centre of the tail of the roll, thus piercing the stem.

Thus pierced, and still containing the needle, the roll is placed in the mold, which is of steel, and made in two parts, and the latter is closed and put in the press. Then a compressor is pushed into the open part of the mold to form the bowl.

Thus the clay is compressed.

The press is now opened, the pipe taken from the mold and passed on to finishers, who scrape out all mold seams, pass another needle into the stem, stamp any letters that are to appear, and send on to the drying room.

Here, when sufficiently hardened, those which have to be polished are polished and all are sent forward to other workmen, who examine them, reject the defective ones, and proceed to put the perfect ones in the saggars ready for the furnaces, which are similar to those in potteries, and where they are exposed for five or six hours.

They are subsequently dipped into a mixture to remove the porosity of clay. This is a mere outline of what is needed for a common clay pipe; the operations in fancy patterns are more complicated.

Sugar, in both a literal and metaphorical sense, is at the bottom of the Hawaiian revolution, says Interstate Grocer. In a literal sense because with annexation the Sandwich Islands will be entitled to the sugar bounty. In a metaphorical sense, because there is sugar in it for the professional politician, and most of all to the few American capitalists—Spreckels, et al—who own and work the sugar plantations. The natives are "not in it." Freedom and native rights are as sounding brass and tinkling cymbals compared with the ringing music of the mighty dollar to the needy politician and the sugar monopolist. But who pays the piper?

EVOLUTION OF FOOD PRODUCTS.

Many of our active citizens will remember the beginning of the canning industry by the late Caleb S. Malthy, of this city, who put up oysters in tins for his western trade, and then added the canning of peaches to his business. Now meats, fish, fruits and vegetables are put up for market in this convenient form, and the armies and navies of Christendom are largely supplied with food by American Cannerymen.

The evolution in breadstuffs is equally remarkable. The dainty snowflakes, spicy gingerbreads, and the manifold palatable dainties of the bakers are a delight to the eyes, and are wonderfully convenient tidbits for the family cupboard.

Behold, also, how American chemists have transformed the crude oil of cotton seed into articles pure, wholesome and nutritious, and how the component parts of cereals have been separated and treated for the sustenance and delight of mankind.

Even the clam has been drawn from its saline bed that its nerve-quickenings may be bottled for the merchant's convenience and his customers' enjoyment.—New Haven Palladium.

THE HOP COMBINE BROKEN.

About two or three months ago an agreement or combine was entered into between the growers and dealers in Prince Edward county, not to sell under a certain price, in the expectation of forcing up prices upon brewers, says Montreal Trade Bulletin. It turned out, however, that the brewers of this city, at any rate, were too well supplied to be forced into paying the terms demanded by the combine, and country dealers, becoming convinced of this, availed themselves of the opportunity of unloading their yearlings at figures which induced dealers and brewers here to take hold. Consequently, while growers were holding their 1892 growth at figures which were altogether too high for this market, the combine dealers had a splendid opening for getting rid of their 1891 growth, and they used it for all it was worth. This is only one of a number of instances, which illustrates the untrustworthiness of certain members who are almost always found in syndicates and combines, and who enter into agreements with the intention of evading them, in order to serve their own turn, to the disadvantage of the majority who adhere to their promises. As soon as the growers discovered the treachery of the dealers, the former at once offered their hops direct to dealers and brewers in this city at 2c. to 3c. per lb. below the combine prices, and have managed to dispose of them at from 19c. to 20c., a few really fancy parcels having brought 21c. and 22c., but dealers are offered very fine samples of western hops at 20c.

DRIED FRUITS.

The chief feature of the week has been the very distinct improvement which has taken place in the demand for Sultanas, which has resulted in a large business, at hardening prices, says London Produce Markets' Review, of Jan. 21. For some time past this fruit has appeared to be under a cloud, and the business has not been of an altogether satisfactory nature since the high rates which prevailed during the season of 1890. For several weeks quotations then ranged from 72s. to 90s., according to quality, a state of matters which it is not difficult to imagine, had a serious effect upon consumption, both for household and for manufacturing purposes. The housewife practically ceased the use of fruit which appeared to be so absurdly dear, and the manufacturer naturally turned to currants as a substitute in the making of cakes. The more recent run of events has proved that when the consumption is upset and unhinged in this way, it requires a period of low prices to restore the fruit to the position it previously held, and it would appear that the stage has been reached when the moderate quotations of the recent past are bringing about this much to be desired result. Fair quality fruit can be retailed with a moderate profit at 3d., and really good quality with a still more satisfactory profit at 4d. per lb.; and it cannot be too frequently pointed out that the grocers may do much to assist the trade, if they will keep these facts prominently before consumers. It would not be consistent to expect them to adopt this plan unless it was clear to them that they were benefiting themselves as well as the trade generally, but now that good profits can be obtained at what appears to consumers a low price, it is clear that benefit must accrue to all concerned.

The market for currants is quiet, and prices are slightly easier for the common qualities. The statistical position is considered a strong one, and unless there should be any breakdown in the French demand, it seems unlikely that a decline in values can take place. Merchants in Greece are sanguine that there will be some improvement later on, and hold to their fruit with unusual firmness. The stock in that country is much smaller than last year, and whether the hoped for improvement takes place or not, it is tolerably clear that the low prices last spring and summer are not likely to recur. The following is a report from one of the largest currant merchants, and is dated Patras, Jan. 10. In attempting to gauge the feeling of the Patras market, it is only fair to admit that reports from some other merchants are of a more optimistic nature:

"Our last report was under date of 10th ultimo. Very little business has been transacted during the past month owing to various causes, such as tempestuous and rainy weather, which has prevailed without intermission during the last 20 days, and has prevented all shipments on the coast; the Christmas and New Year holy days, and lastly the high pretensions of holders of currants, who, encouraged by the news from France, where a fair demand has sprung up, are asking prices which render business very difficult for the present. As will be seen from note at foot, total shipments to date amount to over 91,000 tons; about 2,000 tons are in course of shipment, so that only 26,000 tons of currants remain on this side, against about 40,000 tons at the same date last year, and it must be borne in mind that of these not more than 20,000 will be available for shipment during the next five months, as many holders and speculators are determined to keep back a portion of their stocks until the early summer months, against a recurrence of the 'Peronosporos,' which caused such extensive damage to the vineyards last year, cutting off fully 40,000 tons of currants, and which the late copious rainfall has rendered more of a probability than a possibility. Unfortunately it has been observed in other countries that this malady rarely dies out in one year, especially when the means and appliances for combating it are as limited as they are with us. Transactions during the month have been carried out on the basis of 15s. 6d. to 16s. 6d. c.i.f. cases United Kingdom for good Provincials and Pyrgos according to quality; 15s. 6d. to 16s. c.i.f. barrels New York for American staple, and 17s. to 18s. c.i.f. for finer qualities. With France a fair amount of business has been combined at 34f. to 34.50f. c.i.f. for Rouen, Bordeaux and Marseilles. A better demand now prevails in all markets of consumption, nothing having been obtainable to-day at under 16s. 6d. c.i.f. United Kingdom, for good average Provincials in cases, 16s. c.i.f. American staple in barrels, and 35.50f. c.i.f. Rouen for French staple. C.i.f. quotations would have been much higher had it not been for the late sudden rise in the exchange. To-day there are not many sellers at above rates, the tendency being for a further rise, as the demand from France is improving daily.

LIABILITY OF DIRECTORS.

Judge Mathieu has rendered judgment in the superior court dismissing the action with costs taken by J. C. Mullen against William Owens and Alexander Ramsay. The defendants were charged with having mismanaged the affairs of the McLaren Manufacturing Company, and the judge decided against the pretension of the plaintiff, holding that the defendants had done everything in their power to make the company a success, and that the plaintiff had no right to recover from them the amount of his stock.

THE WALTER BAKER & CO'S COCOA AND CHOCOLATE PAVILION, WORLD'S COLUMBIAN EXHIBITION.

CO-OPERATIVE BUYING AMONG RETAILERS.

From a New York contemporary we learn that the Retail grocers of New York City do not take kindly to the limited system of selling goods adopted by so many manufacturers. They feel that the arrangements entered into between the jobbers and manufacturers discriminate against the retailer who is compelled to foot the bill for the profits of the other two concerns. It seems that the jobbers have endeavored to get manufacturers to refuse to sell to large retail grocers, even when the latter purchase goods to the amount specified by the manufacturers as being entitled to a certain discount or rebate. Many of the manufacturers arrange their discounts on a sliding scale beginning with a certain minimum purchase, and increasing the discounts as the purchase becomes larger. A number of the retailers of New York City have formed a union which they call the Retail Grocers' Exchange, which does the buying for the whole number. In this way they can go to the manufacturer and buy in as large quantities as can a jobber, and they want to get the same discounts and rebates. This naturally cuts into the trade of the jobber who does what he can to hinder such transactions.

In addition to this Retail Grocers' Exchange there is a regular grocers' union in New York City, the members of which also are against the limited system of selling goods. It is said that the union is going to fight against the system with all its power, which is considerable as manifested in the warfare which they waged against charging for berry crates, and also for the system of selling vegetables by weight instead of measure. The union expects to make itself felt in a legislative way, and will ask for the enforcement of laws against trusts and combines.

NO MORE WASTE TOBACCO.

Three Frenchmen who claim to be briar pipe manufacturers, and say they have London premises at High street, Stratford, E., have taken out a patent for a pipe which they contend will keep the tobacco dry until it is consumed. The stem is fitted with a perforated screwed chimney which communicates through a small duct with a channel in the mouthpiece. The chimney is fitted internally with a small ball which serves to close the communication with the mouthpiece. Inside the stem, too, there is a small tubular chamber perforated at both ends, and containing a second ball, which, when the smoke is drawn through the pipe, is shifted by the force of the aspiration sufficiently to allow free passage to the smoke, while the ball contained in the chimney is, by such aspiration, caused to hermetically close the latter. On blowing through the pipe, the action is reversed, the ball contained in the tubular chimney closing the front aperture, while the ball in the chimney is released from the mouth of the duct communicating with the channel in the mouthpiece, thus allowing the moisture from the mouth to escape through the chimney. By this double action, the patentees claim that the object of their invention is easily and perfectly attained, as the tobacco is protected from the moisture of the mouth and so kept dry until consumed.—London Cigar and Tobacco World.

HOW TO REACH SUCCESS.

Why do some men succeed in business and some fail? queries San Francisco Grocer. There are many things that go to make success or failure. We will dismiss the discussion of lack of capital or of experience, without which no man should go into any sort of enterprise, and suppose that a man has learned the primary details of his business, and has a fair amount of capital to start in with. We will also suppose that he has found a suitable field for his operations. How shall he succeed? We will at this time lay down one rule: He must attend to his own business. A beginner had better always set out at a moderate pace—not get too far from shore at first. He must then give personal attention to every detail of his business. He must be very careful that he knows what is paid for everything that comes into his store; that he has not paid for it more than the fair market price, and that his competitor is not able to undersell him. He must know that every bill of goods sold is to bring a fair margin of profit into his till, and he must pay special attention to the matter of giving credit. Where a bad debt is made, first cost, cost of handling and profit, all go, and set a man far back on his road toward success. It takes many good sales to make up for the one bad one.

Retail merchants too often do not pay sufficient attention to small details. The wholesaler makes his profits in large transactions, where the margin of profit is so small that the slightest mistake may put the balance on the wrong side of the ledger. The retailer makes such small sales that he will run behind unless he carefully figures in freight, drayage, rent, help, interest and risks as part of what he adds to the price paid the wholesaler. He must also be careful that he gets full weight for his money. The jobber sells by the package and need not be watchful of these matters, but the retailer has to break bulk, and if the package weighs fifty pounds, with a tare of ten pounds allowed, while there are only thirty-five pounds net weight of goods, the retailer will make nothing on that. He must see that he gets the fair weight, and then see that he does not give more than fair weight. A cracker here, or a handful of coffee there may seem to make no difference, but in a year the loss means all the difference between success and failure.

The merchant who does not give personal and unremitting attention to all these details, will not succeed.

DRYING CODFISH.

Instead of the old fashioned way of drying codfish by spreading them on skids or flakes, machinery is now employed. Through the centre of a fixed iron cylinder runs a large iron pipe, and from the centre to the circumference shell are galvanized iron flakes, something like a gridiron. These are movable, and are fixed, each forming a radius in the cylinder. The machine is then started, and flies around at 160 revolutions a minute. The door of the cylinder is then opened, and as each flake is taken out another is ready, and raw fish are put in its place. When the last flake has been removed and the last green one put in its place, the machine starts again at 160 revolutions a minute. The fish just taken out are piled for two or three days to let the pickle work out. These receive two hours more of centrifugal force, and the work is done. Like many of the rapid modern processes, this new method of drying codfish impairs the flavor of the product as compared to the original and more tardy way of curing in the sun.

HOW COD LIVER OIL IS MADE.

The process of manufacturing cod liver oil at Portugal Cove, Newfoundland, is as follows: It requires as a rule 2 1-2 gallons of liver to produce a gallon of oil. The livers are first carefully washed, and must then be "cooked" at once. For this process they are first put into a large tin boiler, which is plunged into a large iron boiler filled with hot water, the water not being allowed to touch the livers, which are thus gently steamed till a quantity of oil is floating on the surface. This is dipped out and filtered through bags of moleskin. The last filtration leaves the oil perfectly transparent, and without any unpleasant taste or smell. The oil is exported in 60 gallon casks.—Ex.

THE ORANGE CROP.

The statements that the orange crop will be short this year are not well founded, according to the opinion of dealers, says N.Y. Retail Grocers' Advocate. Last year's Florida crop of oranges aggregated 4,000,000 boxes, while California shipped 600,000 boxes. This season the probabilities are that Florida will ship between 3,000,000 and 3,500,000 boxes, but the California output will be swelled to 1,000,000 boxes, and may be 1,500,000; so there is no scarcity, and it can be said that the quality of the Florida fruit is as fine as it has ever been.

THE EAST INDIAN JUTE TRADE.

Calcutta advices report the proceedings at a recent meeting of the Calcutta Baled Jute Association. The attention of the numerous shippers present was drawn to a proposal emanating from native balers to the effect that shippers, brokers and balers should undertake not to buy or sell jute for delivery more than two months beyond the date of sales. Also that transactions in new crop jute should not begin earlier than July 1 of each year. These proposals, which are based on the regulations of the old Balers' Association, were favorably received, and another meeting was called to discuss them. The jute season of 1892-3, it is added, will long be remembered for the severe losses suffered by all engaged in the trade, but the lesson seems to have been a beneficial one, to judge by the prosecution of remedial measures.

SPRECKELS IN IT.

Facts have leaked out which show clearly that the intrigues which resulted in the overthrow of the Hawaiian Government has been going on for several months, and that Claus Spreckles was a chief mover. A man of affairs, who is intimately acquainted with Hawaiian matters, said to a contemporary:

"Spreckles made the islands the greatest sugar producing district in the world, and he has always felt a proprietary interest in them. Twelve years ago, when he was in the height of his power, he dictated what he wanted, and Kalakaua obeyed.

"When the new queen came into power Spreckles at once began his old devices to secure control of her, as he had controlled Kalakaua. Spreckles made the queen advances of money until she is $152,000 in his debt.

"When the McKinley bill removed the bonus of two cents per pound on Hawaiian sugar all the profit was swept away. It costs now about $15 more to produce a ton of sugar in Hawaii than it can be sold for.

"Spreckles is the heaviest stockholder in the Hawaiian Commercial Co., which controls practically all the sugar produced on the islands. The company lost over $300,000 last year. The stock fell in a few months from $60 down to $1 per share. Nine-tenths of the stock was sold for assessments, and was absorbed by Spreckles.

"Now here comes the milk in the cocoa-nut of the revolution. If the United States can be induced to annex the islands, this Hawaiian Commercial Co. will jump from 10 cents to $15 a share within a week, and every sugar planter on the islands will see an immediate increase of 50 per cent. in the value of his cane fields and sugar mills.

"The moment annexation goes into effect Hawaii becomes a vital part of this country, and every pound of sugar produced on the islands receives two cents bounty. This amounts to the fat sum of $40 per ton, and represents a good profit to the planters."

U. S. HOP CROP.

The New York Homestead publishes a complete report of the United States hop crop, based upon special reports from 3,678 plantations in the whole country, of which 2,494 yards are in the State of New York. The aggregate results show an increase of rather less than 3,000 acres in the 1892 area, as compared with 1891, and an increased yield for the whole country of 2,620 bales. California shows a heavier crop last year than in 1891, the average yield being 8 1-4 bales per acre, as compared with 6 3-4 bales the year before. The Washington crop has decreased, and in New York State, while the total number of bales was larger than in 1891, their weight was lighter, thus reducing the average yield in New York State by about nine pounds actual weight per acre. The Wisconsin crop of 1891 was a total failure, but last year that state harvested 4,877 bales. The total 1892 crop of the country is given at 217,942 bales, as compared with 215,327 bales in 1891.

INTERESTING LABOR STATISTICS.

Mr. Robert Giffen, C. B., the eminent statistician, has given some interesting testimony before the English labor commission. He estimates that during the years 1890 and 1891, a sum of £2,592,000 was lost to the wage-earners of the country by strikes, without reckoning the loss caused by diversion of trade into new channels. His statements on the subject of trades unionism are rather surprising. He says that there are in England some 13,000,000 workpeople—by which expression he apparently means artisans of one kind and another—and 7,000,000 adult male laborers, while "the fullest report of trade unions shows a membership of 871,000 only." According to this not one worker in twenty is a unionist. As for profit-sharing, Mr. Griffin "would not discourage it" but declines to regard the system as the admirable device it is often represented, because "there is always in every trade a portion of capital earning small profit or no profit, and the employers owning that capital must and do give the same remuneration as other employers. Hours of labor, he thinks, have a tendency to diminish, and something very nearly approaching to an eight-hour day will come, he believes, of itself, but reduction of production will mean "reduction of wages of those producing." With regard to alien immigration, he pointed out that England has an enormous interest in emigration, and "anything she did"—with reference to the prohibition of immigrants—"might be turned against itself."

BAKER & CO. AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

One of the features at the coming World's Fair will be the building erected for the special use of Walter Baker & Co., of Dorchester, Mass., chocolate manufacturers. It is in style of architecture different from anything on the grounds and will in all likelihood attract general attention. Two main entrances through arched vestibules lead from the ground floor into a large hall to be used as a cafe, in which Breakfast Cocoa will be served by young ladies dressed in the costume of Liotard's "La Belle Chocolatiere." Small tables and chairs will be provided for the convenience of guests. Hot and cold chocolate soda will also be served from counters in this room. The great variety of cocoa and chocolate preparations manufactured by Walter Baker & Co. will be exhibited in show cases made especially for the purpose.

A broad and monumental flight of stairs, forming one of the principal motifs of the composition, will lead to the second storey, part of which will be enclosed, forming another cafe, which will be served through dumb waiters from the downstairs department, and part of which is arranged in terraces, covered with awnings, to be used in connection with the cafe. The cocoa and chocolate manufacturing establishment of Walter Baker & Co., at Dorchester, Mass., is not only the oldest, but the largest of its kind on this continent. The mills belonging to this house are situated on the Neponset River, partly in the Dorchester district of Boston and partly in the town of Milton. The plant comprises five large mills—having a floor space of about 315,000 square feet, over seven acres—equipped with all the latest and most improved machinery.

BUSINESS CHANGES.

SALES MADE OR PENDING.

The general stock of D. A. McLean, of McIntyre, is to be sold Feb. 17.

Barrous Bros, general merchants, Olinda, have been succeeded by — Squires.

Balemam & Rowe, grocers, Belleville, have dissolved, Charles Rowe continuing.

W. S. Heffernon & Co., general merchants, Emerson, are removing to Winnipeg.

The tobacco stock of Simeon Simonson of Quebec has been sold at 71 cents on the dollar.

Bowes & McWilliams, wholesale fruits, Montreal, have dissolved, the former continuing.

The boot and shoe stock of D. F. Armstrong, Kingston, is to be sold by auction 21st inst.

W. A. Bradshaw & Co., soap manufacturers of this city, have dissolved. W. Bradshaw continues.

John Tisdale, grocer, Omemee, has sold out his tinware stock to W. J. McGill and is going out of business.

The firm name of S. Reynolds & Co, general merchants of Algoma mills, has been changed to Reynold Bros. & Co.

Thorburn Sons, limited, general store, Broadview, Man., are succeeding A.G. Thornburn and are applying for incorporation.

Emeric F Lariviere and Philias Lariviere have been registered proprietors of the grocery firm of Lariviere & Co., Montreal.

Slawson & Co., dairy supplies and cheese, Ingersoll, have sold out to C. W. Riley, who will continue the business under the old firms name.

Charles, William and Arthur Robert Osborne have been registered proprietors of the wholesale wine firm of John Osborne Son & Co. of Montreal.

DIFFICULTIES, ASSIGNMENTS, COMPROMISES.

Jackson & Co, groceries, crockery, etc, Whitby, have obtained an extension.

General store-keeping has evidently not proved profitable to J. W. Tausley of Sevcaburg, Ont, for he has assigned.

J. C. Honey, general store, Castleton, has assigned to John A. Vandervort and a meeting of creditors is called for Saturday.

J. A. McCauley, general merchant, Portage la Prairie, has assigned. W. Walley of Saltcoats, Man., in a similar line of business has done likewise.

Drabek & Co., cigar manufacturers, Colborne street, this city have been unable to make both financial ends meet, and have assigned to E. R. C. Clarkson.

John McCanmear, butcher, Kingston, is offering to compromise at 25c. on the dollar. Michael Sullivan of Port Arthur, another knight of the knife and cleaver, has assigned to John Fisher.

Thirteen cents on the dollar is small indeed to ask your creditors to accept in lieu of the stipulated one hundred, but this is all however that Lenour & Frere, boot and shoe dealers of Montreal are offering their creditors.

FIRES.

Christopher Cook, general merchant, McGregor, has been burned out; partially insured.

The seed and produce stock of John M. Bothwell, grocer Barrie, has been damaged by water; partially insured.

DEATHS.

Warren Doane, general store and shipbuilder, Barrington, Nova Scotia.

CALIFORNIA OLIVES.

The New York Sun thus talks about the California olive: We will tell the California olive growers that they can find a profitable market for their product in this part of the country, if they will send us good pickled olives, a relishable article of agreeable flavor and wholesome, as well approved as those that were once raised at the Catholic missions in Southern California. We have heard of California olives that are harsh, gross-grained, badly-pickled, hard of digestion, and uninviting. Such olives cannot be marketed here, even if they are cheap. We are particular about our olives, and we know good ones at sight and through smell as well as by taste. There is no deceiving the proficient olive eater. The olive is a superior dainty, over which a man of taste can dote.

The California olive growers have sent word here that they are about to ship a hundred barrels of pickled olives from San Diego to the New York market, and they say that they are the kind of olives which were grown at San Diego two centuries ago by the Spanish priests. Well, we wait for them. We shall look at them when they are here, and we may try them if they suit the eye. If they are tip-top we can promise the San Diego growers that there will be a big demand for them here, a steady demand. If they are first-rate, we believe New York City alone will take all of ten thousand barrels of them every year. They must not be too dear for common folks, or for our Italian, Spanish, German, French and Israelitish fellow citizens. The Israelites of ancient times were great olive raisers, and Moses himself said: "Thou shalt have olive trees throughout all thy coasts."

A great many of the California fruit raisers complain of the disfavor with which their fruits, including oranges, grapes, apricots and peaches are received in New York. The reason of this disfavor is that, along with some pretty good fruits, they send us more that are poor. They can secure our favor by taking the pains to do so; and we can assure them that, when they have secured it, they will all grow rich. We consume prodigious quantities of fruit in New York, and we would rather buy that which is home grown than that imported from foreign shores.

A WORD TO FRUIT GROWERS.

The present season may be both a busy and important one to the owners of orchards, who in the past have seen their fruit trees, especially those of the plum variety, slowly destroyed by the disease known as black-knot. This troublesome growth is easily seen in winter, when the leaves have been well shaken off the tree. The wise arboriculturist will now occupy himself for a few hours in his orchard and will carefully cut out the knots wherever they have appeared. The little work of excision will amply repay him, as the knots now neglected will ruin his crop for the coming season. He will also find to his interest to top-dress the soil round his fruit trees, and in the very earliest spring he will carefully prune and thin out the branches of his too-crowded trees. —Critic.

Tastes as well as the apparel of individuals seem to be subject to the law of change, although of course to a lesser degree. There is honey for instance. In times past it was a staple article of diet. Now, at least as far as this part of the country is concerned, it is seldom seen on the table, and the local jobbers and the retailers state that consumers only ask for it when it is wanted for medicinal purposes. Large stocks of honey are being held here, and, as the result of the small demand, the market is demoralized, and it does not require much of an effort to persuade the holder to shade prices when it is a question of securing an order or not. Honey is one of the most healthy of articles of food, and it is rather surprising that at a time when choice butter is scarce and dear that more of it is not consumed. Perhaps the public taste has merely been allowed to forget its cunning in regard to honey, and only needs a reminder or a little coaxing in order to be got back again. Why not try what a little judicious pushing would do?

In the United States the conditions are practically the opposite of what they are in this country regarding honey. True, the demand is not what might altogether be called active, but prices are firm, and there is said to be less honey on the American market than at any time since 1877. The scarcity is principally through the Eastern, Western and Southern States, but San Francisco papers state that stocks out that way are light, and that there is very little to come forward until the new season opens. So far it seems that the prospects for the next crop are favorable.

In this age of adulteration it is not strange that honey should not escape getting a little foreign substance into it occasionally. There may be more than one way of adding the spurious, but one of the most common is by mixing sugar syrup. But it is not done by the hand of the beekeeper. He knows that bees, like himself, will not go a mile for food when it can be obtained near at hand, so he places the sugar syrup temptingly near the hives. The bees accomplish the rest. The matter has now been taken in hand by the Ontario Beekeepers' Association. It will endeavor to secure legislation prohibiting the practice of feeding sugar syrup to bees, and representatives of the Association were in Ottawa last week with this end in view.

Apropos of the above comes the finding of a statistician who has been investigating the industrial habits of the bee. To collect a pound of clover honey 62,000 clover blossoms need to be deprived of their nectar. To do this 62,000 blossoms must be visited by an aggregate of 3,370,000 bees; in other words, to collect his pound of honey one bee must make 3,750,000 trips from and to the hive. As bees are known to fly two or three miles in quest of blossoms, it is clear that a single pound of honey may represent millions of miles of travel. It would be interesting to know how much the honey-manufacturing properties of the bee is increased when the raw material obtained from the sugar refinery is kept near by.

The grocer whose recommendations can be relied upon has obtained a grip on his customers that will assure his ultimate success in business. And, in order to get into a position where he can be able to do this he must not only secure his stock from a source which he can depend upon, but furthermore, he must take pains to preserve the quality of the same after it is in his store. Here is where a good many err, and when they recommend an article upon the assumption that it is all right because it was so when they placed it in stock, they occasionally afterwards learn that they were mistaken. There is the article of lard, for instance. Keep it in a cool place, and its original freshness can be depended upon for a reasonable time. Leave it where the heat from the furnace or stove can reach it, or where the rays of the sun can search it out, and it is soon all wrong. It becomes rancid, if in tin packages especially so, and where you might have gained a customer you have perhaps lost, or at all events offended one. And even this you cannot afford to do.

The man who succeeds in almost any business in this day of keen competition needs to be live, wide-awake, capable, and a close observer at least of all that has a bearing on his particular line of trade. In probably no other branch of trade are these qualifications more necessary than in the grocery business. In it the competition is keener, and the consequent demands for shrewdness, in both buying and selling, greater. In it prices fluctuate more frequently, and hence the greater need for close observation. It is little wonder then that the average grocer has so little time to devote to public affairs, or that his appearance at council boards or in the halls of legislation are so rare. The man who has succeeded as a grocer must of necessity have been a shrewd and capable business man. No one has buttered his bread. He has had to do that himself. And it is more of this class of men that we want to manage public business, be it local, provincial, or, in a still wider sense, Dominion. It is because there has not been enough of the kind of business qualification that is bred in the grocery store in the administration of public affairs that we find so much legislation that is detrimental rather than beneficial to the business interests of the country.

Australian cheese is becoming quite a competitor for the favor of the English public, and the home producer is receiving a good deal of encouragement from some of the largest British importers. The Secretary of State of Agriculture in Victoria has received a letter from a leading Glasgow firm containing some valuable hints regarding the sorts best suited to the English and Scotch markets. The New Zealand cheeses, inasmuch as they very closely resemble the English product, are most in demand, and from figures quoted by the firm, the profits attending this branch of the trade appear to be not inconsiderable. It seems the cheeses which find chief favor in Great Britain are those of Cheddar shape and pale in color, two cheeses to the case. The impression created this season by the colonial article is likely to ensure for it higher prices in future.

It is becoming a practice in the United States for the trade to get its supply of sugar in bags, each bag containing a uniform 100 pounds. The advantage of the bag over the barrel is that it is not only handled easier, but there is less figuring by shippers, receiving clerks, etc. And time saved is money saved. It is said that lately the American Sugar Refining Company has been compelled to fill most of its orders with sugar packed in bags instead of in barrels.

A report has recently been issued in England giving the total imports of butter and margarine into Great Britain last year. Of butter, there were imported 2, 182,999 cwt, valued at £11,965,284, compared with 2,135,607 cwt. and £11,591,181 respectively in 1891. Last year the imports of margarine were 1,303,350 cwt., valued at £3,712,884, against 1,235,430 cwts., and £3,558,203 respectively in 1891. The margarine imports were therefore more than half the entire quantity of butter imported, although in value the proportion is only about one third. Margarine is rapidly growing as an article of diet in Great Britain, and a large number of factories for the production of this article are being opened up. In England there are already eleven factories, four of which are in London. Scotland has ten and Ireland two. Among the factories in England one is from Denmark and another from France, the regulations imposed by these countries regarding the manufacture of margarine have driven them across the channel. The most interesting feature in the report to Canadians is the fact that the imports of butter from the Dominion show a steady advance. The efforts to improve the make of Canadian butter is evidently having its effect. The quantity of butter received from the States was less than for the previous year, and the same applies to the imports from Denmark, Sweden and Holland. The decline in the last instance was marked, and has been steadily going on for the last three years. Germany, on the other hand, shows a steady increase. Lately, as noticed in THE GROCER, a week or so ago, Australia and New Zealand have been going more extensively into butter making. Extensive pasture lands are being opened up, creameries are being established on the Danish plan, and the result is seen in the growing consumption in England of butter from the Antipodes.

Heretofore in England the majesty of the law has not stipulated the maximum percentage of water that the butter maker shall allow to remain in his product. Now the sanitary authorities have taken the matter in hand and they are instituting proceedings throughout the kingdom where excesses are found under the operation of the Food and Drugs Act. One of the offenders caught was a Limerick farmer, whose butter was found to contain 22 1-2 per cent. of water, and he was heavily fined. There is no statutory law defining the quantity of water permissible in butter, but the Society of Analysts have fixed it at 15 per cent.

The annual reports of the Montreal and Toronto Boards of Trade are to hand. The former is 252 pages and the latter 137 pages. Both are well gotten up and both contain much valuable information. The feature of the report of the Toronto Board of Trade is the statistical returns relative to the trade and commerce of the city, while that of the Montreal board makes a historical sketch of its own city a specialty. An interesting feature in this connection is a series of maps of the city, beginning with the first ever produced, and finishing up with Goad's map of 1891. From a perusal of the reports one gets an idea of the important part these two boards play in the shaping of the trade and commerce of the country.

The prospect of an easy life is the incentive that drives numbers of young men into business. Adaptability is often not taken into consideration at all. Store-keeping is one of the most exacting of callings. The hours are long, and the work fatiguing, while the remuneration, in comparison with the amount of mental and physical energy spent, often less than in other callings. To crown all, the competition is keener, and the ratio of failures to successes is greater. In some of the young men on the farms realized this there would be less haste to forsake farm for store life, freedom for, at least, a mild form of slavery. Some one has estimated that the percentage of success in farming is ninety above that of merchants. This may be an extreme estimate, but one thing is certain: The young man who remains on the farm will, as a rule, be worth more when his footsteps begin to turn down the hill of life than he who goes into store-keeping. Of course, adaptability should be considered when choosing farming as well as any other occupation, and if a young man is specially fitted for mercantile life, why by all means let him follow it.

Delaware papers indicate that the peach crop in that state will be limited next season. Some go even so far as to say that it will be a total failure. One orchard of 800 trees which, under ordinary fair circumstances, would yield a crop worth at least $1,500 will be practically worthless, all the fruit it is expected to bear this year having been sold for $8.

LONG HOURS IN COUNTRY STORES.

A clerk in a country store writes THE GROCER relative to early closing. "The country stores," he says, "seem to have fallen into the custom of keeping open every evening a great deal later than is really necessary. A great many people in the country seem to do all their work at home, and then start for the store, only to find when they get there that the storekeeper or clerk, as the case may be, has just put on the shutters, or is just about to do so. Of course, as a courteous business man, without the least grumbling, the storekeeper does up a large bill of goods for the customer. Now, business men do not at all depreciate these valuable orders whenever they come, should it be early or late. But I would propose that all country stores have a stated hour for closing. That would imply that all people would do their shopping earlier, thereby giving customer, storekeeper and clerk an opportunity of keeping the body in health and the mind in ease."

The subject touched upon by our correspondent is not a new one by any means. It has been more or less agitated in this country, and at the moment it is agitating the minds of English merchants and clerks, the interest being so great that public meetings are being held to discuss the matter. But long business hours is an evil, and it will bear being threshed and re-threshed just as long as it exists. Somebody has yet to arise who will champion the cause of long hours. Even those who are the most persistent in keeping their stores open till far into the night acknowledge that it does not pay. Their reason for doing so is that others do so. This is evidence of the power of influence. And if one keeps open because another does, why not turn things around, and see if one would not close because the other did? It seems logical, but there are few that have the courage to attempt it. Those who have taken the bold step have not as a rule gone without their reward.

There is no sound reason why stores should be kept open later than 7 o'clock at the outside, even on Saturday night. The present late hour system was not born of necessity; it is the offspring of long years of habit on the part of customers. And before the desideratum of early closing can be enjoyed to its full this habit will have to be cured. The task of doing this devolves largely upon the storekeeper himself. Clergymen may preach, speakers harangue, and newspapers write till doomsday, unless the merchant does his part. And that part is to educate his customers to the necessity of making their purchases early in the day. The public is not an exacting autocrat. It only wants to be educated to the fact that the habit into which it has fallen is burdensome to the merchant, to his clerk, and to his family, and the millennium of early closing will have arrived. The merchant who then keeps his store open till late at night will do so because he loveth slavery better than freedom or long hours better than short.

Fortunately for its advocates, the people are already in the first book on the principles of early closing. During the summer months stores here and there are closed at stated hours in the evening and others one afternoon during each week. In the country where, if anything, the necessity for long hours is less, the early closing movement seems to be making slower progress than in the cities, and larger towns. Legislative enactments will never bring about the desired state of affairs. It has been tried and failed. Neither merchant nor customer will be coerced. But either is open to persuasion and can, by the exercise of tact, be even led. What is wanted as the first step in the direction of early closing is a mutual understanding between storekeepers. This secured, the greatest obstacle in the way of early closing has been surmounted.

The period when the discussion of this topic may be said to be seasonable is approaching, and THE GROCER invites pointed and short letters from its readers on the subject.

INDIAN AND CEYLON TEAS.

Within the memory of almost the youngest of us China was practically a synonym for tea. But there now seems to be a danger of its losing the application.

For some years the Chinese have been neglecting to pay proper attention to the cultivation of the tea plant; not only have they been sparing in the use of fertilizers but their methods of cultivation, of curing and of transportation are about as antiquated as the tea industry itself. They are now reaping the whirlwind. But not only has there been decadence from within, but there has arisen competition from without. And the influence of the latter is probably more inimical to the tea industry of China than the other causes combined. This particular competition has arisen in India and Ceylon. There the shrub has been domiciled, and by the aid of modern scientific methods it has so thrived as to completely outstrip its Chinese competitor. It has taken the Indian grower a good many years of perseverance and hard work to attain to his present enviable position in the market of the world. And he seems likely to hold it.

The consumption of tea in Great Britain, probably stimulated by the low price prevailing, was enormous last year, reaching the total of 207,000,000 pounds, the largest yet attained. The Indian and Ceylon teas appropriated all the increase, the former increasing from 99,000,000 pounds in 1891 to 109,000,000 pounds in 1892, and the latter from 51,000,000 pounds to 64,000,000 pounds. On the other hand the tea of China consumed on the British market fell from 52,000,000 pounds in 1891 to 34,000,000 in 1892, and that too in a year when the process of substituting the strong teas of India and Ceylon for the weak tea of China was perhaps never more actively in force. Out of every 100 pounds of tea used 53 pounds were grown in India, 31 in Ceylon and only 16 pounds in China.

On the Toronto market much the same state of affairs prevail, the Chinese "is not in it." It is now the proud boast of the British Empire that enough tea is produced within her borders to supply her wants.

MEETINGS OF BOARDS OF TRADE.

A Board of Trade has been organized at Palmerston with these officers: A. Mayor, president; E. K. Scott, vice-president; W. Falconer, secretary, and C. R. Knight, treasurer, together with a council of eight as an advisory board.

At the annual meeting of the Collingwood Board of Trade these were elected officers for the ensuing year: President, J. J. Long; vice-president, George Moberly; treasurer, E. R. Carpenter; secretary, F. W. Churchill; councillors, Chas. Cameron, H. Y. Telfer, W. A. Copeland, J. Wilson, W. J. Frame, James Guilfoyle, W. T. Toner. The president in his annual address referred to the proposition for the creation of a new county; to the necessity for improvements to the harbor, and to the desirability of lessening restrictions regarding fishing nets.

The Sherbrooke Board of Trade has elected the following officers: President, R. W. Heneker; vice-president A. W. Olivier; secretary-treasurer, H. E. MacFarlane; council, N. T. Dussault, H. Samuel, W. Blue, L. H. Guay, D. McManamay, S. W. Jenckes, W. S. Dresser, J. S. Mitchell, J. A. le Baron and W. E. Paton. On motion of G. A. le Baron, seconded by E. G. Farwell, the secretary was instructed to correspond with the McCormack Harvesting Machine Company, of Chicago, in regard to the establishment of their proposed Canadian works at Sherbrooke.

DISCUSRING BILLY CALLAHAN.

SCENE: Yonge street, corner Queen.
 Characters: Patsy Free and Mickey Doolan. Time, 6.30 p.m. Saturday.

"Oi say, Mickey, me bye, did ye rade the illigent letther that was in THE GROCER the other week that wuz written by your frind, Billy Callahan, on the Grocers' At Home, held in Harry Wibb's atin' house?"

"Shure, that I have, and an illigent letther it wuz. He's a witty bye, is Billy, and he knows how to write a letther as well as any bye in Toronty. But I thot the spalpeen moight of spint his toime more profitably by giving THE GROCER information that was important insted of causing an ill-feeling after such an illigent toime."

"Why, what would ye have the bye tell them, Patsy?"

"Why didn't the spalpeen wroite and tell them about the man who was going around the city selling them maple sugar as wasn't maple sugar; that red-headed nagur as said when they told him it wuz too soon for maple sugar, that they had a few days foine weather and they tapped a few trees and that was how he got the pure maple sugar so soon, and he sold them lots of it—foine deep-colored rich maple sugar roight from Oxford county, and the innocent unsuspecting honest groshers bought lots of it. But, shure there wuz as much maple sugar in it as there is in your hat, Mickey, me bye, for it wuz old brown sugar colored with vanilla, shure. And there is a foine looking gentleman as is looking for him on Queen street. Don't ye moind, Mickey, me bye, he wants to say a few gintle wurds to him first toime he sees him. You can tell him that if he has any respect for his hide he'd better not show himself around there."

"Shure, they ought to know it wasn't maple sugar widout Billy telling them."

"Ah, Patsy, me bye, shure they are so innocent that they would believe ye if ye were to tell them that chalk was cheese. Shure, the bye moight of told them lots of things as would of been beneficial. He could have tould them about that cheap brid as was confiscated; that Inspector Awde took from the frind of the laboring man."

"Ah, shure, it's Inspector Awde as ought to have told them that, not Billy. Sure, Mickey, I could weep for the big-hearted man as lost the brid."

"Shure, you are roight; Inspector Awde ought to have tould them, but he didn't. I suppose he was too busy wondering how he would distribute it among the poor. I wonder how it is, me bye, that they niver published the name of the bighearted frind of the laboring man in the paper so as the people—the poor unsuspecting people—would see how much he loved them. And, Patsy, me bye, I wonder how it is that thim Knights of Labor min and mechanics, who pretend to help their fellowmin and see that they are not down-trodden and oppressed, and imposed upon, will let their families deal with and support min loike that, who are taking the brid out of their fellowmin's mouths."

"Arrah, Mickey, don't you see it's all selfishness. Thim very min will go and buy where they get things the cheapest, even if they know the man isn't making enough out of it to pay his help two dollars a week. They don't care if the help should starve or the man not make enough to pay his rint as long as they are satisfied; that is how they love one another, don't you see. They niver seem to see or think that by supporting a man loike that they are undoing the very thing they pretend to do. The man who buys from a man as cuts as foine that he can't afford to pay his hands enough to live on is a thief, and a robber, and an unprincipled, unscrupulous nagur. Shure, thim men who belong to these things will buy where they get things cheapest, and if they don't do it themselves they let their families do it, which is just the same thing or worse, because they hold themselves behind their families, and they don't care whether their clerks are able to pay for a meal, or the boss bursts up the next minit. If he was to advertise things at less than they knew he could buy them for, they would go and buy from him and by so doing encourage him to fail. They don't care who pays the piper so long as they get what they want. Thim he moight have tould thim that they were big fools for allowing themselves to be charged about five dollars for a garnishee when they can get them in the States for fifty cents. Do ye oind that, now. If ye don't call that green, me name ain't Patsy Free. If we could get a garnishee here for fifty cints and garnishee a man for five dollars, we would all be rich. Shure, there wouldn't be a dead beat left in the blessed town. It's disgraceful the way some laws are in this country. There is Mrs. Mulcahy. She owes Mrs. Muldoon $52 for this last year, and she can't get a cent of it, but the wretch passes by the door with a quart pail of beer sixteen times a day. Do ye moind that, now, and Mrs. Muldoon says she can swear to it every wurr, and whin she asks them for any money they laugh at her, because they know they must pay five dollars for a garnishee before they could do anything towards getting it. And they never have twenty-five dollars coming to them. Shure, the provincial secretary should do something to amend this law, because it only breeds dead beats and surrounds them with a law of protection. This is one of the aisy roads to drunkenness and other excesses. If they once were made to feel that you could garnishee their wages for five dollars and get a garnishee for fifty cents, they would then know that they would have to pay up or lose their job, and by paying up for the necessaries of life they would not have so much to spare for drink, which they have to pay cash for or go without. Thim there is another thing Billy moight have done. He moight have tould the wholesale men that little story I tould ye about the baking powder, do ye moind. Don't ye remimber me telling ye about the man who asked me if I could sell baking powder, and Oi said Oi guessed Oi could if it was good, and he said it was as good as Pure Gold or Cleveland's. The spalpeen told me he sold it for either of them. If his customers asked for Pure Gold he gave them that, and if they asked him for Cleveland's he gave them that. He tould me it cost him 10 cents, and Oi could sell it from 12 to 30 cents. He generally got 30 cents a pound for it. He tould me that the man who sold it to him wanted to get a good pushing man to drive round and call on customers. What do you think of that, the miserable nagur; wanting me to sell my honor and go round and poison people with phosphate, for it won't digest. But, Mickey, Oi didn't forget the lisson me ould mother tould me, when Oi was a bye, so Oi left him to do his own dirty wurk. The miserable spalpeen, it's ducked he ought to be. Thim he moight have tould them about the rise in soap. He knew so much about the grocers, why didn't he know that. Ah, shure, some of them knew about that widout him telling them. Well, then, why didn't he tell them how to cure the wrongs of Oireland by taking one of Murphy's pills that will cure all the ills that Oireland has. Then he might have tould these men that are grumbling about the price of soap that it's an ill wind that blows nobody good, for it's bringing out a lot of ould stock that has been lying in the cellar for years. Well, good-bye, Mickey, I must be after going home."

(Exit Mickey and Patsy.)

NOT CURRANTS, BUT RAISINS.

"What are sold in the groceries as dried currants are not currants at all, but raisins," says A. F. Jephson, in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. "The name commonly applied arose from a misapprehension. The grapes from which these raisins are produced are grown in great quantities in Greece, and, being mostly exported from Corinth, were originally called 'Corinths.' The resemblance to the ordinary black currant, both in size and appearance, led to the belief that they were dried currants, and the name was changed to correspond to the popular idea. The grapes are small, not larger than peas, and the bunches are only two or three inches long, but the fruit is so sweet that when packed it adheres together in a solid mass, glued with the sugar that exudes from the grapes. The mistake about the nature of the fruit is so general and so firmly grounded that most of the grocers believe they are selling currants instead of raisins, and laugh at anyone who tells them better."

CHEMISTRY AND FOOD.

Brilliant achievements of chemistry during the present century have led many to look forward hopefully to the time when man, drawing his food from the atmosphere by the witchery of chemistry, shall pass his life in happy, careless ease. But such dreams are vain, and yet chemistry is doubtless destined to play a much larger part in the food supply problem. But, as Mr. Justus Gaule has recently pointed out in a German periodical, chemistry nor any other science will ever invent an apparatus for the production of food-substance as perfect as that which nature has herself created and placed at man's disposal.

But the consideration of the question whether nature's apparatus might not be superseded, has served to teach the laws by which she works. When we shall be able to produce food artificially, we shall get a clearer comprehension of those laws. To quote the above mentioned writer: "Then shall we learn to comprehend and appreciate the significance of the vegetable kingdom as the wondrous and perfect chemico-physical laboratory of Nature. Then, too, we may learn to wait on and facilitate her operations and increase her productive capacity to the measure of our growing needs.

The question of the future will, therefore, be not whether chemistry will replace agriculture as the producer of the necessary food supply for the numerically expanding race: It will be whether the agriculturists will learn so much from chemistry that they will cease to follow their pursuit on the old, unintelligent routine method, and engage in it a branch of chemical science. Agriculture is not the antithesis to industry; it, too, is an industry resting on a scientific foundation, with laboratories and factories built by Nature's hands, with power drawn neither from water nor from coal, but direct from the sun.

When agriculture shall be thus pursued, it will not fail to respond to the growing needs of the ever increasing race. The elementary constituents of our food substances are not destroyed by their consumption. Nothing is lost, but simply transformed in its transition through the several compensating stages of the endless circle of organic life. Increase of food consumption involves increase of animal refuse. The raw material for the production of fresh food substances in Nature's cunning workshops. The animal and vegetable kingdoms compensate each other; where the former increases her demands, it at the same time provides an increased supply of the necessary raw material. The supply, therefore, cannot fall short, unless the order of transition proceeds too slowly.

If at any time existing animal life shall require for its daily sustenance more than the daily average of food products in the vegetable kingdom, it will then become a problem of agricultural chemistry to increase the productiveness of the latter up to the required standard. To do this, it will be necessary to increase the capital productive stock; that is, the number of vegetable cells in which the vital chemical processes are carried on. The power which sets and maintains the machinery in motion is light, of which the supply is unlimited. All that is necessary is to enlarge and increase the number of the surfaces that absorb this light, and that is, within very wide limits, possible.

Until recently it was not possible to base this confidence on scientific grounds. While all the elements were in abundant supply, one of them—nitrogen—appeared intractable in the free state, and exists in limited supply only in the combinations in which plants take it up. Recent discoveries have, however, shown that certain plants, especially the pulses, or some fungus which attaches itself to their roots, have the capacity of drawing nitrogen direct from the atmosphere and of combining it in suitable forms for future plant-food supply.—Commercial Enquirer.

CANNED GOODS AND DEATH.

In view of the abundance of the important questions which are just now engaging the attention of the more active members of the trade, and of the associations which are happily arising on all sides to champion the interests of the trade in organized and effective fashion, it seems almost cruel to suggest an additional subject for consideration, and yet we cannot resist the conviction that there is a matter which should be taken up seriously, though not necessarily in a hurry. Reference has been made to it in these columns previously, but observation of the direction in which events are tending, backed by communications from influential quarters, leads us to believe that the question might wisely be pressed to the front, with a view to its thorough investigation, and the clear elucidation of the facts. We refer to the reported deaths from time to time through the eating of canned goods. Some friends of our acquaintance seem disposed to "jump upon" the newspapers for giving prominence to these cases, but it must be remembered that the newspapers have to make the best of the news which comes to their hands, and they cannot be expected to show regard for the feelings of any particular class of traders or the public. A discussion into how far newspapers are justified in making headings and matter generally as sensational as possible, that is to say, as effective as possible, would lead us in very deep water, and would, we imagine, serve no good or useful purpose, because that is not the way in which this question can be advantageously tackled. What is wanted is that some one person or organization should be charged with the duty of going into this question in the most searching manner, with a view to preparing the report or pamphlet which shall substantiate the real facts. It is not a task to be lightly undertaken, because the question is one of considerable magnitude, and the investigation would have to be painstaking and complete. No doubt there are cases where death has followed more or less directly upon the eating of canned goods; but the surrounding circumstances of the cases—the previous condition of the deceased persons, their habits of life, the nature and amount of the food taken, the length of time to which the goods had been exposed to the air, and so on—are too often left in greater or less obscurity, with the result that an impression more or less erroneous is made upon the public mind, and even the retailer, perhaps, is made uneasy with respect to ordering his usual consignments of the improperly condemned goods. People gorge themselves, and suffer; people eat things which are not suited to them, and suffer; people, after repeated warnings, expose canned goods to the open air in a way which must seriously affect them, and suffer. But the canned goods are not to blame; and this is the point which the historian of the trade, or its historians, must make plain.

An eminent authority lays it down that nobody using the senses which God has given him need eat any canned food which is otherwise than wholesome, any more than he need eat tainted butcher's meat or fish which has had too much sun and too little water. The truth of this assertion, and the additional fact of the general wholesomeness of canned goods, are quite forcibly demonstrated by even the most meagre statistics. We believe we are under the mark if we say that two millions of persons daily eat canned food of one sort or another in the United Kingdom. What, in comparison with this huge figure, are the few cases of reported death, most of which on investigation are found to be groundless. What other class of food is there which comes off so lightly if only the truth were told? It is very doubtful whether more deaths are not accounted for by chunks of butcher's meat getting wedged in people's throats—but we have no desire to pick a quarrel with the butchers. What we insist upon is that, reasonable care being shown in its use, canned goods has an altogether admirable character, quite on a par with any other food, and that its stigmatization in the opposite direction is grossly unfair to it. Some few years ago a series of shocks in this same way were given to the trade in the United States, whereupon there was published an excellent little pamphlet, setting forth the virtues of the article, not alone upon the authority of the trader, but upon the declarations of medical men. The body of testimony thus collected was most valuable, and whether due to it or to the assertion by the consuming public of their own common sense, we cannot tell, but the fact remains that since then the canned goods trade of the States has developed enormously, the consumption probably having doubled. What is to prevent somebody, say the Federation or some wealthy organization, taking the matter up in this country, collecting information, preparing statistics, gathering together opinions—in short, putting the public and the trade right upon this matter? Useful, practical work is what our associations want. Here is a capital outlet for their energy.—Grocers' Review, Manchester.

BRITISH AMERICA ASSURANCE COMPANY.

The 59th annual meeting of the shareholders of this company was held in the company's office, corner Scott and Front street, Toronto, the Governor, Mr. John Morrison, occupying the chair.

Among the shareholders present were Messrs. Henry Pellatt, S. F. McKinnon, John Morrison, George A. Cox, T. H. Purdon, William Adamson, Augustus Meyers, Thomas Lond, A. M. Smith, Robert Thompson, J. J. Kenny, H. M. Pellatt, Robert Jaffrey, Joseph Jackes, Thomas Walmesley, J. K. Niven, George Gamble, John Hoskin, Q.C., J. H. Brooks, Rev. Dr. Griffin, of Galt, William Ross, P. F. Ridout, P. H. Sims, R. Jackes, Walter MacDonald, W. H. Banks, F. C. Cox, E. J. Hobson, W. E. Fudger, E. G. Fitzgerald, Alfred F. Colby, Alexander Wills and H. D. Gamble, the company's solicitor.

Mr. W. H. Banks, the assistant secretary, read the following

ANNUAL REPORT.

The directors have pleasure in submitting to the Shareholders the Fifty-Ninth Annual Statement, exhibiting the financial position of the affairs of the Company, accompanied by the Balance Sheet for the year ending 31st December, 1892, duly audited, from which it will appear that the amount of business transacted during the year was $812,589.25, as compared with $765,057.71 for the year 1891, representing an increase in premium income of $47,531.54, while the profits of the year's transactions amount to $27,442.57.

The aggregate destruction of property by fire during the year in Canada and the United States has been estimated at $132,000,000, and it is to be hoped that the heavy loss resulting therefrom to the various Companies will lead to measures which will place the business on a more satisfactory basis.

Your Directors have to mourn the loss of one of their members in the death of Dr. Hugh Robertson.

The following members of the Board have resigned during the year, viz.: Messrs. John Y. Reid, John M. Whitton and John Morrison, jr.

To fill the vacancies caused by the decease of Dr. Robertson and the aforesaid resignations, Messrs. George A. Cox, A. M. Smith, S. F. McKinnon and J. J. Kenny have been elected Directors of the Company.

It is very gratifying to your Directors to be able to testify to the efficiency, fidelity and active co-operation of the Agents, Special Agents, and Office Staff in guarding the interests of the Company.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

JOHN MORRISON,
Governor.

To the Governor and Directors of the British-America Assurance Company:

Gentlemen,—We, the undersigned, having examined the securities and vouchers and audited the books of the British America Assurance Company, Toronto, certify that we have found them correct, and that the annexed balance sheet is a statement of the Company's affairs to Dec. 31, 1892.

R. R. CATHRON,

R. F. WALTON, Auditors.

Toronto, Ont., Feb. 7, 1893.

The adoption of the report was moved by Mr. Morrison, and in seconding it Mr. J. J. Kenny referred to the changes which had taken place in the Directorate of the Company. He said that for some time past a number of the large shareholders of this Company, as well as many gentlemen interested in the Western had held the opinion that two companies transacting, as these two Companies do, the same lines of business throughout the same extended territory, and having their head offices within a few doors of each other, might, by working in harmony, be of material assistance to each other. He pointed out that the business of a fire insurance company differs widely from that of most other financial and commercial institutions, inasmuch as one of the chief requisites of a fire insurance office is that it should possess facilities for reinsuring or placing with other companies such risks as its representatives may be able to control in excess of amounts which it is prudent for it to carry, so that, by the interchange of excess lines, one company can materially aid another, while at the same time accommodating its own agents by accepting larger risks than it could otherwise do, and, as a matter of fact, the British America and Western have since the change in their relations to which he had referred, exchanged more business in the past two months than they had done in the preceding five years. He also pointed out many other ways in which the business of the two companies might be conducted to mutual advantage, and, on behalf of the gentlemen connected with the Western who have become interested as shareholders in the British America, he desired to say that nothing is farther from their intention than that one company should be absorbed by the other, or that either should lose its identity as a distinct corporation. Their action in purchasing stock of this company and accepting seats at the board had been prompted rather by a desire to uphold one of Toronto's oldest financial institutions, and by a wish to perpetuate the time honored name of the British America; believing as they do that, in the field of fire insurance on this continent, there is ample scope for all the companies now engaged in it, and that both the British America and the Western will be materially strengthened by the community of interests now established between the two companies.

The report was adopted.

Mr. George A. Cox then introduced a by-law providing for the increase of the capital stock of the company to $750,000 by the issue of $250,000 of new stock at a premium of 15 per cent. or $7.50 per share, to be allotted to present shareholders in the proportion of one share for each two shares held by them. He pointed out the necessity for a large capital for a company doing an extensive business such as this transacts, owing to the fact that a large proportion of the assets were required for deposit with insurance departments in the United States, as well as the Dominion of Canada, and the importance of the Company having at all times sufficient available assets to meet any possible demands upon it in order to command the fullest confidence. He pointed out also that after providing a fund which is considered ample for reinsuring or running off the business on the Company's books, the statement presented shows a surplus of $76,717.76 in excess of capital and all liabilities, so that he considered the price fixed at which the new stock would be issued was fair and reasonable. Intending subscribers might naturally enquire as to the prospects of a fair return on the investment. This was not an easy question to answer in any business, and particularly in that of fire insurance. The most conservative directorate and the most able and judicious management could not with safety make any predictions or promises as to the future, but he had had a statement prepared, showing the results of the business of this Company for the last twenty years. During that time the total income amounted to $16,151,579.22, the losses and expenses to $15,015,637.51. Dividends paid to shareholders $798,140.66, or within a fraction of 9 per cent. per annum for the twenty years ending on Dec. 31 last, and he thought they might reasonably entertain the hope that the average results for the next twenty years may be at least satisfactory. He moved, seconded by Mr. S. F. McKinnon, the adoption of the by-law, which was carried unanimously.

A vote of thanks was tendered to the Governor, Deputy-Governor and the directors for their attention to the interests of the company during the past year.

Messrs. Henry Pellatt and J. K. Niven were appointed scrutineers, and the voting for directors to serve during the ensuing year was proceeded with.

The following gentlemen were elected: Messrs. George A. Cox, S. F. McKinnon, A. M. Smith, Thomas Lond, John Hoskin, Robert Jaffray, Augustus Meyers, H. M. Pellatt and J. J. Kenny.

At a subsequent meeting of the board Mr. George A. Cox was elected Governor and Mr. J. J. Kenny Deputy-Governor for the ensuing year.

PEANUT POINTERS.

Market gossip and "inside pointers" on peanuts are just now of a brilliant "bullish" tint. The knowing ones figure out supplies and prospective outlet in a manner that prompts them to venture the opinion that the outlet is the largest; that there is only one way for prices to move, and that a good advance can be realized without affecting consumption. A prominent Virginia concern contributes the following information on the subject: The tendency of the market is to higher prices in the near future, the market for farmers' goods is higher, and all offerings of good stock are quickly taken at the advance. Those cleaners who a few weeks ago were free sellers at cut prices, now seem the most anxious buyers. We have made as careful canvass of the stock in Virginia and North Carolina as we believe it possible to do, and our conclusion is: There are not more than half as many peanuts in those two states of all kinds except Spanish, as a year ago, and a large percentage of same is of the poorest quality, much of it shelling stock. There is no combination of cleaners this season to put up prices, the only factor being the law of supply and demand, and our friends may feel assured that when higher values come they will be here to stay. The above statement may appear bullish, but we believe it to be true.—N.Y. Commercial Bulletin.

ENCOURAGING TOBACCO CULTURE.

The efforts of the Tennessee and Georgia Tobacco Growing Association at Chattanooga, Tenn., have been so far successful that in the surrounding country some fifteen local associations have been formed. These embrace nearly ten counties, and the interest among farmers is so general that it is estimated that the plantings will yield a crop of at least 1,000,000 pounds and probably more. The greater part of the crop will be bright leaf, as it is thought that this will give the best results, both as to production and in value. By the coming fall preparations will have been completed for handling the crop in Chattanooga.

QUEENSLAND SUGAR TRADE.

Reports speak favorably of the sugar crop of the colony, just harvested, and point to the growing importance of an industry in which the sugar-making machinery engineers have already a very direct interest. The season's crop will work out at 60,000 tons, and be the second best on record. The year will be notable, it appears, for "a considerable advance in the use of labor and sugar-saving appliances in the mills. Every year more attention is being paid to these subjects. Success has attended the maceration process wherever used, and an average extra saving of 10 and 12 per cent. of the sugar is common. This process has reduced the total losses of sugar down to at least 20 per cent. Automatic strainer cleaners at the juice pumps have been put in several places, and, according to reports, work remarkably well. On the Herbert River the most important advance appears to have been made in the matter of saving labor. An automatic feeder and mechanical stoker do splendid work at the boilers; and thus, by an ingenious but inexpensive arrangement, four men are saved out of every five previously employed. A shredder for breaking open the canes before they enter the first mill has gained a foothold in the colony, and will probably be amongst the earliest of the important improvements made in every large mill."

KISSES SAVED UP.

A travelling man, who was also the head of a prosperous firm, promised his newly wedded wife that he would give her a dollar every time he kissed her, and in that way she could save plenty of money. Things went on this way for several years, and, as he made plenty of money, he faithfully kept his promise. Finally reverses came and the once prosperous travelling man found himself virtually a pauper. He went home to his wife and told her all. She, however, did not seem to feel worried, and he was somewhat surprised when she asked him to take a ride with her that afternoon, but he accepted her invitation.

Passing a large block on a well known street she said, "That's mine." Soon she came to a handsome flat and said, "That's mine." Well, she showed him several places with the same remark until he began to be suspicious, and inquired, "How in the deuce did you accumulate so much wealth?" "Do you remember the contract you made when we were first married?" "Yes," he replied, "I do." "Well, I invested it and it has made us rich." The travelling man hung his head and said nothing. This was kept up for thirty minutes, until his wife became alarmed, and she asked: "What in the world is the matter, and what are you thinking about?" He said, "I was thinking of how rich we would be if I had done all my kissing at home."—Michigan Tradesman.

CURRENT TOPICS.

To anyone who carefully will read the daily papers
There must come a great amazement at the very funny capers
Cut by various men in public life, from cranks to politicians,
And men of high and low and intermediate positions.
There's Goldwin Smith who's raving, tearing mad for annexation
And wants to make Canadians mingle with the Yankee nation,
And Uncle Sam has just envolved a similar kind of fool, who Advises him to go and lay his hands on Honolulu.
The Orangemen throughout the land are howling at the follies Alleged to be committed by their master, N. Clarke Wallace;
And 'tis said that Irish Protestants and Catholics have decided That once a year (on Patrick's day) they'll be no more divided,
Which is very gratifying, but how can they be quite happy
While the schools of Manitoba question's still upon the tapis.
Ben Harrison has hump'd himself to make a final rattle.
Before he shuts up shop and tries to stop Canadian cattle
Being exported through his territory, but judging from the figures
Of the trade returns, 'twill hurt him most; and so, of course, we sniggers.
There's the question of the tariff which is ever young and blooming,
And societies of all denominations are assuming
That something should be done at once, and shoals of resolutions
Are daily passed by twenty different kinds of institutions.
As usual, politicians mix up private animosity
With "Ways and Means" and "Budgets" and "Commercial Reciprocity," Till readers get bewildered with the many interests various
Which are jumbled all together in a manner so precarious.
'Midst all this hubble-bubble it's a great relief to meditate
That on one point at least we have no cause our minds to agitate,
For we know that spite of politics and international coups d'etat
The Mammoth works at Hull are running smoothly as they always are:
And notwithstanding all th' above enumerated capers
Eddy still is turning out his tons of matches, pails and papers.

CRITIQUES.

Last week's paper presented several points of difference in view. The outside city grocer demands jobbers' prices in biscuits. He is demanding that which many grocers have desired in vain before this. For instance, like tobacco, there are two or three dealers, retailers, who have the close price on tobacco, and to save your neck you cannot get these prices, not even by buying a decent quantity. No, brothers, you can't have everything.

We notice soap has advanced again. We heard of a "reputable" (?) manufacturer who promptly disowned the orders taken on good faith by his traveller because "soap had advanced." "All right," you say. Well, it would have been, if soap had advanced when the orders were taken; but it had not, at least so the story goes. This manufacturer lives west—we will not say where, but his victims will spot him wherever possible, so they say.

The Grocers' Association will eventually make up a real nice enjoyable meeting I see, because they are going to have live issues laid before them by experts in various lines, and also to have comfortable clean rooms.

Whether would you have a Dutch grocery, as set forth on page 7, or a well ordered affair of to-day?

There are indications enough to show that buying good sensible coffee is a safe speck. Statistics pay at all times.

I liked that article on page 9 on labels. You can just sell six attractive packages while you are talking up one plain one. Actual proportion.

That squib anent coercion towards Canada being very unprofitable business for the United States is well taken. We are worth trading with if we are worth exercising so much spleen over, and we mean to trade on fair terms, too, when sense comes home to rule, both here and there.

A year's postal work is good food for study, especially for Torontonians. This twocent rate in the city is just getting a trifle stale. Haggart had head enough to put it on because he thought best, but what is the matter with the new head of the P. O. Bureau? The first thing he knows he will be a "mouldering branch" if he does not make a one cent city drop.

The market reports are very full, correct and worthy of acceptance as guides for close buyers. If too much has not been said for a mead of praise the setting up of the "ads" might be included.

STRAIGHT MOYUNE.

SUGAR IN BAGS.

Editor Canadian Grocer:

Dear sir,—I noticed an article in this week's issue of your valuable journal on the shipping of sugar in bags, which it stated is becoming very common in the West Indies, and I believe a considerable amount of sugar is handled in that manner in the United States.

I think that the majority of storekeepers in this country would decidedly object to having sugar shipped in bags, the reasons being: Much heavier and awkward handling, more liable to taint in coming in contact with coal oil and other goods, and also the comparative useless and valueless sugar bag.

In speaking with a wholesale grocer the other day on this matter, he suggested, and I think it a good one, that the refineries put up sugar in a uniform size barrel, say, the standard apple barrel, which, if the cost of package would be a trifle more, the retailer can afford to pay, as he would more readily dispose of them to the farmer and fruit grower, and realize a better price than he now receives for the present barrel.

UNIONVILLE SUBSCRIBER.

Unionville, Feb. 17, 1893.

("Unionville Subscriber's" suggestion is a good one, and his contention well taken. There would undoubtedly be a good deal of time saved in figuring if the weight of a barrel of sugar was made uniform, and the advantage to be derived in being able the more readily to sell these barrels to farmers and fruit growers is apparent.—Ed. GROCER.)

BUYERS ON THE STREET.

Among the country merchants who have been on the street during the last couple of days were noticed:

W. M. Hamilton, of Walton.

T. J. Halliday, of Brooklyn.

J. H. Nott, of Owen Sound

A. Werden, of Mimico.

J. Parkinson, Trout Creek, was in Toronto last week. The Muskoka climate is exactly what suits him. He is in better health than for years.

A STUDY IN SUGAR.

In 1869 a pound of hard sugar was worth at wholesale sixteen cents; to day cubes or granulated five cents, says a contemporary. In 1869 the workingman with three dollars per day as wages, could buy nineteen pounds of refined sugar; to-day sixty pounds. How has this reduction come about? Credit must be given to the sugar refiners for at least three and a half cents of the eleven cents difference in cost between 1862 and 1892. This was brought about by the inventive genius of Woolsey, Molier, Havemeyer and others in applying machinery to the refining of sugar. The introduction of the centrifugal machine revolutionized the trade. A sugar refiner saw it used for drying clothes while on a visit to Haverstraw and adopted it for drying sugar.

Over two cents more of the reduction is due to the cleverness of Governor Mc-Kinley, who gave the people free sugar to go along with free tea and free coffee, both of which articles are taxed by England for revenue only. The balance of the reduction must be credited to the planter, who has improved the process of cultivation and of manufacture, abandoning primitive and crude methods for scientific and elaborate mechanical agencies; to lower rates of transportation, to the increase in supply, whereby the beet root, sorghum, and maize have been made competitors with the sugar cane.

Lower prices have led to a more extended use of sugar, establishing many new industries.

FISH HOUSES.

Not long ago I watched a pair of black bass building their nest. The place selected was a gravelly spot well back under the projecting point of a large fragment of limestone lying at the bottom of a bright, rapid brook in middle Indiana. The water was as transparent as plate glass, and looked as if every drop of it might be morning dew, it sparkled so, and sent forth such an exhalation of freshness. I sat down on a high, grassy bank, under a blooming buckeye tree, and watched the fishes while they flew around in the water, like birds in the air, working industriously at their nest making. One by one they removed with their mouths the larger bits of gravel and sand from the little cave under the rock until they had made a funnel shaped basin, smooth and symmetrical, a foot in diameter at the top. Here their home was to be for a while. Some days later I returned to the place to see what had happened and found the twain busy keeping other fish away from their eggs, which lay in the sand at the bottom of the nest. With vehement anger (to all appearances) they flew at the suckers and shiners and chubs and sun-perch that came near and drove them away. When the eggs were hatched, I could see a small, cloud-like something hovering over the middle of the nest. This was the swarm of young bass, each fish not larger than a half inch piece of a small needle. For some days the parents protected these tiny fish with faithful care, after which they led them off to shallow water and left them to shift for themselves amid the waving fibres of aquatic plants.

Sun-perch build beautiful nests, much like those of the bass, but usually smaller and in calmer water. I have seen this fish, after its nest had been excavated, carry small stones and partially fill up the basin. Both the male and the female work hard and steadily during the building time, and they remain together after the work is done to swim round and round, like sentinels on a circular beat guarding some wonderful treasure. Indeed, it is a wonderful treasure; the golden mystery of life is hidden among those shining, many-hued pebbles.

When the thousands of young fish go forth from their cool, clean home, they congregate in the shallows and pools, where you may see the green heron and the kingfisher feasting on them. Were it not for these and other sources of destruction our streams would soon be filled to the brim with fishes unable to find food or room to live in the water.—Golden Rule.

DISABLED.--- Owing to an accident to her machinery the steamer carrying our Hillwattee Tea was obliged to put back to port. On this account our shipment may not be here for ten days or two weeks. The demand THIS YEAR for this brand has been greater than usual, so we are unable at the moment to fill orders. This we regret very much.

The latest European mail brings the following: In connection with the gloomy food crop prospects in the Madras Presidency, satisfaction is expressed that the prospects in Burmah are good, and that lower Burmah will be able to export rice to a very large extent to supplement the food supply of India. Seven districts estimate for more than a full average crop, while only the Prome district estimates less than a full average crop. It is calculated that there will be available for export 1,600,000 tons of cargo rice, equivalent to 27,118,645 cwts of cleaned rice, including what is required for Upper Burmah.

A BIG INSURANCE CASE.

An important insurance case that has been interesting a number of companies very closely was settled in this city Monday. The action arose over a fire which took place in the wholesale crockery warehouse of James A. Skinner & Co., 58 Wellington street west, Toronto, on May 19, 1892. There were sixteen companies involved in the loss, which, shortly after the fire, was appraised by Messrs. Lewers and McMahon at $26,610. The companies regarded this amount as excessive, and Messrs. E. R. C. Clarkson and Cross, accountants, were called in, and, on going through the books, reduced the previous amount to some $23,200. Seven out of the 16 companies settled on this basis, viz: Western, Imperial, Manchester, City of London, Connecticut, Commercial Union, Guardian. The nine other companies decided to contest the claim, and an action resulted between the Skinners and the contesting companies, which were: North British and Mercantile, Quebec, Mercantile, Lancashire, Hartford, Scottish Union and National, Fire Association, Aetna, Caledonian, the plaintiffs claiming the amount of the first appraisal, the total of which was $26,610. On the matter coming for trial before Judge Rose in January last an order in accordance with agreement between the parties was made practically setting aside the first appraisal and referring the differences to three arbitrators, Judge Morgan, J. H. Flock, Q. C., London, and S. G. Beatty, Toronto. The arbitrators commenced on the 15th inst., Mr. Wallace Nesbitt representing the plaintiffs, and Mr. E. B. Osler, Q. C., the insurance Companies. Monday morning the case was settled, it being agreed that the companies should pay 60 per cent. of their share in the amount of the first appraisal of $26,610, each party paying their own costs. The result is that the contesting companies pay about $1,000 less of the claim than the companies who settled without going into court.

LONDON

RETAIL GROCERS' ASSOCIATION.

The regular meeting of the London Retail Grocers' Association was held in Sherwood Hall on February 14. The evening being very stormy and the sidewalks and streets being very slippery there was not as large an attendance as usual. There was, however, 12 members who braved the rainstorm and slippery walking, and made their appearance at the hall at 8.30 p.m.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved, and two new members were admitted.

The usual routine of business was proceeded with without anything special being brought up for discussion until the reading of communications, when the secretary read communications from each of the city millers in reply to a request from this association that they discontinue retailing flour to consumers at wholesale prices or at the same price as supplied to grocers. The millers explained that the principal reason that they were selling direct to the consumer at wholesale prices was that outside millers were cutting the price to the trade in some cases, and the city millers were obliged to do something to retain the city trade. They, however, agreed to discontinue selling at less than regular retail price, providing they get a fair share of the trade of the grocers. This was considered satisfactory to the members present, and the communications were ordered to be filed.

The question of the price of barrel salt was taken up, and it was reported that the price at present varied considerably, but that the stock held was very light, the breaking of the combine being anticipated by nearly every grocer in the city, consequently they bought lightly and at present are waiting results.

The recent rise in the price of soap caused considerable comment. It was granted that the rise in material justified the manufacturers in advancing the price, but it was very questionable if to the extent of 1 1-2c. per pound, with a report that it would likely go up another 1-2c., making an advance of two cents per pound over old prices. There was no definite action taken.

The question of forming a collecting agency in connection with the association was taken up, and the decision of the solicitor read regarding the advertising and selling by auction accounts that it was found could not be collected by other reasonable means. It was considered by the solicitor to be a little risky. Further discussion on this question was laid over for a better attendance. Meeting adjourned at 10 p.m. to meet again on March 8.

NON-DRINKING EMPLOYEES.

Twenty years ago it was often true that a young man who drank beer, or wine, or even whiskey in moderation, might be advanced to places of greater trust and responsibility. It is now scarcely possible. The habit is simply fatal to success. I do not believe there is a single reputable business house in Chicago where an employee who drinks intoxicants of any kind has anything like an even chance for promotion. The taking of a single glass of beer may, and often does, mean losing the chance of a lifetime. Brainy boys and young men, teetotalers from principle, are plenty enough to fill all the places in the line of promotion.—Chicago Interior.

THE INVENTORY.

January 1, if you have not done so before, have your invoice books divided into columns devoted to date, No., quantity, bought of, discount, cost, retail price, stock No. This will enable you to take stock intelligently at any moment, and prove the case clearly whenever any question concerning stock arises.

The number which you place on the bill and under heading "Stock No." on invoice book, should be stamped on all goods, such as gloves, ties, etc. You will, therefore, be sure of your position when a pair of gloves are returned to you which are not yours, and which you must refuse to take into your stock.

The value of such a system can never be appreciated until tried. You can tell at a glance the age of any article in your stock if you make your stock number like this: F-2-76, which means "Fall of 1892, stock number 76."

The clerk who lets the old stock accumulate which is marked in this way is only building up evidence against himself. Why have they not called attention of buyer or employer to such stock in proper time, and suggested how to handle same, or asked for some ideas of how to push items? It is not that the clerks should lie and cram down the throats of people "slow-selling goods." There is no excuse, however, for not calling the attention of the buyer to such items in stock, and also making liberal display and careful introduction of same to the customers.—Dry Goods Economist.

THE OBJECT OF THE SYSTEM.

The customer who had brought some damaged goods back to exchange them, and had patiently accompanied the cash girl from one official to another in pursuance of the regular routing, leaned against the counter to rest herself.

"Your plan of making exchanges," she said, "is really discouraging."

"Yes," cordially replied the young woman at the desk, filling out a blank necessitating a trip to another official two floors above, "that's what it's for."

THE LEGEND OF THE TEA PLANT.

Do you know how the tea plant came to grow? A very lovely Chinese maiden loved with all her soul an equally beautiful Chinese youth, but, alas! she had a rival. However, he plighted his troth to her and all went merry as rice and firecrackers could make it. Just before the wedding the beautiful youth laid himself down under a tree to take a nap. He looked like a picture on a screen. His beauty was too much for the wicked girl, who also loved him, but who was not to be his bride. So she determined to take away some of his good looks. His lashes curled on his cheeks like a bang newly done by a French hair-dresser. Going up to him she immediately cut them off. When his own, his true love, saw him after the accident, she said, "Can this be you?" and he said it was. Then he told of the wicked one, and they both prayed to the gentlest of Chinese gods to finish him up and make his eyelashes grow again, and the Chinese god, being economical, said: "The ones you have lost shall not be wasted; go and plant them, and from them shall spring a tree that shall delight all mankind." And they did as he told them, and at the wedding they had tea from the youth's eyelashes, and the wicked one wept and was beheaded. — Philadelphia Press.

TARDY PAYING RICH FOLKS.

If there is any class of people in the community who, more than another, should be scrupulous in paying debts, it is the rich people. The sacrifice incurred on their parts in so doing is nothing. They simply discharge a duty, and in the act are making for themselves habits which will be of benefit in their business relations in life. But by thoughtless inattention, or a singular reluctance to pay out money, which even those who have much of it exhibit, they do great injustice to others, and get into very bad ways on their own account. When a bill is due to a mechanic or tradesman it ought to be paid, and the man who has the money to discharge such a debt should take pleasure in paying it. He does justice to those whom he owes and to himself by the acts. By withholding it he frequently inflicts, not only injustice, but causes sensible embarrassment, if not distress, to worthy people. The whole matter may seem of slight importance on a cursory view, but there is often an injury caused in this way which is important in pecuniary and other effects. The creditor is at an obvious disadvantage in urging payment, for he is in constant fear that by so doing he may offend and thus lose a customer. He ought not to be compelled to do this. Every man who owes money should take pleasure in clearing himself of the obligation thus incurred. Next to the satisfaction of receiving payment of a debt should be that of making payment for the same, and we are not sure but the two should be on a par here.—Boston Herald.

NO SILVER FOR HIS GROCER.

"Yes sir," said Mr. Alltork, shifting his quid into the other cheek and tightening his hold on his victim's coat button, "it's just as I've been telling you. If something isn't done to stop this awful glut of silver the country'll go to smash. Thousands of waggon loads of it, and nobody wants it! Piles and piles of silver accumulating everywhere, and the first thing you know—What do you want?" broke off Mr. Alltork, turning to address a boy who was pulling him by the coat sleeve. "That grocer's bill again? How much is it? Two dollars and a half? I haven't seen as much money as that for six weeks. Run along, son. Don't bother me now. To come right down to the facts, Jones, you know as well as I do that unless the American people take some action on this silver glut," etc., etc.

THE EXPORT BUTTER TRADE.

Canada receives about $10,000,000 a year for her exports of cheese, and there is no reason why she should not receive $10,000,000 a year for her exports of butter, instead of a little over half a million dollars. The demand for fresh Canadian creamery in the English markets is unlimited, between June and December; but the great drawback to the success of our export butter trade, as has been often pointed out in these columns, is the absence of a proper system of marketing during the summer months and the stubborn adherence to the old fallacious custom of holding until the fall. Professor Robertson may introduce as perfect a system of manufacture as it is possible to conceive of; but if factory-men cannot be taught to market their product at stated intervals, so as to place it on the English market in a much fresher condition than has been the case during the past few years his labor will be lost. Under the present faulty plan of holding on the part of farmers and factorymen during the summer months, there is ten times less butter produced than there would be if the make was regularly sold the same as that of cheese; and until Canadian makers decide to market their butter as they turn it out the same as cheese makers do, they will never figure to any extent as exporters, not even under the tuition of fifty Professor Robertsons. Why is the Australian and New Zealand export butter trade proving such a success? Because makers sell it regularly during the season. The shipments of butter from the Antipodes to London during the season of 1889 and 1890 were 790,944 lbs. in 1890 and 1891 1,655,000 lbs., and in 1891 and 1892, 5,207,944 lbs., while the estimates for the present season of 1892 and 1892 amount to 7,200,000 lbs. The value of dairy products shipped from New Zealand to London increased from $5,000 in value in 1886 to $1,150,000 in 1891, and this season will show a much greater increase. Little Denmark, however, ships as much butter to England as all the other exporting countries combined; and yet Canada has the facilities for producing more butter than Denmark if she only went the right way about it.—Montreal Trade Bulletin.

BRITISH COLUMBIA'S TRADE.

Commenting on some of the announcements that are made in certain of the Pacific Coast papers as to the special advantages they possess for the development of an extensive fish trade with the east, the Victoria Times remarks: "British Columbia has even a better chance than California to engage profitably in a continental fish trade. The colder waters produce a finer quality of fish, and the cooler climate affords better facilities for handling them. Our fishermen have this one marked advantage, of access to unlimited supplies of halibut, which is perhaps the very finest large fish found in American waters, salt or fresh. There can be no obstacle in the way of a great fish trade between the coast and this province and the great inland cities, unless it be the cost of transportation. Quick and cheap transit is one of the essentials, and it is one which the railway companies will find it profitable to provide."

The transportation problem is the embarrassing one, no matter the side of the American boundaries from which the Pacific Coast resident hails. There are over 3,000 miles of transportation to the Atlantic seaboard, on railways which either pool their business or otherwise have some kind of an understanding among themselves, and which, moreover, on the one hand, have contrived to control the rates of the Panama railway, leaving as the only actual competitors the slow service by vessels that are compelled to round Cape Horn or the Canadian Pacific Railway. This latter company, under all the circumstances, not unnaturally regulates its rates by the consideration of what the business will stand and secure to it a share of the trade. Quicker and cheaper transportation is what is wanted by the whole of this Pacific Coast, and if Jim Hill and the Great Northern, or the enterprise formerly known as the Canada Western will step in and supply the requirement, the better for them and the better for existing lines of business, and for those industries that we all know to be so capable of almost unlimited development.—B. C. Commercial Journal.

FUNCTION OF THE BEE.

It will be a surprise to many to learn that after all the most important function of the bee's sting is not its stinging. "I have long been convinced that the bees put the finishing touches on their artistic cell work by the dexterous use of their stings, and during this final finishing stage of the process of honey making, the bees inject a minute portion of formic acid into the honey," writes an authority. "This is in reality the poison of their sting. This formic acid gives to the honey its peculiar flavor, and also imparts to it its keeping qualities. The sting is really an exquisitely contrived little trowel, with which the bee finishes off and caps the cells when they are brimful of honey. While doing this the formic acid passes from the poison bag, exudes, drop by drop, from the point of the sting, and the beautiful work is finished."

The Best Grocers Make
a point of Keeping it always in Stock.

[As there is often inequality in the prices of the various sellers on this market, owing to differences in buying conditions and other circumstances, and as prices are modified by both quantity and quality, the quotations given below and in our Prices Current necessarily take a wide range.]

TORONTO MARKETS.

TORONTO, Feb. 23, 1893.
GROCERIES.

Trade seems in a pretty healthy condition, but the volume of business is somewhat lighter than a week ago. To define the cause is mere guess work, but the heavy snow storms and the consequent blockade of the country roads has probably brought it about. But while the market is quieter, values generally are firmer. Canned vegetables continue to gather strength, although no change in prices have been made during the week. Chocolates have advanced 1c. a pound and cocoas are dearer. The soap market is firm and a further advance of $\frac{1}{2}$ c. a pound would not create any surprise. Surprise soap is quoted 85c. a box higher than a week ago. Imported sperm candles have advanced 20 per cent. in sympathy with the advances in hog products. Coffees remain much about the same. Currants are in rather better demand, and with prunes are dearer for importation. Outside these the dried fruit market is much about the same as before. Sugar continues quiet, firm and featureless. Syrups are a little higher. The tea market is getting stronger as stocks grow less. Payments are as a rule reported to be fairly good.

COFFEES.

Demand here is just ordinary, largely on account of high prices. The local market has not advanced anything like what is seemingly warranted by the prevailing conditions outside. Rios are scarce and firm, and the foreign markets are quiet and firm.

DRIED FRUIT.

A fair seasonable trade is being done. The principal demand at the moment is for currants, which are selling well from $5\frac{1}{2}$ c. up; they are dearer, for importations and stocks at Patras are exhausted. There is a firmer feeling in Valencias outside, but the movement here is light; fine off-stalk are selling at 5 to $5\frac{1}{2}$ c. and layers at 7 to $7\frac{1}{2}$ c. a pound. Prunes, like currants, are dearer for importation, and on the spot are scarcer at $7\frac{1}{2}$ to $8\frac{1}{2}$ c. a pound. Dates are in fair demand at unchanged prices.

RICE AND SPICES.

There is still only a light enquiry for rice at $3\frac{3}{8}$ to $5\frac{1}{2}$ c. a pound.

Spices are in active demand but without any actual change in price. The hardening tendency in the price of pepper and cloves has induced a little more buying in these lines.

SUGAR.

The sugar market seems to be holding steady, but the demand continues light. Refiners are very stiff in their views and won't take anything under the regular combination price.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES.

Syrups are in active demand, the medium and better grades being more called for, and prices are a little higher. Refiners have worked off their surplus stocks and are now asking at least $\frac{3}{4}$ c. more than three weeks ago. There is also an improved demand for molasses.

TEAS.

The demand for teas continues good. Stocks of practically all lines in first hands are becoming smaller and the position is stronger than a week ago. Low grade teas are in small compass. And it is the general opinion that men who buy to-day will get better value than those who defer till May or June because low grade Japans are not expected to arrive here till August. Locally the principal demand at the moment is for low grade and medium Japan teas and medium Assams and Ceylons. Low price Ceylons are also getting scarce, and there seems to be none offering in London at the moment.

MARKET NOTES.

[Importers, wholesale merchants and manufacturers should send any items intended for this department so that they may reach the head office not later than Wednesday morning. The editor will always welcome such information.]

Soap promises to go higher.

Imported candles are 20 per cent. dearer.

Davidson & Hay have a fine assortment of syrups in barrels and half barrels.

Eby, Blain & Co. announce special rates for Eureka salt for spring shipment.

A new line of Vostizzas in half cases have been received by Davidson & Hay.

H. P. Eckardt & Co. have just received another shipment of Martin's kippered herrings.

Kippered herrings are in much favor the present Lenton season, and Eby, Blain & Co. report large sales.

McWilliams & Everest are shipping out about 2000 barrels of apples weekly. Two car lots were sent to Vancouver this week.

W. T. Harris, Chatham, N. B., dealer in general merchandise, offers 200 cases canned lobsters, also dried cod of finest quality.

James Turner & Co.'s travellers are this week showing grand value in Japan teas, more especially in 25c. tea. Samples are furnished on application.

The steamship Damara, which was due in Halifax early this month, has been detained and will not arrive for a week yet. Hill-wattee tea customers will please note this.

Davidson & Hay have been appointed sole agents in Toronto for Ebnr. Roberts' solidified jellies and Cables creams. A full assortment is expected to arrive in about two weeks.

H. P. Eckardt & Co. are offering a consignment of Eleme figs packed in one and two-lb. boxes, full weights, at $9\frac{1}{2}$ c. for the ones and 18c. per box for the twos; quality the best.

Orient package tea is growing rapidly in popularity. A couple of days ago Eby, Blain & Co. received an order for 25 chests from a man who two months ago began with five chest lots.

Chocolates and cocoas are dearer. Mott's chocolate is 1c. a pound higher and cocoa nibs have advanced $5\frac{1}{2}$ c. a pound. The cause is the shortage in the crop. The local trade expected the advance.

Eastern reports generally note a good, steady distribution of nearly all varieties of pickled and salted fish at stiff prices. New York movement is good also and at full former rates, but without sign of speculation.

Reports received from the Pacific Coast advise a material increase in the demand for raisins and the completion of some large business, chiefly for Western account. From a reliable source the statement is made that the stock there has been reduced fully 50 per cent. since January 1.

The high prices ruling for 3-lb. canned tomatoes on this side of the Atlantic, it would appear, have prompted holders in the English market to send back some of their goods. One line has been offered at a price which, with refund of rebate of duty on the tins and other charges, makes the cost about \$1.08 $\frac{1}{2}$ landed in New York. Californians are offering their gallon canned tomatoes here.—N. Y. Bulletin.

The position of rice abroad appears to be growing somewhat stronger. Richard Gough & Co.'s latest advices are to the effect that rice in the east is a little firmer. Madras is in a state of famine. There is a large demand in China for the commoner kinds of Saigon and Siam. The Burmah harvest was proceeding satisfactorily, and steamers are busy loading except at Akyab, where rice is being taken at high prices for the Madras coast.—N. Y. Bulletin.

In the course of a business letter to THE GROCER Stewart, Munn & Co., Montreal, say:—"We are glad to say that the fish trade has been very good the past two or three weeks and stocks are now very much reduced. Green codfish has run up to a very high price, and herrings have come in latterly for their share of attention too. Stocks of all sorts of fish are now in a very small compass. Lent is to be very strictly kept this season, and coming so early is very much in favor of the fish market."

BUTTER AND CHEESE.

Deliveries of butter have been a little freer during the week and prices if anything, have an easier tendency. Good dairy butter is in fair demand and fairly steady. For good dairy tubs 19c is the ruling figure with the range from 18 to 21c. Large rolls are the most enquired after at the moment and they sell from 18 to 20c. Choice pound rolls are quoted at 20 to 22c. Bakers' is still scarce and wanted, and would probably fetch 17c. Creamery butter is inactive. There is considerable on the market, but it is held at prices which no one will look at; it is quoted at 23 to 25c in tubs and crocks and at 26 to 27c in pound rolls. Some of the creamery

MY DEAR SIR:—

I think it only fair, to let you know, that at a Dinner party at my house the other day, we had some of your Canned Peas, and that their was a general expression of opinion amongst the eight people present, that these Peas were far superior to any of the French Peas obtainable in Canada.

It is quite evident that the Lakeport Preserving Co. understand their business, and how best to preserve fruit and vegetables.

held here is said to have deteriorated in quality owing to the length of time it has been in stock.

Fresh supplies of cheese, here, arrived on the market during the last few days, but all was wanted and prices are $\frac{1}{2}$ c higher than a week ago at 12 to 12 $\frac{1}{2}$ c.

HOPS—There is a good demand for old hops, but the market is otherwise dull and easier. The farmers who a short time ago were holding out for 20c. and, in some instances even 25c, are now peddling their own samples about at 17 to 18c. for 92's. Yearling are dull at 12 $\frac{1}{2}$ to 15 $\frac{1}{2}$ c. On the European markets prices are from 2 to 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ points lower.

PETROLEUM.

Petrolea crude is quoted at $1.18 per brl.

Following are the latest quotations at Toronto:—Canada refined oil, 14 $\frac{1}{2}$ c.; carbon safety, 17 $\frac{1}{2}$ to 18c.; Canada water white, 20c.; American water white, 25c.; photogene 27c.

COUNTRY PRODUCE.

BEANS—There is a decidedly better feeling and prices are higher, at $1.25 to $1.50; car lots of choice sample changed hands at the latter price, Toronto. There are no stocks held here and sellers are advanced in their views.

DRIED APPLES—Been all about picked up and prices are steady at 5 $\frac{1}{4}$ c.

EVAPORATED APPLES—Stocks of these are also pretty well cleaned out. There does not seem to be any demand and prices are unchanged at 8 to 8 $\frac{1}{2}$ c.

EGGS—Offerings are more liberal, while demand is only from hand to mouth; the market is a falling one and a mild spell would probably see a sharp decline in values. Pickled eggs are quoted at 23 to 24c and fresh at 28c.

HONEY—Conditions are much about the same as a week ago; dark is about the only kind offering and that is not wanted; comb would find a ready sale at 15c. a pound.

DRESSED POULTRY—Firm and wanted. Prices are firmer all round. Chickens are quoted at 65 to 75c. a pair, ducks 85c. to $1 a pair, turkeys at 14c. a pound, and geese at 9 to 10c. a pound.

POTATOES—No material change. Farmers' deliveries were rather free a week or 10 days ago, and this has had the effect of keeping the market pretty well supplied. The ruling price quoted on track is 8c., while 5 to 10 bag lots sell in store at 90c., and 95c. delivered.

ONIONS—Dull and unchanged at $2 to $2.25 per barrel.

HOGS AND PROVISIONS.

There has been no material change in the market for dressed hogs. Prices are a little easier, car lots of packers' weights being obtained at $8.55, while $8.60 is the outside figure quoted. Holders are still a little strong in their views, while buyers on the other hand are unconcerned. Demand continues good for all hog products.

BACON—Long clear 10 $\frac{1}{2}$ to 11c. Smoked backs are 12 $\frac{1}{2}$ to 13c., bellies 13 $\frac{1}{2}$ c., rolls 10c.

HAMS—In good demand and firm at 13 to 13 $\frac{1}{2}$ c.

LARD—Pure Canadian is 12 $\frac{3}{4}$ c. in tubs, and 13 to 13 $\frac{1}{2}$ c. in pails. Compound 10 $\frac{1}{2}$ to 11c.

BARREL PORK—U. S. heavy mess is $22.50. Canadian short cut is $20 to $22. Canadian heavy mess $20 to $21.

DRESSED MEATS—Beef forees are 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ to 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ c., hindquarters 7 to 8 $\frac{1}{4}$ c., veal 6 $\frac{1}{2}$ to 8c., mutton 7 to 8c., lamb 8c. to 8 $\frac{1}{2}$ c.

GREEN FRUIT.

The cold spell has curtailed the activity noted a week ago, although business is still fairly good. Oranges have a firmer tendency and a sharp advance is looked for; Floridas are 50c. dearer. Lemons are in good demand, and they are quoted all the way from $3 to $4, according to quality. Supply of bananas is about equal to the demand and prices are steady. Quite a few apples are moving; about 7,000 barrels sold last fall were shipped during the week. The market for immediate requirements is quiet and fancy stock is held high. We quote Valencia oranges at $4.50 to $4.75 per case, Jamaicas $2.50 to $2.75 per box, Floridas $3 to $3.50 per box, Mandarines $2.50 to $2.75 per box, Tangerines $3.25 to $3.50 per box, Palermos $2.50 per box; lemons $3 to $3.50 for choice and $3.75 to $4 for fancy; bananas $1.75 to $2.50; pineapples 20 to 30c., Malaga grapes $8 to $9, fancy cranberries $10 per barrel, common $1 per basket; apples, $1.25 to $1.75 for market stock and $3 per barrel for fancy.

CANNED GOODS.

TORONTO.

The improvement noted during the last couple of weeks continues. Stocks of tomatoes, corn and peas are getting into controllable shape, and enquiries are becoming more numerous. Holders who were anxious to sell seem to be pretty well cleaned out of stock. The advance of 5c. has been well maintained, and a further rise in the near future is expected. There has been further enquiries from Chicago for canned tomatoes, one house alone being asked for quotations for 2,000 cases. There have also been enquiries from Western cities for tomatoes, peas and corn. It is reported that quite a large quantity of peas and corn have been shipped to Buffalo. It shipments to the other side continue canned vegetables must further advance. The local demand continues brisk.

MONTREAL.

The canned goods market furnishes no special features, and prices on fruits and vegetables are more or less nominal.

MARKETS—Continued

FISH AND OYSTERS.

The Lenten demand for fish is brisk. It is general and, compared with previous seasons, is much larger. There are no salmon trout on the market. Oysters are dull and lower. We quote: 7 to 7½c. for trout and ordinary whitefish, 7½c. for Manitoba whitefish, 4½c. per lb. or $2 to $2.25 per hundred for Lake herring, 10c. for mackerel, 13c. for B.C. frozen salmon, and 17c. for fresh ditto, 5 to 7c. for smelts, 5 to 5½c. for haddock, 4 to 4½c. for market cod, 7c. for steak cod, 4c. for flounders, 6½c. for skinned and boned codfish, $6 for Labrador herring, $5 to $5.50 for shore herring, 11 to 12½c. for Digby herring, 4c. for boneless fish, 7 to 8c. for boneless cod, 6c. for pike, 8c. for pickerel; oysters, $1.50 for stds., and $2 selects.

HIDES, SKINS, WOOL, TALLOW.

SKINS—Sheepskins are coming in more freely, but prices are higher at $1.25 to $1.50. Calfskins unchanged at 5 to 7c.

HIDES—Demand continues good and prices firm. Carloads of cured are selling at 5¼c.; No. 1 green cows' is quoted at 4½c. and cured at 5¼ to 5½c.

TALLOW—Scarce and higher, dealers paying 7c. and selling at 7½c.

WOOL—The market is pretty well cleaned out of fleece, which is quoted at 18 to 19c.; pulled is selling moderately well at 22 to 23c. for supers and 26 to 27c. for extra. There are no blanket wools on the market.

SEEDS

The excitement in the red clover market has subsided, but while prices in the United States are lower they remain unchanged here, at $9 to $9.25 a bushel for prime to choice quality. Timothy is quiet and unchanged at $1.50 to $2, but with mild weather will probably come an improvement. Alsike is quiet and unchanged at $5.50 to $6.60.

MONTREAL MARKETS.

MONTREAL, Feb. 23, 1893.
GROCERIES.

The grocery market has been fairly active but some of the big jobbers here complain that the movement toward the country is slower in making itself felt than they anticipated. They cannot understand buyers reason's for holding off, but assert that the fact remains that they are doing so in some sections. In others, however, the returns indicate a greater business than for the same period last year, notably up the Ottawa Valley, but, in Eastern Ontario and in the lower provinces demand is somewhat slow. It is generally admitted, however, that supplies in retail dealers hands throughout the country are small, so that in the natural course of events, this fact should make itself felt forcibly. The tone, as regards values on all the leading staples is firm, and if there is any change at all in this connection the prediction is that it will be upward. Sugar is quiet but steady, teas are firm and the same has to be said of coffees and spices, the supplies of the three last named lines here in first hands being light. Dried fruits are somewhat quiet but prices are firm. There has been a good demand for fish and with the exception of pickled herring all lines of it are firm. Canned goods are quiet but canners who were in the city this week said they were not disposed to urge matters especially on tomatoes. Payments are reported satisfactory on the whole.

SUGARS.

The sugar market is moderately active, but refiners report that they are doing the usual business natural to this season of the year. The tone of the market holds firm with sales granulated at 4½c., choice brights at 4 to 4½c., and low grade yellows 3½c. Advices state that refiners in the lower provinces have advanced their prices to 4½c. on granulated down there. There is no abatement to the firmness of the raw sugar market advices from all primary markets being strong. Some cost and freight business has been put through on behalf of refiners here, but the terms are not known. The delivery it is understood is to be in the latter part of May.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES.

There has been a fair turnover of Canadian syrups in the wood during the week sales of round lots being noted at 1¼ to 2c. American has changed hands at 18 to 19c. per gallon. There is a somewhat easier tone to note on Barbadoes molasses, and it is claimed that good sized lots have changed hands at 33c. which would hardly have been accepted a fortnight ago. For jobbing lots however, 34c. is still the figure. Business for spring delivery on behalf of importers here has been done in the Islands at 14c. first cost or equal to 19c. f.o.b.

TEAS.

The tea market has been quiet during the week, but the situation is very healthy in more ways than one. Jobbers who stood to make a loss will now come out with a profit owing to the late improvement in the market. The demand for low grade Japans is still a feature of the market, a round lot changing hands the other day at 13 to 14c. Blacks are strong under a fair enquiry. We quote Japans common 13½ to 14½c., medium to good 15½ to 19c., fine 19½ to 22c., and finest 25 to 31c.

COFFEE AND SPICES.

The coffee market has an upward tendency, all kinds being firmly held. Round lots of Maracaibo have sold at 21c. and Rio 19 to 20c. Jamaica is scarce, and in the absence of business prices are only nominal. We quote: Jamaica 19 to 20c., Maracaibo 21 to 22c., Rio 19 to 21c., Java 25 to 27c., and Mocha 25 to 28c. These figures are only possible on straight wholesale lots, business in a jobbing way necessitating an advance on these prices.

Spices are very firm and values are higher all round. Round lots of pepper have changed hands here at 8 to 9c. for black, which is 1 to 1½c. more than was possible a short while ago. There is little or no pimento to be had and 6½c. is an inside figure on it for a straight wholesale lot. Nutmegs have changed hands in straight lots at 50 to 52½c.

DRIED FRUITS.

Another quiet week has been passed in dried fruit, although lately there is a little more enquiry for Valencia off-stalk, a few small lots of seconds changing hands at 4¾c. and prime at 4½ to 4¾c. Cheap common stock is very slow of sale at 4c. Valencia layers are steady at 6 to 6½c. Currants are slow of sale and prices are somewhat easier. We quote 5 to 5¾c., as to package.

NUTS.

Nuts are quiet and unchanged. We quote Pecans 11 to 12½c., Terragona almonds, 10½c., Grenoble walnuts 13½ to 14½c., filberts 10 to 10½c., Ivica 14½c., Brazil 15c., marbots 12½c., cocoa nuts $3.50 to $4.50 per bag of 100 for old, new $5 to $5.50.

RICE.

A good steady distributive demand is reported for rice at unchanged prices. From first hands in a straight wholesale way we quote: Standard "B," $3 85; choice, $4; Japans, $4 25; Louisiana, $5 25, and Carolina $7 to $7.50. There are no Patnas in the market at present.

FRUIT.

There is a fair demand for lemons, and prices are said to be comparatively low for this season of the year. Fancy Messina stock brings $2 to $3 and common to good $1.25 to $2. Oranges have met a good demand, and Floridas are somewhat higher at $3.25 to $3.50. Valencias rule at $3.75 to $4 and Messina $2.25.

Dates are unchanged at 5 to 5½c. per lb.

There are very few Almeria grapes offering, prices ruling firm at $8 to $8.50.

Figs have been in fair demand at from 9 to 12c. per lb. as to quality.

FISH.

The fish market has continued active, and with the exception of herring all kinds of pickled fish rule strong. Round lots of No. 1 green cod sell at $6 75, with large $7.50, while dry cod is steady at $4.75. Smoked and fresh fish have been fairly active also. We quote as follows: Haddock 3½ to 4c., cod 3½ to 4c., steak cod 5c., lake trout 7c., white fish 7 to 7½c., pickerel or dore 8c.; dried cod, $5 50; No. 1 green cod, $7; B. C. salmon, $12.50 per brl.; Labrador salmon, $13 to $14; No. 2 mackerel, $12 per brl.; do. $7 per half brl.; Labrador herring, $4 50 to $5.00 per brl.; C.B. and N. S. herring, $4.50 to $5 per brl.; tommy cods, $1.75 to $2.00 per brl.; fresh herring, $0.00 to $2 per hundred; haddies, 7 to 7½c.; Yarmouth bloaters, $1.00 to $1.25; common do., $1; fresh frozen mackerel, 8½ to 9c. each; smelts, 4 to 5c.

APPLES.

The apple market is disappointing on local account, a few small sales being reported at $2.50 to $3 in jobbing lots of good to choice fruit.

ASHES.

The ash market is firm at $4.25 to $4.35 for first pots and $3.65 for seconds. Pearls are quiet at $5.20.

HOPS.

Business is quiet. A lot of 8 bales of fine Canadian sold at 20c., and we quote 19 to 20c. as to quality.

BEANS.

The market keeps steady, choice hand picked selling at $1.35 to $1.50 as to quantity, with good ordinary at $1.10 to $1.20.

POTATOES.

The market remains steady, sales having been made at from 80c. to $1.00 per box of 90 lbs. in car lots.

EGGS.

The market is weak and lower under a comparatively limited enquiry, Montreal limes being difficult to sell at 23 to 25c., while fresh is quoted at 25 to 28c.

BUTTER AND CHEESE.

There is a fair jobbing movement in butter, all grades ruling firm and we quote:—Choice fall creamery, 23 to 24c.; creamery seconds, 21 to 22c.; Townships dairy, 21 to 23c.; Morrisburg and Brockville, 20 to 22c.; Kamouraska stock, 19 to 20c.; Western rolls, 18½ to 20c.

The cheese market is without any new feature, business being extremely quiet and 11½ to 11¾c. about holders ideas on business for shipment.

FLOUR AND FEED.

TORONTO.

The flour market seems to have lost all its activity of two weeks ago, being now about as quiet as it possibly can be. Prices however remain about the same. In contradistinction to the flour trade, feed is quite active, millers not being able to turn out bran and shorts fast enough to supply the demand. Bran is quoted $1 higher and is firm at the advance.

FLOUR.—City millers' and dealers' prices are: Manitoba patents, $4.50; strong bakers' $4 to $4.10; white wheat patents, $4.35; straight roller, $3.40; low grades, per bag, $1.00 to $1.25; Ontario family $3.35 to $3.85.

Car prices are: Toronto freights—Manitoba patents, $4.30 to $4.50; Manitoba strong bakers' $3.90 to $4.35; Ontario patents, $3.25 to $3.50; straight roller, $3.15 to $3.20; extra, $3.10; low grades, per bag, $1.10 to $1.25.

MEAL.—Oatmeal is $4.00. Cornmeal is $3.50.

FEED.—Bran is $16, shorts is $17 mixed feed $22, feeding corn 57 to 58c., oats 34 to 35c.

HAY.—Baled timothy, demand is good and supply fair at $9.25 to $9.50.

STRAW.—Plentiful and demand limited, at $5.50 to $6.

MONTREAL.

The market is quiet, although a fair volume of business is reported on local account. We quote:—Spring patents $3.25 to $4.35; winter patents $4.10 to $4.25; straight rollers $3.50 to $3.75; extra $3.10 to $3.25; superfine $2.70 to $2.90; fine $2.35 to $2.50; city strong bakers' $4.00 to $4.25; Manitoba bakers' $3.50 to $4.15; Ontario bags, extra, $1.40 to $1.50; straight rollers $1.80 to $1.85; superfine $1.30 to $1.45; fine $1.10 to $1.20.

PROVISIONS.

The movement in provisions is small but business is as good as can be expected. Stocks of pork are small and holders are very firm in their views. We quote:—Canadian short cut pork, per brl. $23 to $24; Canada clear mess, per brl. $20 to $22.50; Mess pork, American, new, per brl. $23 50 to Extra mess beef, per brl. $13 to $14; Hams, city cured, per lb. 13c. to 14c. Lard, pure, in pails, per lb. 13½ to 14c.; Lard, com. in pails per lb., 10½ to 12c. Bacon, per lb., 12½ to 13c. Shoulders, per lb. 11 to 11½.

Supplies of dressed hogs are pretty well all in, and the market is about over for the season as regards car lots which are nominally quoted at $8.75 to $8.85.

MONTREAL TRADE NOTES.

Mr. C. A. Chouillon reports fair sales of his line of Menier's chocolate.

Lightboud, Ralston & Co. have made some big sales of Japan teas recently, and it is the talk that this enterprising firm have done well on their ventures in this line.

The last car lots of dressed hogs of the season were received in Montreal this week, and are held at $8.75.

There is a comparative scarcity of Almeria grapes here at the moment. Only a few kegs can be had.

There has been more buying of Japan teas here by Chicago houses, two round lots of low grade stock being turned over last Friday.

Montreal refineries have been purchasing raw sugar at the islands for spring delivery on the basis of 19c. f.o.b.

Lower provincial refineries, according to advices received here, have advanced their prices to 4 1-2c. on granulated.

Home made preserves are beginning to run out at this season, and Blaiklock Bros. are offering a nice line of marmalade.

L. Chaput & Co. are doing a good city trade in their special lines of fish, and syrups, molasses, etc.

Lochfyne herrings are a delicacy in the way of fish, and Mr. Kennedy, 463 St. Paul street, says he is prepared to provide it.

To provide for the Lenten season Caverhill, Rose, Hughes & Co. have some palatable lines of fish which should fill the bill.

Some of the French wholesale houses are reported to be offering cuts on canned fruits and vegetables, but the market otherwise is quiet.

A sufficiency of bones is one of the drawbacks to a fish diet, but Munn's boneless cod obviates this difficulty. Stewart, Munn & Co. offer their usual specialties in this connection.

A canner who was in the city the other day said that he did not feel anxious about his stock of tomatoes, as he felt that he could make something of them yet despite the slow demand.

There has been some large buying of raw sugar in New York on Montreal account, some 1,000 bags centrifugals being taken at 3 3-8c. cost and freight for 96 test, and 1,000 barrels molasses at 2 25-32. cost and freight, for 89 test.

The big fire on William street on Monday caused losses of something like $300,000. Among the firms who sustained heavy damages were Doyle & Anderson, tea brokers, whose stock of Japan teas was damaged by smoke. The firm value it at $65,000, and the firm place their loss at $20,000, and hold policies for $25,000.

GLASS PACKAGES.

The increasing use of glass in the packing of foods is very remarkable, and is a step in advance. Its purity, cleanliness and beauty recommend it, while the commonness and cheapness of the materials entering into its composition make it non-expensive. Especially on account of the high price of tin and the growing prejudice against its employment in packing articles of food, the manufacturer who is liberal in the use of glass for this purpose, other things being equal, scores an advantage by this means. We note with particular interest that the prejudice against packing meats in tin is strong in Mexico, where it is very desirable, the way being now open to it, that a large trade in American food products be built up. A preference for glass above tin in proximity to articles of food, is one that is entirely spontaneous, and this fact should of itself induce a movement looking to the more economical production of glass, so that its general use for the purpose indicated may be made practicable.—Commercial Enquirer.

KANSAS SALT INDUSTRY.

The salt industry of Kansas has assumed proportions that will entitle it to be classed as one of the wealth-producing sources of the State. There are now thirteen operating plants at Hutchinson and one each at Anthony, Stirling, Wellington and Kingman, while there are mines for rock salt at Kingman, Lyons and Kanopolis. The aggregate capacity of the works at which salt is produced by evaporation is a little over 6,500 barrels daily, while the aggregate of the mines is limited only by the power of the lifts to haul to the surface the mined product.

The capital invested in the salt plants now amounts to $3,000,000, of which sum $800,000 has been invested in Hutchinson alone. The actual yield is far below the capacity, owing to the fact that Michigan salt is a competitor on such favorable terms that it can be sold for much less in the Kansas market than can the Kansas salt. This is the result of the peculiar freight rates fixed by the Western Traffic Association, which enables the Michigan manufacturer to lay down his salt at points within forty miles of Hutchinson at less rates than can the producer at the latter point.

All the output of the mines in the state, excepting the rock salt, is controlled by two trusts working together, the Holland Investment Company, of New York controls five of the Hutchinson plants, while the Hutchinson Salt Company controls the others. The two jointly control the output of the outside mines or plants. The result is that there is no competition in this field so far as home plants are concerned.

The rock salt industry is in bad shape, for with four mines the output of any one will more than supply the market. One mine can produce enough in one week to supply the market for six months, so that the capital invested is not yielding very remunerative returns. The cause of the limited market is that the farmers have no faith in the salt as a fertilizer, and the cattle men will not use it to any extent, believing it to be injurious to their stock. In New Mexico and Texas, where it was used to some extent on the cattle ranches, it was found that it thickened the tongues of the cattle so that they could not eat the short grass, and in addition to this caused sterility, entailing a loss of 25 to 50 per cent.—Commercial Enquirer.

DEPEW ON ADVERTISING.

Chauncey M. Depew is reported to have recently said of advertising, says a contemporary, that it "has increased, it has been perfected, the field has been enlarged, a host of new ideas have been and are being constantly introduced, until to-day advertising is one of the most important elements essential to commercial success." The author of this sententious wisdom ought to know, for he is an expert at keeping himself before the public, and is therein a king among advertisers. Always ready to receive and courteous to the press, the willing victim of the interviewer, and having an opinion for utterance on almost every subject of public concern, good-natured and ready to laugh at his own mistakes at the proper time, Mr. Depew's views on the subject of advertising must be heard with great attention. True, this ingenious gentleman's subject of various and always interesting announcements is himself, what he thinks, and what he says; but the principle underlying the "perfect" advertisement, to use one of his own expressions, is detected quite easily, and is as readily applied to soap or mackerel as to the cultivated and distinguished president of a railroad. Chauncey loves popularity; he therefore poses before the public with a taking confidence and brotherly good humor, which never fails of appreciation. The readers will remember "how Absalom stole the hearts of the men of Israel," by keeping himself before them in presence with kindly smile and word, a ready promise to help and the kiss of paternity. He was an advertiser "born, not made" like the railroad president, whose gilded advantages are no man's envy. Now, there is an obvious moral to these observations; the foundation of the successful advertisement is its power to reach, interest and influence those to whom it is addressed—whether the general public, or a class of retail buyers, it makes no difference. This is simple and plain enough, but is often lost sight of, apparently, when an advertisement is being constructed. Mr. Depew's remarks are not collectively open to adverse criticism, but his claim to perfection in advertising must be received as applying only to some specimens. Take up probably any periodical and examine its announcements with close attention, it will be found that the dull, awkward, redundant advertisement exists to-day—a dead failure measured by the standard above described. If read, it excites no interest much less conviction, and is a dismal waste of words and money. The object of an advertisement must be kept steadily in view in drawing it up, and direct and concise expression is the natural language of an earnest purpose. Generally speaking, there is no doubt that simple and strong simplicity is the most effective means of interesting the majority of people and classes of people. The appreciation of elegantly worded advertisements is an acquired taste and belongs only to the comparatively few.

FLORIDA ORANGE CULTURE.

Orange culture presents a fascination that has become irresistible to many Northerners, says Commercial Enquirer. As a climate for invalids to recuperate in Florida has not proven a brilliant success, the dry atmosphere of the far southwest having been found far better. But the class of men who make their home in Florida six months of the year are lusty, enterprising business men, in possession of all their powers, who go thither every fall to gather the golden fruit from the trees to supply this and other markets. Mr. C. E. Walsh, who is this year sojourning in the land of fruit and alligators, writes in detail of the orange picking and packing industry as well as about the thrifty young men who go from cities and farms of the north to look after their small or large possessions in Florida. Some own only a few acres of orange trees, while others proudly count their orange trees by the thousands. Every one has the strong hope of some day possessing large groves that will return a handsome income for the rest of his life. The returns from some of the groves barely pay expenses for the winter trip, but there is good prospect of a steady increase in the income as the years roll by. Meanwhile, they are content to work on their Northern farms in summer, or in the city stores, for a fair living, while they entertain dreams of future wealth and enjoy the novelty of living north in the summer and south in the winter.

The annual southern-bound company increases in numbers each year, and its ranks are recruited every season by young members who are willing to get a foothold in Florida by working a season or two at sorting and packing oranges for their more favored brothers until they can start their own grove. Land is to be had on the installment plan, and while they make a living at packing and sorting oranges, they clear and plant the land that they are gradually paying for. When the few acres begin to bear fruit then they become their own masters, and their southern trip becomes one of great pleasure and joy.

Probably more than half the good orange groves in Florida are owned by northern people. A few capitalists have invested largely in the fruit business, but the vast majority of the groves are owned by small holders, averaging from two or three acres up to fifty. Consequently very few of the orange growers are wealthy men. They belong to the middle well-to-do class, whose work and energy have been rewarded by a fair permanent income from their fruit orchards. Three-quarters of their owners live north from May until November, and sojourn in the south in the winter months. Southern owners and "Crackers" have been "land poor" from time immemorial, and they are willing to dispose of their property to northerners for a consideration. Every year some of the best orange groves pass from their hands to enterprising northern farmers or progressive city business men who are bent upon making money in fruit growing, and of having a good chance of changing their place of residence twice a year.

Their life in the orange belt in winter is somewhat enviable, and very few of them who have once entered that sort of existence care to leave it. The work of picking and packing the oranges is not unpleasant, and is a most agreeable change from the hard farm work in their New England fields. The mere novelty of the work lends enchantment to it. Then when the oranges are picked, and the returns have come in from the northern commission merchants, the young growers make a tour of the state. They visit the sub-tropical exposition, linger round St. Augustine for a few weeks to see the life and gayety of the hotels, run down to Cuba for a few days' lark, and spend pleasant days in hunting near the Everglades, or in fishing along the coast. On the whole they make a vacation that compensates largely for their hard, toilsome life on their New England farm.

Accustomed to northern ways, these orange growers study the fruit situation to better advantage than their southern competitors. They visit the northern markets and get the views of commission merchants, and they are pretty sure to be present to take a hand in a law-suit if any "snide" fruit dealer attempts to swindle them out of their fair earnings. The southerner may occasionally fall into the clutches of scheming commission merchants, but it is very rarely that one of these young migrating fruit-growers is caught napping. Their annual visit north enables them to study that end of the business as well as the other end. They have probably done more toward improving the business by adopting better sorting methods and superior packing ideas than any other class of men. Under their management the oranges are subjected to a rigid sorting and careful packing. They are divided up into lots according to their size, quality and color, and each box is carefully labeled and marked. The result is that Florida oranges are rarely different from the marks indicated on the outside of the box.

When a grove is to be picked, the small packing house is thrown open to the air, and the packers and pickers are in their places as soon as the heavy dew is off the fruit. The pickers are provided with strong canvas bags, which they sling over their shoulders, a pair of sharp shears and a light ladder. Every orange is clipped off the tree so that a good stem is left attached to the fruit, and these are dropped carefully into the canvas bags. The light ladders do not injure the trees, and very few branches are broken in the operation. When the bag is full the picker carries them to the packing house and dumps them carefully on the main heap, the russets in one pile and the brights in another.

A long wooden trough is made for the purpose of sorting the fruit. At intervals of every foot a hole is made in the bottom of this trough just large enough to permit an orange of a certain size to fall through and drop into its box. The smallest sizes begin first, and all the small oranges are caught as they try to pass the hole. It takes on an average just 220 of these oranges to fill a box, and, though the box is labeled with this number, no one ever stops to count the actual number of golden fruits that compose it. As the oranges roll down the trough the next hole is reached, and every one that will drop through the aperture goes to make up the box that is marked "200 brights" or "200 russets." The next hole is larger still, and allows 190 to the box, and the others respectively 175, 150, 120 and 90. The latter are very large, fancy fruits, and several trees will generally yield only two such boxes.

The owner of the grove is supposed to keep himself well posted as to the condition of the market, and to know when to rush the fruit through in car lots. If the grove is a large one, the owner generally finds that all his time is occupied in superintending the work of picking, packing and shipping. The pickers need watching to see that only fruit clipped direct from the trees is brought to the house, and the sorters and packers need overseeing to keep them from getting brights and russets mixed, or bad oranges in the box. The smaller fruit grower cannot afford to hire so much work done, and he has to go in, hand and glove, and help at everything. He has fewer men to work for him, and his sphere of superintendence is consequently limited. Sometimes several northern fellows will own a grove on shares, and they will do the work well for mutual benefit, and they do not need to call in the services of professional fruit gatherers.

In this way between four and six million boxes of oranges are picked, packed and shipped in the state of Florida. They come in just before the holidays, and the flow keeps up with more or less regularity until March. By that time the new fruit blossoms are scenting the air with their fragrance, and the old fruit is getting over-ripe and dropping from the trees.

TIS ALONG THE LINE OF PROGRESS.

The march of progress in business methods tends at the present time more strongly than ever towards a consolidation of interests between the wholesaler and the retailer. What is good for one is good for the other, and this fact is more fully realized by the city dealers than those of the country. The present movement of jobbers all over the country in the matter of refusing to sell country dealers who neglect to carry insurance on their stocks is widespread, and the sooner it is made absolutely necessary for the country merchant to insure, the better it will be for the latter and the safer it will be for the people who hitherto have sold him valuable stocks of goods, and depended on his luck to escape loss by a conflagration.

In nine cases out of ten, when a country store burns down the stock is a total loss, for there is seldom adequate facilities for fighting fire. If a proper amount of insurance is carried the burned out merchant finds himself able to pay his debts, and with sufficient money and undamaged credit to re-establish himself in business. If, on the other hand, he carries no insurance, he wakes up some fine morning to find his house and stock in ashes and himself a ruined man. His debts stare him in the face, and he has no means of meeting his obligations. This is not an imaginary case. It has occurred in dozens of cases.

There has long been a sentiment among the wholesalers against dealing with country merchants who refuse to protect at once their creditors and themselves, from a mistaken sense of security. The prevailing impression seems to be that the country dealer should insure for at least two-thirds of his valuation, and that his failure to provide against disaster both to himself and the man who sells him goods, should furnish sufficient grounds for a refusal to supply him.—Commercial Tribune.

THE MEN WHO MOVE THINGS.

In a talk to young men on the subject of courage, a gentleman once said: "The men who have moved the world have been the men whom the world couldn't move. The men who have turned the world upside down have been the men whom the world could not turn upside down. The men who move things are the men whom nothing can move."

The men whose names shine brightest on the pages of history are the men who absolutely refused to conform to the thoughts and habits of the age in which they lived. The men who have conformed to the world have been deformed by the world, while the men who have sought to reform the world have transformed the world, and have been themselves transformed.

PEPPER-RAISING IN CAMBODIA.

The pepper plant, says M. Adhemard Leclere, in the Revue Scientifique, is not a bush, as some writers say, but a vine which has to be supported by a tree when wild, and by a strong stake when cultivated. The author has seen the vines growing nearly wild near Chandoc in Cambodia, where they had been planted by the villagers and left to themselves. They grew vigorously, and to considerable length, but bore only a few bunches of fruit, and that of an inferior quality. An abundant crop of good pepper can be obtained only by careful and skilful cultivation. The industry thrives in the province of Kampot, where it is pursued in some twenty villages. At the village of Suam Ampil there are 89 planters and more than a hundred plantations, containing 48,000 stocks. The plants are propagated from cuttings, which are made about eighteen inches long and are taken from stocks two or three years old; they are supported by stakes about ten feet high, which are solidly planted in the ground, and are fertilized at the season every year with a special manure, which is composed of eight parts of good soil and one part of pounded shrimp shells. The plants are liable to attack by a minute parasite that destroys their fruitfulness, to obviate which they are treated with a decoction of tobacco. The first crop, but an insignificant one, appears in the third year after planting. A crop of about a kilogramme per stake of two plants is gathered in the fourth year, and the increase continues for eight or ten years. Exceptional plants in good soil may return four kilogrammes per stake, but a crop of from two to three kilogrammes and a half is considered a fair average. Some plants will live fifty years, but they are seldom remunerative after forty years; and, as a rule, a plant thirty-five years old is considered of no further value. The plants bloom in May and June, and the gathering of the crop begins in February. The bunches which have turned red are picked, and the others are left for future visitations. The berries are stripped from the bunches and dried in the sun till they are black, when they are packed and made ready for sale. White or grey pepper is produced by letting the berries get a little riper, and cleansing them from their outside envelopes. In some districts the removal is assisted by soaking the berries in sea water. One laborer can usually take care of about one thousand stakes.

BRAZILLIAN SNUFF.

The snuff which at one time was made by the Indians of Brazil is said to have been excellent in flavor. Its process of manufacture was peculiar.

The mill was made of a slab of jacaranda or rosewood cut to resemble a rude wooden frying-pan, the handle being about four inches in length, and the pan part about five inches square; with the exception of a cavity in the centre of the pan, the entire face of the mill was covered with the most beautiful "key" carving, but the back was plain and void of ornament, the handle representing a reptile, bird or fish. A smooth stick of rosewood, nine inches long by three-quarters of an inch thick, and of a cylindrical shape, formed the pestle. The pan was laid on the knee, the broken leaf tobacco dropped into the cavity and then ground or kneaded with the pestle until reduced to a smoothish powder, while the fragrance was given to the snuff by the heat engendered by rubbing the leaf between the two pieces of rosewood. As soon as the powder was formed, and while yet hot, it was quickly snuffed up the nose through the hollow shin bones of a crane or other small bird, which were united by a curious piece of plaited work and were finished at the end by small, round pieces of wood to fit the nose and to insure a perfect draft. The apparatus was carried slung around the wearer's neck, and the tobacco was carried in a cruspa or bag around the shoulder.

FOOD PRODUCTS IN MEXICO.

Writing from the United States Consulate at Piedras Negras, Consul Eugene O. Fehet in a report to the Department of State at Washington, says that corn, cereals, meats and flour of all kinds are now virtually excluded from all parts of Mexico, save the narrow strip of country called the free zone, on account of a prohibitory tariff. Sugar is also excluded for the same reason. Molasses and syrups are imported to a considerable extent, chiefly for the American residents. Preserved and conserved fruits in tin or glass carry an excessive duty, and consequently the trade in these articles is limited. The duty upon a 2-pound tin is 75 cents. Our American canned fruits pay the same high duties as preserved and candied fruits that are chiefly imported from Europe. Canned vegetables, pickles and sauces can be more largely imported, as the duty is about 8 cents per pound. French, German and English products are more common in Mexico than those of the United States, but from an investigation of prices and qualities it is believed our American canned articles can successfully compete in the Mexican market, and should be pushed, as the field will repay the effort.

Condensed milk is from the United States. The demand is limited and largely confined to American mining camps, railroad construction gangs, etc. Crackers have a fair sale, especially the sweet fancy crackers, and should be shipped in very light tin cases, as the duty is 7½ cents per pound gross weight.

Potatoes, onions and apples come from the United States and find a good market. Dried and evaporated fruits are much cheaper in Mexico than canned goods, as the duty is but 5 cents per pound net. There is a complete lack of fresh fruits in the northern half of Mexico for the greater portion of each year, and the demand for evaporated and dried fruits from the United States is very good and may be very greatly developed.

Potted meats and game under the former tariff were fairly in demand, and with the duty now reduced to 8 cents per pound, including weight of tin or can, the demand will be largely increased. European potted meats command a well-deserved reputation, but some of our American specialties in this line are well abreast of the European in regard. Deviled ham, for instance, is everywhere well known, and under the name of "Jamon del Diablo" (Devil's ham) finds a ready sale. Boneless ham in tins can be imported and sold cheaper than hams in cans. Potted meats from Europe are generally packed in glass with tin covers, and this mode of packing is preferred in Mexico, as tin is believed to be dangerous.—Commercial Enquirer.

DRY GOODS.

(FROM THE DRY GOODS REVIEW.)

Reports from various sections of the country show that the roads are very heavy on account of the great fall of snow, and business is somewhat slow. In British Columbia trade has been nearly paralyzed by the intense cold, the thermometer having registered 5 below zero, an unusual thing in that province. Still this is a season when the results of lessened traffic cannot be so serious as at other seasons, but nevertheless they are being felt.

Trade is quiet this week, but by the latter part of the week will improve. Some Northwest merchants are already on the market and some have purchased bulky parcels.

People seem to have become reconciled to the advance in sewing and art silks are buying freely once more. Hence an increased demand is noticeable generally.

Latest advices from England say that on account of the recent advance in rubber, the prices of rubber clothing have advanced 6d. per garment. This will make present stocks valuable.

NOTES.

Snow white collars are being sold at ten cents per dozen less than formerly by John Macdonald & Co. These goods are imitation of celluloid. They also offer a special line of unlaundried shirts, reinforced front, heavy cotton, which can be retailed at fifty cents. The balance of a manufacturers stock of braces at $1.50 a dozen is a clearing quotation in which twenty different designs are included. Men's heavy sheeting coats are still selling at old prices in spite of the advance. American hairpins in imitation barrels, light houses, champagne bottles, etc., are sold so as to be retailed at 5c. each. A case of hat, towel and clothes racks has just been opened up.

W. R. Brock & Co. are showing three job lines of prints which they secured by buying the whole manufacturer's stock. They are already half sold; and as they can be sold at 8 and 10 cents dealers wanting the best value at these quantities would do well to examine these lines.

Black and colored surahs are in stock again, large shipments being opened up, by John Macdonald & Co. A further supply of plaid surahs for blouses has just been received. These goods are very active at present. Repeats of Victoria lawn and velveteens have arrived this week. The range of qualities in these lines is very choice and the prices moderate.

W. R. Brock & Co. are showing a large stock of gloves in pure silks in black, cream, tan and other colors; taffetas and lises in Hermesdorf's absolutely stainless blacks and in assorted colors. The lines they are showing to be retailed with a handsome profit at 10, 12½, 15, 20, 25 and 50 cents are, they claim, not to be equalled in value; because their order was placed early in the season, being about the first Canadian order, which enabled them to avoid the advance of 10 to 25 per cent. which was announced immediately after their purchase.

Embroideries, especially in cambrics are being shown in long range by Caldecott, Burton & Spence. The shipments are large, although it can scarcely be said that embroideries are as strong in favor as in previous seasons. This is due to increase in favor of laces; and this house has an excellent range in Irish guipures, Torchons and black and cream silks. In parasols and umbrellas their trade has doubled during the past year. Their 75c., 90c., $1.15 and $1.50 lines are, they claim, unequalled in the trade.

Wyld, Grasett & Darling are making a display this spring in prints of all kinds, cretonnes, art muslins, as well as a large variety of linen goods, which is the largest and finest in their history. The beauty of the colorings and the styles of their fancy prints would in a great measure account for the present expansion of their business. In the dress goods department they are showing very choice novelties in all classes of dress fabrics. In imported woollens, which is a very large feature of the firm's business, the latest effects in English and Scotch tweeds, worsteds, and the newest tints in spring overcoatings are shown. They have an immense variety of tailors' trimmings, and a large assortment of domestic tweeds from the best manufacturers.

What is distinctly a novelty is a very handsome range of costume silk shown by Caldecott, Burton & Spence, in Japan goods, though printed and finished in Lyons, France. The range is principally navys and blacks in polka dots, floral and figured patterns. They will come in well for blouses, but if the Canadian trade follows the American in this taste, they will be largely used for costume dresses.

W. R. Brock & Co. are showing some beautiful things in ladies' dress fabrics. The crepe shot effect in fine woollens is magnificent and taking, and their range of stripes, diagonals, and combinations of diagonals and florals is worthy of more than passing attention. They are selling rapidly at sight.

Samson, Kennedy & Co. have nearly finished shipping their spring goods. Their sales in fast black hosiery have been enormous, and they carry some very leading lines. In gloves they have a well assorted stock of laced kids, dome fasteners, silks and taffetas, and other leading varieties. Their stock of gauntlets in the different classes has been much appreciated by their customers. In their men's furnishing department they have an excellent stock of neckwear, including the Society Knot, flat shapes, and Derbys in all widths. In fancy cotton neckwear they are showing a very large range in Derbys, bows, and puffs. In McIntosh's ladies' and men's waterproof garments they carry a full range of tweeds, parmattas, sheetings and silk finishes. In shirts they are showing new lines in white, negligees, flannelettes, and knit goods. They control the celebrated "Sterling Quality" make of shirts, collars and cuffs. In umbrellas their variety is almost endless, and a special line No. 200 at $9 is being shown which is claimed to be extra value at the price. In laces, Irish Guipures, and Pointe D'Irelande, are the leading lines. Two-tones, beige and black are the leading things in these. In veilings, gauze, chenille spots and nets are well assorted. They control a line of corsets known as the Sterling, and they claim it to have certain unsurpassed features. They are prepared for a huge trade in Windsor ties; plaids are the latest variety. In Ivanhoe and Bonne house caps they exhibit a nice range; also in washing sunbonnets and hats. In dress goods, whip cords, bez, galines and shot effects are the season's specialties, and are shown in different qualities. They are opening up a new range of French delaines, comprising all the latest novelties.

Some of the very latest novelties in fancy boating shawls are the diagonal and basket work stitch, as shown by Gordon, Mackay & Co. in a very choice selection of colorings, principally plaid combinations. They state that their sales in the shawl department are larger than any previous season's.

Anticipating the millinery openings, W. R. Brock & Co. have just received large shipments of fancy ribbons, new frillings, new veilings, laces, Brussels' nets, Mech-lins, and a variety of trimmings suitable for the millinery trade. These are marked on staple goods margin.

In view of a threatened advance in price, Gordon, Mackay & Co. have placed an exceedingly large order for handkerchiefs, including a range of Shamrock bleach cotton, in 5-8, 3-4, and 7-8. This range is making a deservedly high reputation for itself on account of its exceptional value.

The showing of John Macdonald & Co.'s woollen department for this season is a most extensive one, being composed of much that is new, and all that is desirable for the merchant tailoring and general trade. Black worsted coatings is one of the special lines to which their buyer has been paying particular attention. They show an immense range in a variety of makes and weaves. In colored worsted suitings their assortment is an extensive one, and excellent taste has been displayed in the selection of it.

THE U. S. SUGAR TARIFF.

It is said that no action relating to sugar will be taken until the new Administration assumes control. An extra session of Congress in March depends largely upon the action or non-action of the present Congress on the silver question. In the meantime the newspapers of the United States are quite active in moulding public opinion to some decisive action on sugar, and generally in the direction of continuing free trade rather than a duty. The annexation of the Sandwich Islands, which is now being agitated is really quite a question of sugar tariff. For fifteen years up to April 1, 1891, under the reciprocity treaty with the islands, the United States virtually paid the sugar producers of those islands a bounty of two cents per pound, amounting to about $5,000,000 per annum. Since April 1, 1891, under the McKinley bill, the islands have lost this bounty, and the United States is paying it instead to our own sugar producers. The Sandwich islands will not accept from us any annexation or protectorate or what not that does not give them this $5,000,000 bounty on sugar, hence the question becomes in reality a tariff question, and should be considered in connection with the general revision of the tariff, when that subject is before Congress.

SERVING WATERMELON.

The nicest and most convenient way of serving watermelon, which is often served so clumsily that it is an embarrassment to both hostess and guest, is to cut off the ends and lay a very thick slice of the fruit on a folded napkin on a round dish. Take a tablespoon and scoop out two or three spoonfuls of the ripest part for each person. Have very cold, and serve with forks. In China the fruit is often frozen for a dessert. Scoop out the pulp, free it from seeds, mash it quite fine, and mix with it a cupful of powdered sugar. It may be served in a bowl or basket shaped from the rind.—Ex.

THE WORLD'S HOP CROP.

The Homestead of Syracuse publishes an exhibit of the world's supply and demand of hops for the current season, ending August 31, 1893. The exact shortage on the world's supply is 3,500,000 pounds, which must be made up by the consumption of old stock if there be enough on hand for the purpose. There is an estimated shortage of 6,000,000 pounds in the English supply, and England has yet to secure enough hops to meet this demand before the end of the season. It is noteworthy that while every effort has been made to keep the price of American much below 25 cents per pound foreign hops have been imported at a cost of 39 cents, in addition to the duty, thus showing that American brewers are willing to pay fully 55 cents for foreign hops, while they begrudge 25 cents for American hops, which, on the whole, are infinitely superior to the imported article, which is mostly of cheap Russian growth, repacked in Germany and labelled as choice Bavarian hops and especially for the export trade. The output of beer in this country increased by 50,000 barrels during the first four months of the present season ending January.

LOTS OF BRAIN WORK.

The careful observer who will spend some time in the principal stores where the commission business is extensively conducted must be impressed with the necessity of a cool, level head to keep the wheels in motion, and at the same time avoid the risks that lead to loss. In other words, it seems to be absolutely necessary to have one man at least in the firm who will devote most of his time to "thinking." That is perhaps the proper expression.

It is necessary to study carefully each week and each month what to do and how to do it, keeping in the proper channels the various lines necessary in a successful business. The products of each season and in each accessible district must be looked after in time before secured or controlled by rival firms and competing markets. All these matters and a hundred others that might be added can never be judiciously managed without careful forethought and timely action.

Therefore, the firm doing a large business who would keep close to shore and avoid the breakers must see the necessity of a man whose time will be largely devoted to thinking. By no other means can a prudent and safe business be so well conducted—by no other step can the business be so well divested of the elements of risk and the hasty steps that lead to losses and errors. The average commission merchant permits himself to get too busy, and too often with labors which might be delegated to others—to cheaper help. Physical labors do not compare with brain work in the commission business no more than they do in other walks of life.—P. M. Kiely, in Produce Trade Reporter.

A customer secured is a promise of greater salary in time.

CANADIAN CHEESE IN ENGLAND.

The London Grocer by latest mail says of cheese: No change can be reported in English produce, which, as previously pointed out, for some time past is in poor supply through stocks in the country having run very low, and a limited demand suffices to keep prices up to their former level; common qualities from 56s. to 62s. useful at 66s. to 70s. and fine to finest at 74s. to 86s. per cwt. The market for Canadian and American maintains a firm appearance, and selected white cheese has realized a slight advance at 57s. with colored at 56s. Qualities about 50s. to 52s. having been principally worked off, hardly any are obtainable thereat, and it is believed that the general stocks at the depots and warehouses in London are considerably shrunken. In Dutch cheese there is little doing, but the supply is meagre and quotations are fairly supported. The top prices for New Zealand cheese are 50s. to 54s. and for "skims" 28s. to 30s. whilst no intermediate sorts are on show.

HOP GROWING IN GERMANY.

The American consul at Frankfort supplies the following particulars respecting the cultivation of and trade in, German hops: The area of land devoted to hop culture in Germany in 1889 was 113,116 acres; in 1890, 109,927 acres; and in 1891, 109,826 acres. Of this whole area Bavaria had 66,262 acres in 1890, or about half the hop fields of the whole German Empire, and this proportion is steady and nearly invariable, the variation in area in Bavaria during the past ten years not having exceeded 10 per cent. The entire hop product of Germany during the past ten years has been by years as follows: 1882, 36,296,000 lbs.; 1883, 41,218,000; 1884, 57,540,000; 1885, 66,196,000; 1886, 60,238,000; 1887, 48,580,00; 1888, 44,520,000; 1889, 71,565,000; 1890, 49,262,000; 1891, 46,800,000. In Bavaria alone the yield of 1890 was 28,439,000 lbs.; and in 1891, 22,440,000 lbs., or about half the entire product of the empire. On the 1st of January, 1892, 5 per cent. of the previous season's crop remained in the hands of the farmers, the remaining 95 per cent. being in the hands of brewers and dealers or consumed. It is impossible to separate that part of the hop supply which is in the hands of dealers from that which is owned by brewers, for the reason that in any cases brewers have purchased and own large quantities which they keep stored in the warehouses of dealers, withdrawing the hops gradually as they are needed for consumption. The hops of Bavaria are mostly collected and marketed at Nuremberg, though Bamberg and Munich are also important hop markets. Every large city in southern Germany deals more or less in hops, though in some of these places the quantity handled little beyond the supply needed for local consumption. The entire export of hops from the whole of Germany to all countries during the year 1889 was as follows: Austria, 1,100,000 lbs.; France, 3,500,000; Russia, 1,700,000; Belgium,

2,400,000; England, 8,000,000; United States, 4,000,000; other countries, 6,000,000; total, 26,700,000. The total exports of 1891 are estimated at 19,712,400 lbs, but the official statistics are not available until several months after the close of the year to which they refer. Hops are also imported into Germany, mainly from Bohemia and Hungary, the total imports for the whole Empire being 2,700,000 lbs. in 1885; in 1886, 2,300,000; in 1887, 2,500,000; in 1888, 2,400,000; and in 1889, 3,700,000. The range of prices for 1891 was as follows: In October, at the harvest season, 7 1-2d. to 1s. 2 1-2d. per pound. It should be understood, however, that these prices are the rates paid by dealers to the hop growers for their crop as picked, and without being cured, the curing process being usually performed in Germany by the dealers, whereas in England and the United States hops are uniformly dried by the farmers and delivered to the merchant cured, baled, and in marketable condition. The outlook for hop-growing in Germany can hardly be called favorable. The crop is an uncertain one both as regards yield and price. In a poor season the harvest, in all but the most favored localities, is apt to be meagre, though the ruling price may be high. In a good year there is invariably an overproduction with a corresponding depression in values, so that within a space of twelve months hops may sell at 20 marks or 400 marks for a given quantity of the same product. This uncertainty is especially distasteful to the German farmer, who usually is a man content with a moderate profit provided it be reasonably certain, but he has no capital which justifies him in taking great or uncertain chances. The Bavarian Government, recognizing the uncertainty of the culture, advises the peasants to restrict hop growing and turn their attention more to asparagus and small fruits. The manufacture and consumption of beer are steadily, though slowly, increasing in Germany, but the use of hops does not increase proportionately, for the reason that notwithstanding the rigid restrictions and penalties that are imposed on all adulterations in brewing, the use of substitutes which cheapen the cost of production, is constantly augmenting. It is not probable that American hops will, for a long time at least, find an important market in Germany, for the reasons that this country already produces a surplus, which forms an important article of export, and because most German brewers who have tried American hops affect to believe that they are not as suitable as those of native growth.

ROADS AND GOOD GOVERNMENT.

The following from Merchants' Review is intended for American readers, but in its application it can be made to reach Canadians:

The question of the improvement of the condition of country roads is certainly receiving the attention it deserves, says our contemporary, important as it is to farmers, country merchants, and receivers of country produce. One can hardly take up a paper or magazine which does not contain either an account of a meeting of some organization for the improvement of the roads or an article emphasizing the importance of the movement. But the question of good roads is not of greater moment than the question of good municipal, or town, or county government, and yet, although good roads, like good, clean streets, may be expected to follow good government—the proper care of the public thoroughfare being one of the duties of the authorities in our cities and towns—there seems to be a great deal of indifference among those chiefly concerned, that is to say, the business men, as to the kind of government which is furnished. In most of the larger cities good paving is conspicuously absent, while street cleaning appears to be one of the lost arts. The result is that trucking or carting is made more expensive than it ought to be, while the goods of retail merchants are often injured by the clouds of dust and dirt which arise in the streets during dry weather, and enter through every crevice in the store windows and door to the greater or less detriment of the stock. The conditions of the streets of the leading cities ought to receive greater attention than usual this summer, because there is a probability of cholera making its appearance here, but how can the public expect to have clean streets with such governments as those of New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Boston and other large cities. Immense sums of money may be spent in spasmodic attempts to avoid the threatened danger, but if they are misspent, as they probably will be if they are allowed to pass through the hands of incompetent and corrupt office-holders, the work will almost certainly be badly done.

Municipal government, with hardly an exception, is excessively costly in this country, and is as inefficient as it is expensive. The consequence of the waste of money in this manner is a heavy tax rate, which in turn affects the cost of living of urban communities. Rents are enormously high in most eastern cities, as many retail merchants know from sad experience, and one of the reasons is the high tax rate, for which the squandering of municipal funds in excessive salaries and other directions is responsible.

Good, yet economical government, whether in towns or cities, is certainly a great desideratum, but it will seldom be seen unless the public bestirs itself in that direction as vigorously as it seems to be doing in the endeavor to better the condition of the country thoroughfares. The trouble is no doubt that partisan feelings are allowed to interfere with movements for reform in municipal and town governments. The Democrat will not sacrifice what he deems his party principles by voting for a good candidate of Republican proclivities, and the Republican voter will have nothing to do with the Democrat who runs on a reform ticket for a city or town office. State and national elections are held at the same time as the local elections, and the issues are mixed by crafty politicians and partisan newspapers, whereas local issues should not and need not be involved in those upon which the more momentous elections are decided. Instead of local governments being administered in a business-like manner by men who understand how to transact business, and therefore in an economical and efficient way, they are placed in the hands of political machines, the managers of which are only interested in extracting as much money as possible from the taxpayers' pockets for the benefit of themselves and their hordes of followers. The system is so bad that it is wonderful the results are not worse than they really are. Good municipal and town government ought to be as dear to the hearts of the public as good roads, but the Greater desideratum is in danger of being neglected in the agitation for the lesser although still important object.

W. F. Beck & Co., wholesale wines, Montreal, are in difficulties, and a demand of assignment has been made.

Edward Snell, merchant at Jamestown, has had to assign. C. B. Armstrong, of London, is in charge of the stock.

W. J. Kirk, general merchant, Webbwood, has assigned to J. W. Lawrence, and a meeting of creditors has been called for 28th inst.

A general storekeeper at St. John, N.B., named John Calder, has been unable to make financial ends meet, and so he has assigned.

Auguste Demers, groceries and liquor dealer, Montreal, has assigned. He owes about $6,000, and the largest creditor is A. J. Charlebois, $2,778.

W. A. P. McPherson, general merchant, Little Grace Bay, N.S., has assigned. So has Jacob S. Hart, who is in the same line of business at Whycocomagh, N.S.

W. & R. Bryne, run a general store in Cupids, Nfd, but they could not woo enough customers and so woe has come upon them they having applied to be declared insolvents.

Joseph Amable Thibault, grocer, has assigned at the demand of the Rev. Jude Amable Thibault, with liabilities of $5,377 81. The largest creditor is the Rev. J. A. Thibault, $2,000.

Groceries, dry goods and fresh meat. Carney & Barrett, of Nelson, B.C., were in all these, but could not get enough out of them to make financial ends meet, and so they have assigned.

A meeting of the creditors of Fred Johnson, of Walkerville, was held in Windsor, Friday afternoon. It was agreed to extend the time for three, six and nine months. Mr. Johnson's total indebtedness is $1,900, and his assets are about $2,400, which includes book accounts to the amount of $1,100. R. F. Sutherland was appointed trustee to take an assignment of the accounts and a mortgage on the chattels for security.

Shipley & Co., private bankers, Ailsa Craig, have suspended payment. Liabilities are estimated at $66,000. The bank was largely taken advantage of by stock dealers and farmers, and the deposits were large. One farmer in the neighborhood is said to have had $12,000 on deposit. At a meeting of the creditors, held Saturday, an offer of 40c. on the dollar was refused and the estate was ordered to be wound up.

THE BEET CROP.

Mr. Licht's report of Jan. 21st., gives the following estimate in tons of the European Beet Sugar production of the 1892-93 campaign, as compared with the three preceeding campaigns:

	1892-3	1891-2	1890-1	1889-90
Germany	1,210,000	1,198,156	1,331,985	1,261,607
Austria	772,000	788,156	778,473	753,078
France	600,000	651,377	694,037	787,989
Russia	460,000	550,991	544,162	451,711
Belgium	185,000	180,377	205,623	221,180
Holland	75,000	46,815	76,615	69,765
Other Countries	97,000	88,635	80,000	80,000
Total	3,402,000	3,501,920	3,710,895	3,633,630

ANTI-TOBACCO.

The enemies of tobacco have not yet died out. An Anti-Tobacco Association still continues to exist, we believe, but its outlook cannot be very cheerful. Smokers are still liable to be told that Balzac wrote: "Le tabac detruit le corps, attaque l'intelligence, et hebeete une nation"; and the opinions of certain doctors are often quoted with great unction; but lovers of tobacco console themselves with the trite reflection that doctors disagree, and with the thought that if tobacco is a poison, it must be, as Fontenelle said of coffee, a very slow poison. Most of us will continue to applaud Lord Lytton's summing up: "A pipe! It is a great soother, a pleasant comforter. Blue devils fly before its honest breath. It ripens the brain. it opens the heart; and the man who smokes thinks like a sage and acts like a Samaritan."—All the Year Round.

The New Era Pattern

AS the year 1893 marks a new era in the Glass Trade, with its improved facilities for producing better and cheaper goods than heretofore, and being always on the alert studying the requirements of our customers and the growing demand for cheaper, yet serviceable goods, we have much pleasure in offering our patrons

at prices that speak for themselves the best value in the market.

For the convenience of ordering a sample lot, thus avoiding over-stocking, we have had "THE NEW ERA GLASS" put up in small assorted cases (no extra charge for package) containing thirty-nine pieces as follows:

- $\frac{1}{4}$ Doz. Large Table Sets (Sugar, Butter, Cream and Spoon-Holder).
- $\frac{1}{2}$ " Half-Gallon Pitchers.
- $\frac{3}{4}$ " Fruit Bowls, High Foot.
- $\frac{1}{2}$ " Covered Bowls, High Foot.
- $\frac{1}{2}$ " Cake Stands.

Each of these articles can be sold retail at 25 cents, and is an honest bargain at this figure.

Your customers want these goods and you cannot do without them if you want to keep abreast with the times, so don't let your neighbors get ahead of you but order at once, the goods will sell themselves. If you cannot order ten cases now, send for a sample package: we know you will soon want more.

Excessive taxation seems to be the bane of Montreal merchants. The Province of Quebec is in the position of a stock company whose finances have become so depleted that repeated calls have to be made on the shareholders in order to keep the concern afloat. The Quebec Government finds itself at the moment with a $300,000 shortage staring it in the face, and in order to provide for this it recently made a further call upon the business men of the Province in the shape of what is commonly termed a new tax. Under the prevailing condition of small margins the increased tax was bad enough, but when it is imagined that there is not an equal distribution of the burden it is made still more irksome. This is just how it is with the Montreal merchants. And it is their Quebec confreres who they claim are not bearing an equal share. If there is one thing more than another against which the ordinary everyday man revolts it is the carrying of more than his share of a burden. Of course if his partner in the undertaking happens to be decrepit or—well, his girl—it may be different. But that is an exception. It is the rule that is now being considered. And then the specific gravity of a financial burden is greater than that of any other kind. The Montreal men have held meetings, and some of them have affirmed by all that was earthly that they would not pay the tax. But inexorable governments in search of money are not put off in this way; and so the better plan of sending a deputation to interview the Government at Quebec was decided upon. This deputation visited the provincial capital last week and urged Premier Taillon and Treasurer Hall to put them on an equal footing with the merchants of Quebec city as regards the new taxes. As far as the alleged anomaly between the merchants of the two cities was concerned Mr. Hall inferred that its presence was not apparent to him, and as for the taxes there was no alternative but for the Government to impose them, as the shortage of $300,000 must be provided for. These taxes would consequently have to be paid, under protest if necessary. About all the solace that the deputation could get was an acknowledgment from the premier that the tax was too high, and that an effort would be made to lighten it another year.

Under the provisions of the reciprocity treaty between Canada and France, our canned lobsters will be admitted into that country free during the coming season. France is one of our best customers for lobsters, and the prospect of the larger trade which the removal of the duty tend will to stimulate is naturally a source of satisfaction to canners. At present she is our third largest customer for canned lobsters. Last year she took 776,520 pounds valued at $134,944. The previous year the figures were 328,126 and $59,946 respectively. Great Britain is our largest with 4,994,695 pounds valued at $807,814 and the United States comes next with 4,253,016 pounds valued at $680,477. Germany stands fourth, but she only took 113,160 pounds valued at $17,915. The total lobster export to all countries for the year ending June 30, 1892, was 10,219,868 pounds valued at $1,655,062. Compared with the totals of the previous year this is a decrease of 1,780,868 in weight and of $96,688 in value, but this is more than accounted for by the falling off in the exports to the United States, that country having taken from us over $2,600,000 worth less. Great Britain on the other hand took nearly half a million pounds more, and France, as already noted, increased her purchases appreciably. With a freer market in France and a growing trade with Great Britain, the prospects for the Canadian lobster canner are anything but dark.

An editorial which appeared in THE GROCER some three weeks ago regarding the advance in soap appears to have been much to the taste of certain trade journals. Anyhow a number of them reproduced it, but few of them deigned to give credit, and among the transgressors noticed is the Dominion Grocer.

Because the Quebec Legislature has struck lager beer from the list of beverages accounted as intoxicants it is no guarantee that the man who imbibes too freely of the liquid will not become inebriated. Of course it is the Ontario man we have in our mind at the moment. Environment may make all the difference in the world. And then lager beer in Quebec and lager beer in Ontario may be two different things.

An exchange offers some advice regarding "the nicest and most convenient way of serving watermelon." What Torontonians at the moment want to know most is how to serve up the water without the melon.

The list of foods and liquids that we are allowed to eat and drink in their natural state is gradually becoming more limited. Those of us who live in Toronto are enjoined to cook city water at least seven minutes, on pain of contracting typhoid fever or some other equally dreaded disease. And people everywhere—that is in civilized countries—are urged to boil their milk because of the terrible tuberculosis germ that may be lurking therein. The London Lancet has just added another article to the list of goods that should be cooked before eating. And, strange to say, said article is nothing else than butter. The Lancet says that according to recent researches there were contained in one gramme of butter (as much as would go on the point of a knife) 2,465,555 micro-organisms from the centre of the pat, and as many as 47,250,000 on the outside. Just imagine taking into the system several millions of these microbes! But what the eye doesn't see the heart won't grieve over. There is that much satisfaction about it, anyhow. And then, too, the afore-said experiment was probably made in Europe. "In fact," continues our authority, "in some cases it is tolerably certain that the number of organisms swallowed with a moderately large piece of bread and butter may exceed that of the whole population of Europe. Butter that had been kept in a refrigerator was also examined and showed a marked reduction in the number of bacteria (a pointer here for grocers who desire to keep their customers healthy) and the same result was also obtained by the addition of common salt. Samples of artificial butter, curiously enough, were invariably found to be much poorer in bacteria than ordinary butter; thus while the smallest number found in one gramme was 747,059, in real butter considerably over two million microbes was the minimum. Bacilli are evidently as partial to good butter as we mortals. Two varieties of bacilli were isolated and described, and inasmuch as they were found to be constantly present in butter it is thought they were probably specific micro-organisms of a non-pathogenic character, or, to put it in ordinary lay parlance, microbes of a character that may not create disease. "But," concludes the Lancet, "at any rate, it seems clear that butter as well as milk is capable of carrying and fostering organisms, and on this account it behooves us, under certain circumstances, to melt our butter to boiling point in addition to boiling the milk." Melted butter! Whew! It may be all right on fish, but on bread it is quite another thing. This generation hasn't been raised that way. Try it on the next.

While on the bacilli line it might be just as well to mention that recent experiments in Europe have demonstrated that the cholera bacillus does not live beyond three hours in Pilsener, Patzenhofer or Munich beer, two hours in Berlin white beer, and five minutes in white wine, fifteen minutes in red wine and twenty minutes in cider. In boiled milk it succumbed in the tenth day. Coffee and tea infusions proved fatal in from two to four hours. The bacillus flourished in chocolate.

There are signs that the Ice King will soon release the firm grasp he has had on nature. The sun is getting stronger, the days longer, and somebody claims to have even seen the first spring robin. To the live grocer these things are a reminder that the period is swinging around when he should overhaul and take an inventory of his stock. During the winter months many articles have probably accumulated that it is not at all desirable that he should carry over. Some of them he is aware would spoil, and then he does not forget that every dollar's worth of goods carried over means just so much dormant capital. Losses from perishable goods or dormant capital are not to be cultivated at any time; in these days of keen competition they are to be studiously avoided. There are some people who are always to be caught with the bait of bargains. The wide awake grocer knows this, so he gathers together the odds and ends, and aided by a little judicious advertising, rapidly works off the undesirable stock. He is thus left with proportionally more money wherewith to secure new goods and additional space wherein to place them.

A well dressed window is something that every grocer or general merchant should aim at maintaining at all times and at all seasons. At the period when spring is evolving from the departing winter this is most desirable. In some stores winter appears to have put the goods in the window asleep as well as nature in the fields, forests and gardens. The time devoted to arranging the store window is never misspent. An attractive window catches nearly everybody. In spite of what anyone may say to the contrary, we are all more or less of an æsthetic turn of mind, and it is the pretty things that please us. This characteristic is not confined to dress, architecture, painting, etc., but it includes the arrangement and display of goods in stores. This is seen in the way in which people gather day after day around the windows of certain merchants in particularly the larger towns and cities. These stores are known to practically every person in the respective towns who goes shopping. Some of them may not even know the name of the merchant who runs it, but they know the location of the store; and the ladies talk about it during their little tete-a-tetes. All this means so much advertising; and a business man needs all the advertising he can get these days.

A number of Halifax business men are asking the Dominion Government for an appropriation of $10,000 for the development of the Canada-West India trade. In pursuance of this they have sent a copy of a pamphlet to each member of the House. If their desire is granted they promise as a result an increased trade between the two countries within the next two and a half years equal to $2,500,000 annually, presuming that freight and the fiscal policy of Canada are favorable to a development of the trade. To secure the West India market has long been the ambition of Canada, but it has not been until during the last few years that anything really practical in the way of attempting to acquire it has been done. It will be remembered that the Minister of Finance made a trip to that part of the world two or three years ago with that end in view. Much fruit is yet to be seen as a result of this trip. The Jamaica exhibition did a good deal towards bringing about the desired state of affairs. The Canadian food products opened the eyes of the people of Jamaica, many of them, they confessed, were superior to what they were in the habit of getting from other sources. And the fact that Canada and the West Indies owed allegiance to the same flag was a further incentive for the two peoples to trade with each other. Unfortunately for Canada the United States got into the West Indian market to all intents and purposes before we had much more than thought of it. In addition to this Uncle Sam is not only a larger customer, but, and what is even more advantageous, he has better facilities for carrying on the trade. Between the boats running out of the ports of the respective countries there has heretofore been practically no comparisons. So bad has the Canadian service been that but few even of our own people patronized it either when they wanted to visit the West Indies themselves or desired to send freight. Then the inadequacy of the postal and telegraphic services between Canada and the islands was another serious drawback. Notwithstanding these untoward circumstances, however, Canadians are not disheartened, as is evidenced at the moment by the action of the Halifax merchants. As a result of the agitation the prospects are brightening. A better class of steamers are getting into the trade, and the volume of business is enlarging. Manufacturers, canners, lumbermen, millers are particularly interested in the matter, and all that is wanted in order to secure a larger share of the West India market is perseverance and care in selecting goods and in shipping them. Last year there was an appreciable increase in the sale of flour to the islands, but unfortunately, through the carelessness of our own millers, who probably forgot that they were not shipping to a lot of savages, neglected to follow the instructions that Commissioner Brown was so particular to give them. As a result a cloud has been cast upon the good name that Canadian flour earned at the exhibition. Climatic influences and how to cope with them are among the chief things that exporters to tropical countries should always consider.

A UNIQUE COFFEE-CHICORY TIN.

Mixed food products are not objectionable to a good many as long as the fact is known and the ingredients are not unhealthy. It is when the foreign substance has been surreptitiously put in with a view to cheapening the cost that the consumer protests. There are some people who prefer a little admixture of the foreign. Coffee drinkers, for instance, like a little chicory with their favorite beverage, but at the same time some even of these would object to the mixture being palmed off upon them for the pure article. People want what they pay for.

It is said that necessity is the mother of invention. At the moment we have before us an evidence of the truthfulness of this. The English retail grocers, it seems, have been having a rather hard time of it lately steering clear of the courts regarding the sale of mixed coffees, there having been no fixed standard for the legal admixture of coffee and chicory. But in the midst of the emergency a London firm has issued a one pound tin containing, in separate compartments, a half pound each of coffee and chicory, the contents and weight being plainly stated on the label, thus securing the trade against any risk of legal proceedings. The tin, judging by the advertisement before us, is neat and attractive, and something like it would, we should fancy, take well on this market.

A DEAL IN TALLOW.

Tallow has been attracting considerable attention of late in Montreal provision trade circles, and the dealing in it during the past few weeks makes it look as though a speculative deal was being worked. The demand for it has been so brisk of late that prices have advanced considerably, and stock which could be bought a fortnight ago for 2c. could not be touched to-day for 4c., while rendered stock has advanced from 5 to 7½c. during the same time. The latter is perhaps an extreme figure, as one house in Montreal claims to have disposed of about three tons recently at 7c. One large soap manufacturer is said to be picking up all the tallow he can find, having already secured a very large stock which he considers as "gilt edge" property. No definite reason is apparent on the surface for the activity and advance, and the general assumption is that it is a purely speculative move, for if there is any special news to affect the market it is being kept pretty dark by those who know anything about it. One reason advanced is that one of the large railroad corporations is substituting tallow for crude oil for lubricating purposes. The public cable on Monday week reported stocks in Liverpool exhausted, 36s. being a nominal quotation. It may be also that the firmness in seal and lard oil may have something to do with the state of affairs, but the principals in the deal, as we have said, are not giving out any particulars.

A HEAVY HERRING MARKET.

Owing to the strict observance of Lent enjoined by the Roman Catholic hierarchy this season the fish market in Montreal has been a remarkably active and firm one, and the fish dealers have been recouping themselves for the two previous bad seasons due to the prevalence of "the grippe." An exception has to be made, however, in the case of pickled herring, which is the single sore spot of the market. Dealers say there are fully 2,000 barrels in Montreal on which the holders stand to lose a pile of money. Some of this stock was held a short time ago for $5.25 on spot in Montreal, but holders now would be glad to sell at $3.80, some of the stock being very unreliable. The secret of the peculiar situation of this line of fish seems to be the imposition of a heavy duty in the French West India Islands which made it unprofitable for Halifax dealers to ship to those markets, the result being that an important outlet was shut off. The only available market therefore was Western Canada and the American markets, and of course a much larger supply was diverted in this direction from the cause above mentioned, receipts increasing from week to week until Montreal dealers could not make out where all the fish were coming from and frequent telegrams from Halifax correspondents offering car lots at $3.90 to $4.00, only added to their curiosity. Briefly some 8,000 to 10,000 bbls. of herring which should have gone south from Halifax came here, and at last the facts coming out prices fell off very rapidly. The very low prices however has greatly increased the consumption so that there has been more herring turned over in Montreal this season than ever before owing to the special circumstances under comment. Whether the demand will prove sufficient to absorb all the stock remains to be seen, but at present the herring market is very easy.

STOCKS OF TALLOW IN LONDON.

The position of tallow, writes a correspondent of the Grocers' Chronicle deserves particular attention at the present time, owing to the lowness of stocks. On December 31st, there were only 4,544 casks in London warehouses, compared with 8,396 casks at the end of 1891. Taking the total quantity in London, Liverpool, Antwerp, Havre, and Paris, the figures were 3,233 tons, against 7,936 tons on December 31st, 1890, and 15,581 tons on December 31st, 1890. The chief reduction in the stocks has taken place during the last quarter of 1892, for on August 31st. there were 17,437 casks warehoused in London. To the scarcity of home supplies both here and on the continent may be attributed the great demand for colonial produce, which has so reduced stocks. The 4,439 casks offered at public sale in London up to Friday last have been readily sold at advanced rates. In September, "fine colonial mutton" was selling at 26s. 6d. and "beef" at 25s. per cwt. At the end of December both descriptions were quoted 2s. higher, but since that the best "mutton" has fetched 31s. per cwt. and "beef" 29s. Other descriptions have also participated in the improvement. Not since March, 1891, have London stocks been so low as at present.

CONSUMPTION OF CANNED GOODS.

The fact that all canned vegetables have met with ready sale the past season is doubtless influencing the establishment of canneries throughout the country, says Interstate Grocer. The consumption of canned goods has enormously increased, and it is doubtful if all the new factories being established will be able to increase production sufficiently to meet the demand next season. Prices have advanced heavily this season on canned corn and tomatoes, the great staples, and jobbers do not think that supplies will be sufficient to go round even at the higher prices, and, in spite of the fact that last year's output was the largest ever produced.

CHATS WITH BUSINESS MEN.

Coming down Jarvis street the other morning—I occasionally get down town mornings—I fell into conversation with Mr. H. W. Cuff regarding the all-absorbing topic—the weather. Now Mr. Cuff ranks among the pioneer business men of the city, and consequently has seen a good many winters. After the usual salutations, he remarked, with something almost akin to a sigh: “Well, there was a time when I was delighted to see such winters as this; but not now. My memory carries me back forty years, and I don’t remember a winter during that time when we had so much snow and such continuous hard weather. I think it was in the winter of ’51, when, however, we had a terrible lot of snow. To give you an idea: In King street, after the snow had been shoveled from the sidewalks and into the middle of the road, we actually could not see the people walking on the other side of the street from where we happened to be standing, so high were the intervening snow banks. And when we sat in an upstairs window the sleighs passing by seemed to be almost on a level with us as they rose and fell in the gullies and hills that had been formed. I can tell you there were lots of flooded cellars that spring, but nobody thought of suing the city for damages in those days. Probably it was because the City Council was too poor to pay damages,” he concluded, as he pulled his cap closer down over his ears and dodged across King street in front of a trolley car.

“This fellow who is going around selling new maple sugar tried to work his little game on me,” said an east end grocer to me the other night; “but he wasn’t smart enough to catch me. I am too old a bird for that. My early days were spent on a farm, and I knew that new maple syrup could not be obtained in February. When I asked him how it was possible to get new maple sugar now, he remarked in an off-handed manner, ‘Oh, we had a few very mild days up in our county, causing the sap to run, and we took advantage of it, don’t you see. How much would you like?’ he said, turning the line of conversation. I told him I didn’t want any of his trash, and furthermore that if he didn’t get out pretty quick that I would kick him out. He got.”

“That puts me in mind of an experience I had in Port Perry,” remarked a bye stander. “I was walking down the principal street a few years ago in the month of January, when in one of the store windows I saw the words: ‘New maple syrup for sale here.’ My curiosity was awakened and so I entered the store and asked for ten cents’ worth. ‘We are just out, sir,’ replied the little urchin who was minding the store, ‘but if you’ll wait a few minutes we will have some. We’re just making it and it is nearly ready.’”

A clerk in a downtown grocery store recently sold a woman a large quantity of saltpetre washing soda. The woman’s wash did not turn out as well as usual that week; in fact it turned out anything but well. The next week she had the same experience. After the third attempt it dawned upon her that something might be wrong with the washing soda. When the discovery was made there was an irate woman and an apologetic clerk. It is dangerous to mention salt petre or washing soda to that clerk, for a strong man is he and brave, even though an indignant woman did humiliate him before his compeers behind the counter.

BYSTANDER.

THE FIRST PRICE-CUTTER.

It is a curious fact, for a fact it appears to be, says Tobacco, that the art of cutting prices is an imported luxury.

Many years ago it appears to have been comparatively unknown in the trade of this country, and at that time, when business was conducted upon steady, old-fashioned conservative lines, it would not have been considered respectable for any man to deliberately undersell his neighbors in the barefaced way practiced by some individuals at the present time, whose conscience must be as hardened as the hide of a rhinoceros.

When the first cutting store (for it was called a store in distinction to the regular respectable shop) was introduced into the English trade, long credits were given as a matter of course by tradesmen to anyone who asked for them, and a man who paid cash for his supplies paid the retailer just as heavy a profit as the man who paid once in three years.

A dealer in Regent street, London, about 1870, issued placards and circulars stating that he had seen the injustice of this practice, and that he intended henceforth to discriminate in favor of his cash customers, allowing them a discount of 10 to 15 per cent. He put his head into a hornet’s nest, for his credit customers insisted on paying the new cash price instead of liquidating their long standing bill, and the poor man became insolvent from sheer pressure of dead capital sunk in his business according to old fashioned orthodox methods.

He should have collected his outstanding accounts before inaugurating any departure.

Dating from this, the large co-operative associations began to be formed, admitting the public as shareholders and subscribers, and the prices at these stores were cut down to a cash basis in contradistinction to the old scale of large profits and long credits. The success of these institutions is now a trade proverb, and it is stated by our older merchants that it was owing to the success of these institutions that cutting was first imported into the United States.

A PRODUCT OF VENEZUELA.

“Caracas chocolate,” as the product of all Venezuela is called, writes a Caracas correspondent in the Philadelphia Record, is certainly the best in the world, and the best of it comes from Chuao plantation, belonging to the University of Caracas, which derives a fine revenue from its annual output of 2,000 pounds, or thereabouts. The whole country exports some 75,000 pounds a year. Strange to say, chocolate costs more here, where it is grown and manufactured, than in New York city, for the simple reason that very little, if any, of the genuine article is sold in the latter market. You may buy what is said to be “Caracas chocolate” in New York for fifty cents a pound, while here, at the factories, before any duties or costs of transportation have been added, it sells for 65 cents a pound. The best cocoa beans cost 40 cents a pound on the plantation; but American manufacturers have a way of increasing the weight of the beans and correspondingly reducing their value by a process of “simple addition”—of that cheap, heavy and harmless substance known as pipe clay. It weighs about five times as much as cocoa and does not materially change the taste of the beverage—for those who do not know the difference. To learn what chocolate really is, one should drink it where it grows, amid surroundings in accord; in a Caracas patio, for example, reclining in a hammock, half intoxicated by the odor of orange flowers and orchids, and served by some dark-eyed, round armed Dolores, Panchita or Mercedes. It constitutes the universal desayuno, taken immediately on arising, with a bit of crusty bread to sustain one’s inner man until the noonday almuerzo. The Venezuelan producer dries his cocoa beans thoroughly in the sun, then ships them in gunny sacks to market. The manufacturer grinds them into a fine gray powder that looks like Graham flour, mixes them with plenty of papelon (native sugar), and flavors the compound with the juice of the vanilla bean. It is then boiled again, poured into moulds, and when hardened in the chocolate of commerce.

HOW TO INSURE SUCCESS.

An English journal gives the following directions for insuring success in business:

Buy cheaply,
Pay smartly,
Cry loudly,
Sell quickly,
Cash only.

“Buy cheaply,” that is, in the best market.

“Pay smartly,” and take your discount.

“Cry loudly,” that is, advertise well.

“Sell quickly,” at a fair profit.

“Cash only,” and save bad debts.

An advance in paper bags is expected in the United States.

IT IS NOT CREDITED.

Reports have been wired to some sections of the country claiming a failure of the Ecuadorian coffee and cocoa crops, but the trade here heard nothing of importance from that locality, and think the story is simply a revival of very old "news." The cocoa crop of 1891 was 150,000 quintals, or 46 per cent. less than that of 1890. This reduced the exports by at least 35 per cent. and has also, of course, affected the import trade, the general prosperity of the country, and the revenue of the Government. The rice crop was also a failure, not enough being produced for home consumption. This want was supplied by Peru and India. Sugar was a better crop, and some was exported to Central America, but little being sent to England, which had taken the greater part of the surplus of 1890. The cultivation of coffee is not extensive, and methods of growers are unsatisfactory, but there is a general tendency toward improvement and plenty of land available for the industry.—N. Y. Bulletin

A QUESTION OF PACKAGES.

The style of package has a great deal to do with the sale of most classes of goods, remarks the Winnipeg Commercial. Manufacturers who do an extensive trade well understand this. In undertaking to cater for a new market, the first move of the manufacturer should be to learn the style of package required for that market. Neglect of this point frequently leads to failure and loss, where a little regard for the peculiarities of the market would have brought about success. Superior products are sometimes passed over, and an inferior article taken, simply because the style of package does not suit the requirements of the market. The manufacturer who would do an extensive and widely distributed trade in package goods, must, therefore, study the peculiar requirements of each market.

Even in our own country there is a wide difference in the requirements of various markets, in the matter of style of package of some of our most staple goods. To show this we do not require to go beyond the leading commodity of flour. Beginning at the extreme east, we find that the trade demands that flour shall be put up in barrels. Millers who do a maritime province trade understand this. Coming east to Montreal the trade calls for 140 pound sacks principally. Toronto and west requires 140 pound sacks, and a considerable number of 98 pounds sacks. In Winnipeg the trade takes 98 and 49 pound sacks. In British Columbia, the Victoria market calls for 49 pound sacks, but they must be in jute only, whereas the usual rule is to make 98 pound sacks of jute, and 49 and 24 pound sacks of cotton. On the mainland of British Columbia the 49 pound sack is what is wanted also, but, unlike Victoria, a cotton sack only is wanted. This shows some of the peculiarities of our own market in such a staple commodity as the staff of life. Manufacturers in other lines of goods have also to provide for similar conditions. When it comes to the export flour trade still further styles of packages have to be provided. The export trade is usually done in jute sacks, and the British market requires 280 and 140 pound sacks. A barrel of flour is always net weight but a sack is always gross weight.

VIEWING THE RICE SITUATION.

Commenting upon the rice situation, the Louisiana Planter says: "When we come to look into this matter we find that Louisiana cleaned rice is not unusually cheap, and that it is rough rice alone that is selling at such distressingly low figures. The margin between rough and clean rice being greater than during similar periods of depression some years back. There is evidently an excessive margin of profit in milling rice, considering the present difference between the prices of rough and clean rice, and this can be remedied by the encouragement of the proposed new rice mills in various parts of the state. Increased competition in milling would increase the price of rough rice or lower the price of cleaned rice, either of which results would benefit the rice planter by excluding all competing foreign rices."

CANNED FRUITS IN THE WEST.

The O'Kell & Morriss Fruit Canning Co. held its annual meeting in Victoria, B.C., last week, and it was stated that the financial statement showed a profit of 25 per cent. on six months' operations. Ten per cent. of this was paid in dividends and 15 per cent. carried forward to reserve fund. Considering all the difficulties surrounding the fruit canning business in B. C.—the dearth of labor, lack of fruit of the right varieties, the limited market, etc., etc.—this seems to be rather remarkable.

Out of the directors' report the following extracts are taken:

"One of the first problems we have had to devote attention to has been to find a market for our products. Our principal sales so far have been in Victoria and Nanaimo, but we find that every year some $15,000 worth of jams and jellies are imported for consumption in Victoria alone. We shall use our utmost exertions to develop the local market, and intend to go all down the line to Winnipeg, the Northwest districts not adapted for fruit culture offering a fine field for the distribution of our products. As we are the only manufacturers of orange marmalade in Canada, we expect to sell it from the Pacific coast through to the Atlantic.

"But we have another important branch which should be carefully developed, and that is the putting up of whole fruits in cans with very rich syrup. California has had this trade principally in the past, for she sends to England every year about 140,000 cases and receives back some $700,000. Anxious to build up an export as well as home trade, we sent four small cases, each containing six cans, to four large buyers in England. They were whole fruits put up in cans and we have received flattering notices concerning them from the greatest market in the world."—Winnipeg Commercial.

CANNED GOODS GOSSIP.

The Delhi Canning Co. intend putting up a silo to cure the pea vines and corn husks, at a cost of $800. Formerly this refuse has gone to waste.

The Strathroy Canning and Preserving Company recently sold ten carloads of their goods to a Canadian firm for shipment to Britain. The amount of the transaction figured up to $10,400, which pretty well clears out the stock put up last season. The balance will be held to supply the trade in the neighborhood.

A London report, February 11th, says: "Canned lobsters are difficult to find, even at the high quotations ruling. Oysters are both scarcer and dearer, and are now worth from 3s 6d to 5s 6d per case. The demand for salmon is by no means brisk, yet holders confess to have unbounded confidence in the article. California canned fruits are of slow sale, arrivals of last season's pack were entirely worked off, and to promote business, rather easier terms have in some instances been accepted, especially for apricots at 6s to 6s 6d per dozen tins. American apple rings are in good request at stiffer prices, and ordinary to fine quality have fetched 48s to 55s, with choice up to 60s. The boom in American tinned meats continues to extend itself.

The Lulu Island Canning Co., have dissolved partnership. B. J. Short, and J. J. Crane have retired. Geo. S. Dutcher will continue under the old style.

The scarcity of canned asparagus is becoming more pronounced, in New York, and former "asking" prices are not "inside" figures. Sales have been made to the jobbing trade at $3.65 to $3.75 for whole and $2.75 for tips.

The latest in the way of estimates of stocks of California raisins is 25 carloads for the Fresno district and 50 car loads for the entire Pacific Coast, or about 25 per cent. of the quantity held there a year ago. New York holdings are put down at about 80 carloads, against 125 or more at the corresponding period last year.

Prime red Alaska salmon commands $1.17½ on spot and up to $1.20 is realized for choice brands. It is understood that "outside" as well as Association brands will be closely controlled the coming season. Indications at present are that the entire 1893 pack will not exceed 600,000 cases.—N. Y. GROCERS' ADOPT PROFIT SHARING.

Sharing profits with employees on the part of the employers is not a new idea. In one form or another it has been practised for some considerable time. But the more recent phase of the system is that which includes all the employees of an establishment. When a salesman is engaged on a salary and commission basis, that is profit-sharing; and when a department manager is given an interest, not in the business, but in the profits, that is a direct example of profit-sharing which has been practised for years. But recently—that is, within the last score of years—many prominent firms throughout the country have adopted a system whereby all of their employees are given an interest in the business in the shape of a share of its profits. Beginning with the present year, several retail houses have adopted the system, notably two large concerns in Chicago, whereby every employee, from the cash boys and girls, to the department managers, are to have a sum at the end of each year in addition to their wages, which sum is dependent both on their individual efforts and on the success of the business as a whole.

The first class to adopt profit-sharing were the manufacturers, and almost without exception those who have taken this course are loud in their praise of the system. They claim that it is the best preventative of strikes known; that it insures good conduct, prevents hands quitting on slightest pretexts, since by so doing they forfeit their share of the division to be made at the end of the year, and gradually attracts to the factory the best, most reliable and steady hands. The same facts are reported by those who have tried the system among jobbers and retailers.

Among the latter class there are many ways in which the system is applied. But whatever the system it is usual to allow only those who have been connected with the establishment for a certain length of time to share in the profits, and good conduct is also essential. One method pursued is to take a portion of the total profit, which sum is an easily ascertained percentage of the total wages paid to employees, and then allot to each a percentage in addition to his salary for the year. Another is to pay to the clerks a percentage on the sales to each; and sometimes the two are combined, since the system based on the sales alone would not offer an inducement to employees of a large retail establishment other than clerks behind the counter; a manifest injustice to many employees. That the system is a success there can be little doubt, and its more enthusiastic advocates claim that but a few years will elapse before it will be generally adopted, and that in this adoption will be found a solution of many of our present labor troubles. While this may be too rosy a view, the favorable results that have attended its adoption in many parts of the country, and in all lines of trade should incline all merchants to view it favorably. That it increases the willingness and content of the employees must be certain, while it is asserted by those who have tried profit-sharing for a considerable term of years, that the business is made more profitable thereby. With such testimony from nearly all who have tested the principle there can be little doubt of its finding a recognition more and more general. If its adoption depended upon philanthropic motives it wouldn't stand "a ghost of a show" in this practical business age, but as it pays, the probabilities are all in its favor. It is the far-seeing merchant who takes advantage of it—the man who can do a little "philosophizing."—Commercial Enquirer.

THE CALIFORNIA PRUNES CROP.

Last season's crop of California prunes yielded a return of about 18,000,000 to 20,000,000 pounds, or a quantity say about one-third less than the previous year. It has been said in the past that the outturn of California fruits could always be depended upon, that the annual results would always be one way, viz., onward and upward, this claim being based upon the uniform character of the weather on the coast, and the perfect system of irrigation that would always insure sufficient moisture to the soil to provide nourishment for the growing crops. This theory has now been upset, as results show that there is as much uncertainty as to the harvest in that section as in any other portions of the country or world. During the maturing season last year the fruit was seriously affected by the prevalence of an exceedingly dry atmosphere, together with other unfavorable weather conditions, with the result as aforesaid. Singular to relate, the crops of other countries were similarly affected, that of France being much smaller than usual, and the products of Bohemia, Bosnia and Servia less than the anticipations that were entertained at the opening of the season. During the summer months of last year when negotiations began to be opened for fall shipments of the California product, growers and packers, observing the prospects for the fruit, placed what was then regarded very extravagant ideas upon contracts. Eastern and western buyers were informed of the condition of the growing fruit, but they accepted the information tendered in the light of a scare, and declined to be led into what they regarded as a scheme to bull the market for big returns. The season advanced, and the tune from the coast continued of a doleful character, so to convince themselves of the true situation, several of the leading houses of this city, Boston, Philadelphia and Chicago, sent representatives out to inspect the field, with the result of a full confirmation of the reports previously forwarded by the local authorities. Though the grounds for the full figures then asked were generally acknowledged, yet there was a hesitancy manifested to plunge deeply into contracts, as reliable information was lacking from the growing sections of Europe, and nothing positive was known regarding the probable opening prices of French, Turkish, etc. The season progressed, and the California packers, as a rule, held their ground. Contracts were occasionally made at the prices demanded, but buyers made their purchases with an inward protest, being unable to see their way clear for a profitable turn upon the goods they were contracting for. When France began cabling fancy quotations, and was seemingly indifferent to orders from this side, followed by extreme values for the Turkish and Bohemia crops, it became evident that the article prunes were to be accepted this year in the light of a comparative luxury. Those who purchased California began to change their ideas, and from believing themselves victims, they reversed their charges of folly to congratulations that they were able to secure the goods they did upon so reasonable a basis. During the winter season thus far there has been no consumptive demand that has appeared of a general character, yet the stock has gone out to a very liberal extent, as evidenced by the small supplies that are held in the various markets. Certainly this market is very lightly supplied, and Chicago and other points are not credited with holding any considerable quantity. Reports from the Pacific Coast state that the available quantity there is indeed small, as the fruit has been distributed and consumed by the people of that section, a very considerable portion going up the coast to Oregon markets, the crop of the latter state the past year having been sufficient to supply a very small percentage of the requirements. To sum the situation up we may say that though quotations of the several varieties of domestic and imported goods sound high as compared with previous years, the trade will undoubtedly find that they will be compelled to meet materially higher figures for the fruit before the spring season has far advanced.—N. Y. Bulletin.

FOOD ADULTERATION.

The bread we eat is no doubt sound when bought at the shops of bakers doing a large trade, but there is a certain quality of flour which deteriorates more and more. This is what an English contemporary has to say on the subject. The improved (?) system of grinding the corn in cylinders heats the flour before it is ready for kneading; the ovens are heated too rapidly, and there is the practice of using damaged corn, which is most reprehensible. In the golden age our forefathers were content to use water for the purpose of strengthening the milk; now it is adulterated with rice flour and pounded bullocks' and calves' brains, and slightly sweetened with a saccharine substance. Used as a substitute for butter, even margarine is often adulterated, and is simply some fatty substance colored with carrot juice and flavored with essence of nuts, and having only the appearance of sound margarine. Not only is chicory usually mixed with ground coffee, but there is an artificial berry manufactured and sold as coffee to a great extent. Frozen meat is taking the place of fresh meat; and any quantity of wine is sent into the market as claret and Burgundy which has not a single drop of grape juice in it. Many brewers have learned to dispense with barley, and several kinds of mineral waters are nothing more than river water disguised by the use of chemicals. A quantity of alcohol is distilled from some kind of wood, and even from coal; and olive oil is adulterated with rancid oil. No doubt there are numerous staples of food which are unadulterated by dealers who are scrupulous and honest, but they are becoming scarcer every day.

BOARDS OF TRADE.

The London Board of Trade will tender a banquet to C. P. R. officials on the completion of the new passenger station there.

The following were the officers elected at the sixth annual meeting of the Lindsay Board of Trade: President Mr. John Kennedy; Vice President, Mr. F. C. Taylor; Sec'y Treas., Mr. J. D. McMurchy; council—Messrs E. Flood, R. Sylvester, A. F. D. MacGachen, G. W. Beall, J. H. Sootheran, D. Ray, J. B. Knowlson and Col. Deacon. Messrs. Kennedy, Taylor, Deacon, MacGachen, and Sam Hughes M. P., were appointed a railway committee.

Kaslo is attempting to form a Board of Trade to aid in developing local industries.

The Owen Sound Board of Trade has elected these officers: President, Jas. McLauchlan, of the firm of James McLauchlan & Sons, by acclamation; vice-president, B. Allen; secretary-treasurer, James H. Rutherford; council, S. J. Parker, C. Eaton, J. C. Patterson, M. Kennedy, W. B. Stephens, John Wright, S. Lloyd, William Kough. After the appointment of arbitrators the question of the new fishery regulations were introduced and after some little discussion was referred to the council to take action.

A GOOD SUGGESTION.

The Baltimore correspondent of the Chicago Grocers' Criterion says:

"Tis a great pity that a large industry like that of canned goods cannot be put upon a solid footing, like provisions, grain, etc. It is impossible to know either here or elsewhere. Several have tried to get the statistics, and one has made special effort to do so, and to give it to the trade, but he is often duped by the packers. In a short season when prices are good, country packers like to magnify their importance by doing the same to their output. City packers count in their product all they sell, though most of it may have been purchased and counted at least once before. Brokers often report the sale of so many thousand cases, when in reality they have merely resold several times the same lot. The output of corn, so far as can be estimated, is almost equal to that of tomatoes, and is a more certain crop. There are three or four gentlemen in this market, whom experience would qualify—if they put their heads together—to make a nearer accurate estimate of a pack, than can be made from so-called packers' reports. The reports for 1892 would give an average for each packer in Maryland (counting them as 250), of corn about 3,000 cases, and of tomatoes about 4,000 cases. Rather small when it is well known that some of the city packers can a hundred thousand cases of tomatoes, and several as many as thirty and fifty thousand. Iowa's pack of corn is reported as only about a third of a million cases, when it is well known that three or four of her houses have a greater capacity than that. It is time to stop guessing, and one of the most important things for the next national convention of canners to consider should be the means of accurately ascertaining and compiling the new output each year of canned goods, of each kind, as well as of knowing the quantities carried over."

THE EVOLUTION OF FRUIT.

Many of our best fruits and vegetables are the result of carefully cultivating wild plants of the same general character, says an exchange, and adds that the nectarine is a variety of the peach, and the latter a development of the almond. The shaddock, citron, orange and lemon are products of the common wild lime; celery is a development of smallage; filberts of hazelnuts; the plum tree has its origin in the sloe; apples of every kind are developments of the common wild crab; asparagus was originally an insignificant marine plant, and the marine Brassica oleracea, a leafy seaweed, is the original of cabbage, cauliflower, savory, kale and half a dozen allied plants.

CHINA FLAVORED WITH VANILLA.

A few have it that vanilla, used as a flavoring, is intoxicating, but those are only the people whom a piece of underdone steak makes tipsy, and to whom green vegetables give all kinds of complaints. On some parts of the continent a small piece of vanilla is put into the teapot together with the tea.

But there is yet a daintier way of taking your vanilla flavor with your tea, and this "raffine" manner is English and not continental, says the New York Tribune.

When the tea or coffee service is being made, vanilla flavor is added to the china when it is in the potter's hands, and thus it is baked into every article of the set.

Whenever afterward the tea things get hot as they are being used they exhale a faint aroma of vanilla which, to the fastidious, may be preferable to the actual infusion into beverages of a piece of the square stem of the aromatic vanilla plant.

THE LEAD LINING OF A TEA CHEST

It is often said that tea chests are lined with tinfoil, but just as there is no lead in a lead pencil, so there is no tin in this tinfoil. The thin lining consists of lead, and is said to be the purest lead that can be found. Among the countless undeveloped resources of the Celestial empire is a supply of lead which would yield millions annually if properly worked, and from the inexhaustible supply the Chinese take what they need for making linings for tea chests. The lead is melted in small vessels and poured out while hot.

Before it has time to cool it is pressed into a sort of mold, and when enough squares have been produced they are soldered together, and the sheet thus formed is placed in the chest as a lining. Then the top layer of lead is soldered on, and all possibility of the tea losing strength on the voyage is at an end. The lead is so pure and the solder used is so fine that the lining of an empty chest is worth more than the chest itself, and is in great demand for making the best quality of solder.—St. Louis Globe Democrat.

SOLDIERS CARRY COLD TEA.

Universal experience teaches us that tea exhilarates without intoxicating, stimulates the circulation, excites the brain to increased activity, promotes wakefulness, and banishes the sense of weariness.

It also deadens the sensation of hunger and increase the power of fasting. It will cool the body when hot and warm it when cold.

In tropical countries it has been found to be a most valuable restorative when taken by soldiers on long and fatiguing marches.

Lord Wolseley, who is a great advocate for tea as a beverage on which to do hard work, gave orders that the water bottles of the soldiers whom he led on the two famous and exhausting expeditions of the Red river, and up the Nile to Khartoum, should be filled with cold tea, and he is convinced that, whereas alcohol induces fatigue, tea will give power to endure and overcome it.—The Hospital.

ANCIENT SUGAR REFINING.

The modern system of sugar refining with improved machinery and an expensive plant, when compared with the methods of the ancients, presents a striking contrast, remarks Winnipeg Commercial. The early mode of making white loaf sugar is simple. And travellers in eastern countries occasionally witness sugar making in a primitive and economical way, that might be worth a trial by the maple sugar manufacturers of Canada. When the syrup is cleansed, boiled, and cooled to an extent that it is ready to mould into black or brown cakes, instead of emptying the molten sugar into cold pans, it is poured on little pan-shaped hills of fresh earth, covering them to the depth of one or two inches, after which the sugar is dried and caked on the hills under the rays of the sun, and what would have been very brown sugar by the maple sugar method, becomes almost as white as the best loaf when the earth side of the thick cake is scraped off.

The approach of the maple sugar season suggests this information; and should a manufacturer desire to try the experiment of making white sugar in this way, all that will be necessary is to take a compliment of fresh earth the size of a potato or corn hill, and flatten it out to the depth of six inches, and pour a thin layer of the molten sugar on the hill top as described, and let it dry in the sun. On the south coast of Spain this ancient method still obtains at Denia, where refuse pickings from raisins furnish the syrup to make loaf sugar in the open air on the ancient plan.

CRITIQUES ON ISSUE FEB. 24.

Yes, long hours! How little we city men know of the delusion and snare connected with the charms of keeping the average country store. The only time I have any desire to keep country store is when it is raining cats and dogs. Then the insane desire comes over me for the liberty to put my feet on top of the stove, smoke all day and incidentally argue politics or anything else handy. The eight hour movement can't move too quickly in the direction of store-keepers anywhere.

Indian teas are crowding the China fellows very much and very properly. It is a wise idea however not to loose sight of the charm attached to many of the heathens' productions.

Discussing the important points of want of principles in every day life and also the law of garnishee and its faults in mongrel Irish will not improve their chances of beneficent alteration. This complaint about garnishee is well taken, as most of us know by experience. As to the others mentioned, so long as men are human I suppose, just so long will they try to buy in the cheapest and sell in the dearest market. Their conscience not troubling them, they ought, as in the case of using phosphate powder, to feel some stomach inconvenience, which, while not profitable to the storekeeper, is surely satisfactory.

Those articles on chemistry and food and canned goods are very cleverly put together and worthy of all study possible.

That Unionville man who wants uniformly sized packages ought to want uniformly weighed sugar. Experience shows that sugars vary as much as fifty pounds in a barrel, some varieties being much heavier than others. I am afraid that very much of a kick will bring the greatest calamity we could have—viz., bags; so let well enough alone.

In 1869 hard sugar was worth about 12 to 13 cents wholesale, not 16 cents; otherwise that "Study on Sugar," with some alterations, is interesting.

Grocers may with profit and satisfaction adopt the idea of the Dry Goods Inventory by using an invoice book, into which every invoice should be entered. By means of a simple index different goods may be entered by themselves, so that at the end of the year after taking stock you can easily see which goods are falling off, and the reverse.

Yes, the rich have much to answer for in that, having the money, they temporise and exasperate in paying their just bills.

I liked that article on consolidation of interests between wholesaler and retailer. A good joint dinner for the trade once a year would do much to perfect that good feeling which, after all, is so necessary to complete and mutual understanding between traders.

STRAIGHT MOYUNE.

BUYERS AND SELLERS IN TOWN.

C. E. Colson, Montreal, is here on his semi-annual tour for Crosse & Blackwell, London, England. If the appearance of the gentleman is any criterion of the business, it must be very prosperous.

Not many country buyers have been in town during the week. They are deferring their visits till the millinery openings, when accompanied by their pretty milliners they are expected to swoop down in strong force. Messrs. W. H. Smiley, of Sterling, and Mr. Notter, of Notter & Scott, Owen Sound, are among the outside merchants who have been touring the wholesale trade the last few days.

W. J. Zoeger of Newton, Ont., was on the street last week.

THE McCONNELL TROUBLE.

The stock and book debts of Michael McConnell, the insolvent wholesale wine and spirit merchant of this city, has been sold to Henry S. Mara at 60 cents on the dollar. The statement presented at a meeting held a few days ago made this showing:—The statement of assets was as follows: Unincumbered assets, $28,900; thirty large parcels of property, all mortgaged, in which there is a nominal surplus over mortgages of $33,000. The liabilities outside the mortgages and direct claims are $18,666; indirect claims, $15,416; secured claims, $6,488; contingents, $4,812; preferred, $1,043. These figures show that the assets are some thousands above the liabilities if the assets can be realized on to fair advantage.

INDIAN TEAS IN CANADA.

THE GROCER of last week, in referring to the extraordinary increase in the consumption of Indian and Ceylon teas in England, said that probably much the same result could be shown on the Canadian market. This week we have obtained figures substantiating this statement.

In 1890 the consumption of Indian and Ceylon teas in Canada was 15,570 half chests, while last year it was 28,056 half chests, almost double what it was two years ago.

The consumption of these teas in Canada has been heretofore practically confined to the cities and to the larger towns, Japans having been the favorite in the country districts. Now, however, they becoming well known in the places where they were at one time almost strangers, hence the rapidly increasing consumption of Indian and Ceylon teas in this country. Promising indeed is the outlook for these teas in Canada.

BACK AT THE LUMBER CAMPS.

Mr. John D. Hay of Davidson & Hay has just returned from a three weeks' tour of the lumber camps north. "The outlook," said he to THE GROCER, "is bright, and a good deal of lumber is being got out notwithstanding that the unusual deepness of the snow is interfering considerably with operations. There is a good deal of sickness in the camps this winter, partly owing, I presume, to the severe weather. One of the most common complaints is what they call German measles, while what seems to be a sort of catarrh is giving them a good deal of trouble," concluded the gallant major as he whirled around on his chair and resumed his neglected correspondence.

UP THE NORTHERN.

W. Green, an old Montreal boy and a resident for many years of Thornbury, has commenced business in that town in the store lately occupied by J. F. Gibson. Mr. Green understands the general business, also the wants of the people in and around Thornbury, having been in the employ of D. Long & Bro. for nearly seven years. He was also with our friend, J. E. Hutton, for about the same length of time. We wish brother Green a prosperous voyage on the sea of commerce.

J. S. Boddy, of Boddy Bros., Bradford, has fears for good snipe shooting the coming season on the marsh, the winter having been very severe on small birds. J. & Bro. have been a target of low prices for people in and around Bradford, and patrons of above firm don't grumble about them shooting.

Hunter & Co., of Gravenhurst, had the snap of the season on sale for past two weeks. Customers claim that 3 lbs. of H. & Co.'s ginger nuts for 25c. is cheaper than paying doctors bills. They are hot and warm up the little folks.

Deputy Reeve Caldwell, of Barrie, the popular proprietor of the "palace grocery house," has been booming Chase & Sandborne's seal coffee and milk during the cold snap, to the delight of the patrons of the Queen's hotel and others. D.

A committee testified before the committee investigating the Whiskey Trust that the adulteration and sale of imitation goods were on the increase and caused a large loss to the government. The imitation goods paid an internal revenue tax of about ninety cents a gallon. The imported paid about $2 a gallon. The production of rye and Bourbon was greatly decreased last year. Rye decreased 1,004,949 gallons and Bourbon 913,618 gallons. The increase in spurious goods increased accordingly.

Stocks of sugar at the principal European ports during January were raised about 6,500 tons, as compared with 11,600 tons in the same period last year, making the total 77,000 tons, which shows the smaller relative surplus of 20,000 tons. The visible supply of the world on Feb. 1 was 183,500 tons, showing a decrease of 5,000 tons for the month; last year the total was 163,500 tons.

The wholesale destruction of coffee plants in Ceylon by an insect some years ago has given a great impetus to the raising of tea. In 1875 only a hundred acres in Ceylon were devoted to tea raising; to-day the number is 250,000. The export of tea in 1891 was 68,000,000 pounds.

A new law in the State of Maine prohibits the packing of sardines by the "snip" process, and requires the removal of the head and entrails of the fish with a knife. The effect will be, it is thought, to retard the opening of the packing season for domestic sardines and restrict the volume of the pack.

The Ontario Fruit Growers' Association is asking the Government to amend the General Inspection Act so as to allow the lowering of the standard of first and second grade apples. The fruit growers claim that the Act at present fixes the standard so high as to be practically unworkable and there is no profit for them in consequence.

Certain varieties of the oyster are very sensitive to extreme cold, and the recent severe frost so seriously threatened the 20,000,000 oysters stored for the winter in the ponds at Hayling Island that for several days a steam engine was employed to keep the ponds thawed and supplied with water, and large coal and coke fires were kept burning night and day upon the banks.

The newly-formed Alaska salmon combine is composed of thirty-eight canneries, and the capital of the concern is said to be 5,000,000. According to statistics collected by Editor Barrett, of the American Grocer, 1,200,000 cases of corn were canned in the Western States during the past season, including 500,000 cases in Illinois and 250,000 cases in Iowa. Only 40,000 cases remained unsold on December 1st. The same authority places the Western pack of tomatoes at 350,000 cases, with but 20,000 cases left in canner's hands.

It is generally understood that the Grand Trunk Railway Company are about to make considerable improvements in the manner of handling the enormous fruit traffic which the company has in Toronto. It is said the old freight-shed at the foot of Yonge street is to be taken down and a commodious fruit market erected thereon, with facilities for conducting all the fruit trade of the city.

The Toronto City Travellers' Association held an interesting meeting in Richmond Hall Friday night. Among the items of business transacted was the striking of a committee to secure a suitable place for the annual summer excursion. Business first and pleasure afterwards is the characteristic of the average "commercial," and so the balance of the evening, after business was finished, was spent in songs, readings and some enjoyable selections from the bagpipes. Mr. J. Sharp, Mr. R. M. Corrie and Mr. J. Owen were the artists.

The retail grocers of Missouri are making a very decided effort to have the state garnishment laws so amended as to give them a better opportunity for collecting their accounts. Petitions have been circulated widely throughout the state, and every effort has been made to convince the legislative bodies of the state that the grocers are in dead earnest in this matter. These signed petitions were recently poured into both houses in session at Jefferson City, and the general impression is that the measure stands a good chance of ultimately being adopted by the state.

Reports by mail from Havana have the following on the tobacco crop: Growers have already commenced to cut the tobacco leaf in the Remedios district, and it is generally anticipated that owing to the persistent drought there will be a decrease of 50 per cent. in the yield of the fields sown early in the season, whereas the crop of those planted last will be rather large and of excellent quality. The banking house of J. T. Owen & Co., Ailsa Craig, have suspended payment. The suspension was brought about, it is said, by the Shipley failure a week ago. Deposits to the amount of $10,000 are said to be in Owen & Co's hands, and a run on them was made, with the result stated.

The employees of Park, Blackwell & Co., St. Lawrence market, held their annual assembly in McKay's hall, corner King and Sherbourne streets, Thursday night. Mr. James Park, sen., Mr. C. S. For the success of the evening's enjoyment much praise is due the committee, Messrs. C. Hollingsworth, S. Smith, G. Fitzgerald A. Owens and A. Thompson.

A man named Jackson keeps a little store in the outskirts of a small Texas Town. He has a little of everything in his store, but his strong card is putting up bundles in a compact shape. One day a well-known citizen bought a pound of coffee. "I'll bet," said Jackson, "that I can put a pound of coffee in a smaller package than any other man in this town." "I believe it," was the reply, "for I know you can put a quart of whiskey in a smaller bottle than any man I ever saw."—Texas Siftings.

A SALESMAN OF GOOD ADDRESS.

The carefully prepared and timely advertisement has been aptly described as an all-accomplished salesman, who goes about his business with unlimited patience, and with a stock and variety of information that charms by its freshness and extent; one who is welcomed in the banker's office, the merchant's store and the study of the student, and is moreover welcomed by the cultivated woman at the family fireside. Very naturally the value of this very valuable agency depends on the number whom he addresses who have ready money and are willing to spend it to satisfy their wants, and, perhaps, gratify their tastes. The sole office of this most useful of all missionaries is to do his master's will, and both introduce him and commend him and his wares to as wide an audience as possible. Sometimes he describes his master's wares, their quality, and names their prices, or tells you the mark by which they are distinguished from all others of their class; all these are very valuable services. He is, moreover the herald of new inventions, the latest fads in fashions, and invariably the first to notify you of where you can get special bargains in almost everything you need. Multiply this office a hundred thousand-fold, and ask yourself whether, as manufacturer of any article, with trade-mark, or a retail seller of anything required by the people at large, you can dispense with his services, or make money without them. Remember, he has made the fortunes of thousands, he has taken men and women from obscurity and endowed them, as it were, with his magical virtues, making them rich, popular and respected ornaments of society.—B. C. Commercial Journal.

PRICES IN 1866 AND 1893.

It may be interesting to many of our younger grocers to know that twenty-seven years ago the prices of groceries differed very materially from the prices governing the same articles to-day. On a recent visit to Oneida we had a pleasant chat with Mr. Theodore Carter, the leading grocer of Oneida, who engaged in the grocery business in that village in the year 1866 says the editor of American Grocer.

Mr. Carter has saved every bill of goods he ever purchased, and from a long statement we find at that time that he paid for Porto Rico molasses 84 cents a gallon; coffee sugar, 15¼ cents; cut loaf, 17¾ cents. Gunpowder tea at that time cost him $1.60 a pound; pepper, 34 cents, while he had to pay 65 cents a pound for cotton twine. Cranberries cost him $24 a barrel.

From a newspaper advertisement we find that at that time apples were selling for $2.50 a bushel; potatoes sold at $1.75 a bushel; crate of peaches brought $8, while lemons sold for $1 a dozen; flour brought $4.50 a sack, while a can of tomatoes sold for 40 cents and canned corn sold for 50 cents. Mr. Carter at that time paid the government $50 as a tax for doing business.

It will readily be seen from the above quotations what goods cost those days. The wage-earner is earning at the present time proportionately as much as then, and yet he can purchase now nearly three times the amount of goods that he did then; while the grocer finds that while prices have decreased, expenses in many cases have increased, and he is not making the money he formerly did. The above will furnish food for reflection, and cause the thoughtful man to consider how he can decrease his expenses in the handling and giving credit.

A MIGHTY HAUL OF SALMON.

A salmon fisher and packer from Alaska told a fellow patient in a New York hospital the other day a story of what is perhaps the greatest single salmon haul on record. The company to which the narrator belongs has its headquarters at San Francisco, and sends each year to one of the Alaska rivers a schooner bearing sixty men, all of whom are busied in making tin salmon cans during the voyage. The point at which the camp was made last season is 300 miles from the nearest post office. The season lasts from May to October, and the pack of the particular company on that particular river was 1,500,000 pound cans.

On the day of the great salmon haul enormous schools of salmon were discovered in a reach in the river. The stream was guarded at three points with traps, and the fish were driven towards three great nets. The school was so thick presently that it was difficult to run a boat through the enclosed pool. Great fish leaped out of the water and struck the oars from the hands of the rowers. At length the haul was made, and at least 75,000 fish were drawn ashore. Two-thirds of the fish were liberated, as it was impossible to cure more than the 25,000 that were saved. The fish averaged nearly eight pounds each.

The salmon pack of this concern goes chiefly to Europe, and is sold especially to British workmen. The fact that there is a demand for a delicacy of this sort among English mechanics leads the narrator of this story to believe that the workmen of the British Isles are better paid than the Americans suppose.

The salmon syndicate of the northwest, the State of Oregon and the United States Government are all busied in encouraging the Pacific Coast salmon. The syndicate alone turns loose into the rivers of Oregon 50,000,000 salmon annually, and as the industrious salmon lays 900 eggs to every pound of her weight the prospect of the fish seems good. Throughout the whole Pacific northwest the salmon is about the cheapest fish going, and is not esteemed a delicacy. The Alaskan salmon fishermen still make a mystery of the salmon though its habits have been pretty well cleared up by scientific investigation. According to popular belief nobody knows what the salmon feeds upon. It is also firmly held that the salmon returns to its hatching place but once, at the age of five years, for the purpose of spawning, and then goes back to the sea, there to die, or at all events never again to visit the river of its birth.—New York Sun.

DRY GOODS.

House trade in this city has been brisker than usual on account of the millinery openings. Buyers from all parts of Canada have visited the markets and some very large parcels have been bought. All classes of spring goods have been in strong demand.

The millinery houses are scenes of unusual brilliancy. The trimmings for spring are of many and bright colors, and hence the displays rival the finest July flower shows. Bright colors seem to have permeated every class of goods. Buying has been brisk and substantial. There has been a freedom about the placing of orders which denotes very light stocks in retail stores and a strong confidence in prospects for spring trade.

The past week has been marked by a very small influx of money. Payments are very indifferent. The amounts due were not large, nor were they well met. Very little advantage was taken of cash discounts. This tightness of money is due partly to a very meagre trade in country districts on account of bad roads. Houses whose trade is mostly with such districts have felt the stricture more than others. Still, dealers are not fearing March 4th.

A novelty shown on the market is a new celluloid collar and tie combined. The tie is simply an extension of each end of the collar which overlaps and forms an imitation bow tie.

Most of the woollen buyers are back from Great Britain and are full of ideas for fall trade. Mr. O'Hara, of Gordon, Mackay & Co., and Mr. Johnston, of Wyld, Grasset & Darling, have just returned. Mr. Auld, of W. R. Brock & Co., returned over a week ago. Mr. Begg, of John Macdonald & Co., has not yet returned.

NOTES.

W. R. Brock & Co. made an extra display on the dates of the millinery openings. The haberdashery department under the control of Mr. Smallpiece was especially well decorated. The stock was very full and displayed to great advantage. Lace curtains were hung in various places; spring parasols hung half opened in prominent positions; long rows of new style suspenders were displayed to advantage; and spring neckwear in great profusion was very noticeable. Their exhibit of embroideries, art silks, spring underwear, ribbon, umbrellas and parasols was worthy of the reputation of the house.

During the coming summer ladies' belts will be greatly worn, owing to the popularity of the blouse. Gordon, Mackay & Co. show ranges from 85c. up, in plain leather, embossed leather and perforated leather; also silk and lustre.

A special line of lace curtains $3\frac{1}{2}$ yds. in length and in new designs, that can be retailed at 80 cents and \$1, are being shown by

W. R. Brock & Co. The sale of these is very rapid.

For summer wear Gordon, Mackay & Co. show an exceptionally low line of ladies' vests, unbleached, with long sleeves, which they can sell at a price enabling a purchaser to retail at a quarter. They claim to lead the trade in these goods.

In Hermsdorf's absolutely stainless black hosiery, W. R. Brock & Co. are showing several special lines. One number called D. O. with fashioned foot can be retailed with a good margin at 15 cents per pair. Another called Buster, they claim, leads the market, being the lowest line of full-fashioned goods imported. This line can be retailed three pairs for 50 cents.

A special shipment of laces is being passed into stock by Wyld Grasset & Darling. They are the balance of a manufacturer's stock and will be sold at about half regular price. They include cream, natural and two-tone Pointe D'Irelandes and Guipures.

Tambor embroidered lap robes are shown in abundance by John Macdonald & Co., they having bought up a manufacturer's stock of these. They are also showing an extensive line of fancy linen lap robes; they run in the lowest grades to retail at 50c., and also in other qualities. Their stock of overalls is very complete, embracing all the different kinds, such as jeans, cottonades, pointed moles, denims and duck. A fine lot of men's cashmere and cashmere and silk vests are shown. These goods have been very successful in the hands of the travellers. Their stock of umbrellas includes lines from $4.50 to $48 per dozen, and includes many special features, such as elastic frames, double ribs, sixteen-ribbed, Titania tubes, and many novelties in handles.

Mr. J. W. O'Hara, woollen buyer for Gordon, Mackay & Co., has returned from his European purchasing trip and reports having placed some very special contracts on staple lines, fancies and novelties. He has treated the samples with unusual care and patience, and his customers may look for a range of woollen samples for next season of unusual merit and excellence.

W. R. Brock & Co. are showing some six-quarter Scotch suitings in hopsacks, twills, checks and stripes, in new fawn and drab shades, which are among the neatest things on the market. Their new tints in spring overcoatings in cheviot-finish, worsteds and West of England venetians, include silver greys, blue greys, blue and black mixes and slates, as well as the staple colorings. They have a very large assortment of black and blue serges, British and Canadian, rough and smooth surface, large and small twills and small fancy effects in all makes.

In the silk and dress goods department John Macdonald & Co. made an extra display this week for the millinery openings. Silks in surahs, tartans, Bengalines, pongors and other lues were shown in great range. Their stock of ribbons in staples was the largest in the trade if appearances were not deceiving. Their stock of laces has met with much appreciation from the trade in all lines. The movement has been extra large. Embroideries are shown in great profusion, and they claim to be offering special value in carton lots and in regular Swiss and Cambric goods. In dress goods their range is very complete; in shot effects, shot lustres, and other fancy effects they show some very taking varieties.

The Best Grocers Make
a point of Keeping it always in Stock.

[As there is often inequality in the prices of the various sellers on this market, owing to differences in buying conditions and other circumstances, and as prices are modified by both quantity and quality, the quotations given below and in our Prices Current necessarily take a wide range.]

TORONTO MARKETS.

TORONTO, March 2, 1893.
GROCERIES.

Nothing particularly new seems to have developed during the week. Outside canned goods the market is quiet, but a healthy feeling prevails. Sugars continue firm and syrups are stronger. Coffees remain much about the same as a week ago, and fruits are without change. Firmness still characterizes the tea market, and demand is active.

COFFEES.

Local demand continues moderate and it is the general opinion that should there be any advance on present prices there will follow a falling off in consumption. Rios are quoted here at 21 to 22c. and stocks are low, good grades being very scarce. Options in Rios took an easier turn outside last week, but prices have since recovered and they are now higher than before.

DRIED FRUIT.

Currants continue to attract the most attention, the movement being freer than in any other kind of dried fruit. There are not many Valencia raisins moving here; prices are unchanged, but they are firmer in New York. Prunes are in moderate demand at from 8c. up. Dates are selling in small quantities at 5½c. up.

RICE AND SPICES.

Spices are in good demand at unchanged prices. Rice is quoted as before and demand is light.

SUGAR.

A moderate business only is being done, and the situation appears to be as sharp as ever. Refiners will not contract for one day ahead, and the agent of one refinery refused to even submit an offer for 1,000 barrels at 1-16c. less than the quotable price. Outside markets are also steady.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES.

Syrups are scarce and higher, refiners having advanced prices at least ¼c. during the week. Local demand is good. Molasses is in fair demand at unchanged prices.

TEAS.

Demand continues fairly active at firm prices. The situation has not materially changed during the week. The retail trade is buying more largely of low grade Japans, Assams and Ceylons than for some time. A few of the better grades of Ceylons are offering from England, but medium grades are very scarce. The market seems to be in better shape than for five years past, and with the consumption increasing and stocks low it looks as if there will be further advances.

MARKET NOTES.

[Importers, wholesale merchants and manufacturers should send any items intended for this department so that they may reach the head office not later than Wednesday morning. The editor will always welcome such information.]

Prunes are held higher in New York.

Smith & Keighley are offering a nice bright raw sugar at 3½c.

Eggs are retailing in Halifax at from 35 cents to 37 cents a dozen.

Diamond Baking Powders will now be found in the list of Prices Current.

T. Kinnear & Co. are offering special bargains in Japan teas at from 17 to 19c.

A local flour and feed man offered to exchange a car of wheat for one of bran a few days ago.

W. T. Harris, Chatham, N. B., dealer in general merchandise, offers 200 cases canned lobsters, also dried cod of finest quality.

The trade here have received an engraving showing a partial view of Crosse & Blackwell's very handsome new factory Charing Cross Road, London, W. C.

The Trust, unable to force its effort to make customers take 50 per cent granulated in bags some time ago, rescinded the order. Now the bags have piled up into a surplus accumulation, and any one who will handle that style of package can do so 1-16c less than regular rates on standard grade.—N.Y. Bulletin.

BUTTER AND CHEESE.

Receipts of butter are larger and there is more disposition to sell. There is still a good deal of creamery butter being held here on speculative account, and as the quantity has sadly deteriorated it is likely to be held, particularly if the present prices are persisted in. Good creamery butter will sell well at 23 to 25c. for tubs, while extra choice brings 26 to 27c. Good dairy and bakers butter are in good demand, and supplies are about equal to the demand; large rolls sell at 18 to 20c., and dairy tubs are taken at 20 to 21c., and pastry at 15 to 17c.

Cheese continues in fairly good demand at firm prices, but there is considerable difference in values. Stocks held here are still light.

PETROLEUM.

The Petrolia Advertiser in its weekly report says: Reports of development from all parts of the territory the past month show marked changes in comparison with previous months. There has been a large decrease in the number of wells completed, and consequently of new production. There are several reasons that have caused the above, the most prominent one, of course, being the unsettled state of the oil business throughout Canada in consequence of anticipated tariff changes, which, of course, has made a difference in the amount of new work under way and projected by parties holding leases of land here and outside property owners. And then again, the extremely cold weather has affected operations to a larger extent. Crude remains firm at $1.18½ for Petrolia oil, with a shade better for Oil Springs. Activity in refined oil continues, and the manufacturer to-day is really put on his metal if ever he was. The market to-day may be said to be very sympathetic, each refiner watching the other and manifesting, as a rule, a disposition to await the course of events rather than make any rash contracts ahead for future delivery. It is believed here among those who should be posted in these matters that there are not very heavy stocks of refined oil in the Eastern markets, and hence the manufacturer is not as eager, taking the general view of the situation into consideration, to grant the dealer any the best of it for the future. We hear that there has been some cutting in prices lately. Just exactly what were the causes operating to induce offerings of small lots of oil at prices lower than those generally demanded in a fairly firm market is of course more or less a matter of conjecture.

Following are the latest quotations at Toronto:—Canada refined oil, 13½ to 14c; carbon safety, 17½ to 18c; Canada water white, 19c; American water white, 21 to 22c; photogene, 25c.

COUNTRY PRODUCE.

BEANS—Scarce and firm with demand good at $1.40 to $1.50 for the good article.

DRIED APPLES—The market is a little firmer, but there is not much doing; 5¼ to 5½c. are the ruling prices.

EVAPORATED APPLES—There is a much stronger feeling in the market, but there is not much movement. Car lots are in demand, but for jobbing account there is not much request, green fruit being too plentiful and cheap. Prices are 8½c. higher at 9c.

EGGS—Supplies are becoming more plentiful and prices are easy at 25 to 26c. No large lots are moving, purchases made merely being for immediate requirements.

HONEY—Market remains much about the same as for some weeks; while clover, if it could be had, would sell well, but dark, which is plentiful, is not wanted. While clover, in sections, is quoted at 15c. and dark at 10c., extracted runs from 5 to 8c.

DRESSED POULTRY—Scarce and wanted. Prices unchanged. Chickens are quoted at 65 to 75c. a pair, ducks 85c. to $1 a pair, turkeys at 14c. a pound, and geese at 9 to 10c. a pound.

POTATOES—The market is at the moment in a good healthy condition. Car lots have changed hands during the week at 80 to 82c. on track here. A good deal of trouble is experienced in getting cars. The ruling prices out of store are 90 to 95c.

ONIONS—Dull and unchanged at $2 to $2.25 per barrel.

HOPS—The market is quiet, the brewers managing to get along with what they have on hand; prices steady. A nice little lot of 92's offered at 19¼c., but we do not hear of any sales being effected at that figure.

HOGS AND PROVISIONS.

The market for dressed hogs is weak and lower. A good many car lots are offering, but transactions are few. Packers here are picking up market hogs at $17 to $17.40 per cwt.; $8.25 seems to be the highest price that they are willing to pay for car lots this week, although dealers have paid $8.55 to arrive. All hog products are in good demand. Lard is quoted slightly higher, and there is not much offering.

BACON—Long clear 10½ to 11c. Smoked backs are 12½ to 13c., bellies 13½c., rolls 10c.

HAMS—In good demand and firm at 13 to 13½c.

LARD—Pure Canadian is 13c. in tubs and 13½c. in pails. Compound 10½ to 11c.

TORONTO, ONT.

MY DEAR SIR:-

I think it only fair, to let you know, that at a Dinner party at my house the other day, we had some of your Canned Peas, and that their was a general expression of opinion amongst the eight people present, that these Peas were far superior to any of the French Peas obtainable in Canada. It is quite evident that the Lakeport Preserving Co. understand their business, and how best to preserve fruit and vegetables.

Yours sincerely,

A. WHITE,

MARKETS—Continued

BARREL PORK—U. S. heavy mess is $22.50. Canadian short cut $22. Canadian heavy mess $20 to $21.

DRESSED MEATS—Beef forees are 4½ to 5½c., hindquarters 7 to 8¼c., veal 6½ to 8c., mutton 7 to 8c., lamb 8c. to 8½c.

GREEN FRUIT.

There has been no material change during the week. Oranges are active and firm, while lemons on the other hand are quiet but unchanged. There is not much doing in bananas, and the season is about over for grapes and cranberries. Mandarin and Tangerine oranges are about out of the market. We quote Valencia oranges at $4.50 to $4.75 per case, Jamaicas $2.50 to $2.75 per box, Floridas $3 to $3.50 per box, Palermos $2.50 per box; lemons $3 to $3.50 for choice and $3.75 to $4 for fancy; bananas $1.75 to $2.50; pineapples 20 to 30c., Malaga grapes $8 to $9, fancy cranberries $10 per barrel, common $1 per basket; apples, $1.25 to $1.75 for market stock and $2.50 to $3 per barrel for fancy.

FISH AND OYSTERS.

The demand for fish has continued good and better than usual, notwithstanding that prices are higher. While the demand is general, the smaller varieties, such as lake and sea herring and whitefish are the most sought after. The market is almost cleaned out of sea herring, and the few there are to be had are selling at $2.85 to $3. There have been a few ciscoes on the market during the week, and they have found a ready sale at $1.50 per hundred. The market is pretty well cleaned out of smelts. A few flounders are on the market and they are selling at 5c. Oysters are dull and unchanged. We quote: 7 to 7½c. for trout and ordinary whitefish, 7½c. for Manitoba whitefish, 4½c. per lb. or $3 per hundred for frozen Lake herring, 10c. for mackerel, 13c. for B.C. frozen salmon, and 17c. for fresh ditto, 5 to 7c. for smelts, 5 to 5½c. for had-dock, 4 to 4½c. for market cod, 7c. for steak cod, 5c. for flounders, 6½c. for skinned and boned codfish, $3 per half bbl. for Labrador herring, $2.75 per half bbl. for shore herring, 11 to 12½c. for Digby herring, 4c. for boneless fish, 7 to 8c. for boneless cod, 7c. for pike, 7c. for pickerel; oysters, $1.50 for stds., and $2 select.

HIDES, SKINS, WOOL, TALLOW.

SKINS—There are not a great many coming in and prices are unchanged at $1.25 to $1.40 for shipskins, and at 5 to 7c. for calf skins.

HIDES—Demand continues fair and prices steady, car lots of cured are moving at 5¼c. We quote No. 1 green cows' 4½c., cured 5¼ to 5½c.

TALLOW—Continues in active demand, with offerings light. Prices are ½c. higher, dealers paying 7 to 7½c. and selling at 7¼ to 8c.

WOOL—Not much to note, very little moving and prices are unchanged. There will

SEEDS

Red clover is somewhat easier in sympathy with the further decline in the United States market, prices here being from 35c. to 50c. lower than a week ago at $8.50 to $8.90. A week or so of fine weather would undoubtedly have a stimulating effect on the market. There is not much timothy offering and the demand is light prices are unchanged at $1.50 to $2.25. Alsike quiet and unchanged at $5.50 to $6.60.

MONTREAL MARKETS.

MONTREAL, March 2, 1893.

GROCERIES.

There has been no great stir in groceries, although a moderate movement is reported in refined sugar at steady prices. The tea market holds as firm as ever, and there have been further calls for Japan on American account which further reduces the stocks here. The strength in coffees and spices continues notable, in fact, all lines, from sugar down to fish are strong, so that it does not seem as though holders would gain anything by deferring their purchases; rather the reverse, in fact. In the main, however, they show indifference, and take

CANNED GOODS.TORONTO.

The situation continues to gather strength. Demand for canned tomatoes continues active and while quotations are unchanged, one leading house is holding prices 10c. a dozen higher. No shipments are reported this week to the United States, although the Lakeport cannery is at the moment engaged in consigning a round lot to Liverpool. Corn is in good demand and stocks are getting light. The market has a firmer feeling, and sales were made last week to a local buyer at 90c. An active enquiry is reported for peas at from 85c. to $1. Beans are moving well at steady prices. Canned fruits are in active demand and stocks are getting lighter. Canned salmon is also in good shape, and little or nothing is expected to be in stock when the new pack arrives. Some houses at the moment are cleaned out of packages of both trout and white fish, and Buffalo is reported to have absorbed everything on this side. There is the usual seasonable demand for sardines.

MONTREAL.

The canned goods trade is very quiet at the moment. Some of the large houses are said to be selling staple lines considerably below quotations but the movement generally is small.

ST. JOHN, N.B.

Canned goods are moving freely and some lines are said to be scarce, gal. apples are quoted at $2.25 to $2.40; corn sells at 90c. to $1.05; peas 90c. to $1.05; tomatoes 90c. to $1.; salmon $1.60 to $1.75; lobsters $6.75 to $7.25 per case.

MONTREAL Markets Continued.

supplies sparingly, but this may be due to the high freights ruling rather than any disinclination about buying. Payments seem to be favorable on the whole.

SUGARS.

No marked change has occurred in raw sugar. There has been no cost and freight business during the week, refiners here not being anxious. Advices from the Philippines state that stocks are completely exhausted, Hong Kong and Australian refiners having been heavy buyers. A shortage is reported in Cuba also. In refined stock there is no special change, a fair business moving at steady prices. Yellows are quoted at 3 1-2c. to 3 7-8c. and granulated 4 5-8c.

SYRUPS.

Grocers report an active demand for syrups, the consumption being large owing to the high prices both of lard and butter. Supplies are small, one refinery at least being completely out of stock. Refiners say that 22c. per gallon is about their idea of value. Molasses is moving fairly well in small lots at 34 1-2c. to 35c.

TEA.

The market has been quiet during the past week in Japan teas. There is still an enquiry for low grades on American account, and lots have been placed at 12 1-2c. to 14c. Medium to good have changed hands at 16c. to 18c., and fine at 19c. to 21c., with finest 25c. to 31c. Advices state that blacks are very firm in England, and importers have experienced great difficulty in securing goods on which offers have been made.

COFFEES.

The coffee market maintains its firm tone, and higher prices are looked for. We quote Jamaica, 19 to 20c.; Maracaibo, 21 to 22c.; Rio, 19 to 21c.; Java, 25c. to 27c.; and Mocha, 25 to 28c. These figures are only possible on straight wholesale lots, business in a jobbing way necessitating an advance on these prices.

Spices are in fair demand at the advance sale sales of black pepper in lots transpiring at 8 to 9c., and Pimento 6 1-2c.

DRIED FRUIT.

The market for Valencia raisins has been quiet, although holders are exceedingly firm as offerings of common stock have ceased to be pressed on the market. We quote Valencia off-stalk 4 1-2c. to 4 7-8 according to brand; layers, 6c. to 6 1-4c. Currants are quiet at 5c. to 5 3-4c. as to package.

NUTS.

Nuts are quiet and unchanged. We quote Pecans 11 to 12 1/2c., Terragona almonds, 10 1/2c., Grenoble walnuts 13 1/2 to 14 1/2c., filberts 10 to 10 1/2c., Ivica 14 1/2c., Brazil 15c., marbotts 12 1/2c., cocoa nuts $3.50 to $4.50 per bag of 100 for old, new $5 to $5.50.

RICE.

A very good movement is reported in rice, and prices rule firm, as reports from primary markets indicate higher values. A recent report says: "Madras is in a state of famine. There is a large demand in China for the commoner kinds of Saigon and Siam. The Burmah harvest was proceeding satisfactorily, and steamers are busy loading except at Akyab, where rice is being taken at high prices for the Madras coast." Local quotations are: Standard $3.85; choice, $4; Japans, $4.25; Louisiana, $5.25, and Carolina $7.50.

FISH.

The fish market is in a very satisfactory condition, the demand being good, and the supply of herring has been worked down to a sounder basis. We quote:—Haddock, 4 to 4 1/2c., cod 4c., lake trout 7c., white fish 7 to 7 1/2c., pickerel or dore 8c.; dried cod, $5.50; No. 1 green cod, $7; Labrador salmon, $13 to $14; No. 2 mackerel, $12 per brl.; do. $7 per half brl.; C.B. and N. S. herring, $4.75 to $5 per brl.; tommy cods, $1.75 to $2.00 per brl.; fresh herring, $2.00 to $2.50 per hundred; haddies, 7 1/2 to 8c.; Yarmouth bloaters, $1.00 to $1.25; frozen mackerel, 8 1/2 to 9c.; smelts, 4 to 5c.

APPLES.

The apple market is dull, with a few sales in a jobbing way at $2.50 to $3.

ASHES.

The ash market is firm at $4.25 to $4.35 for pots. Pearls nominal at $5.20.

HOPS.

There is nothing doing in hops, holders asking 20c. for Canadian.

BEANS.

Beans rule steady and quiet at $1.35 to $1.56 for picked, and ordinary $1 to $1.20.

POTATOES.

Car lots of potatoes have changed hands at $1.06. The quality continues disappointing and receipts run light.

EGGS.

The egg market rules easier, as receipts of fresh stock are more liberal. The stock of limed is exhausted, but some lots of American stock are on their way here, and will cost 29c. laid down here, which in the present state of the market means a loss to the holder. We quote 30c. for fresh stock.

BUTTER AND CHEESE.

The cheese market is quiet and unchanged. There is very little stock here, and what there is held firm by holders at 11 1/2 to 11 3/4c.

Butter rules steady and is fairly active in a jobbing way for all grades. Choice parcels of creamery sell at 23c. and over, while Townships dairy is scarce and firmly held at quotations: Choice fall creamery, 23 to 24c.; creamery seconds, 21 to 22c.; Townships dairy, 21 to 23c.; Morrisburg and Brockville, 20 to 22c.; Kamouraska stock, 19 to 20c.; Western rolls, 18 1/2 to 20c.

PROVISIONS.

Provisions remain very quiet, but smoked meats are receiving some attention. Pork is neglected. The market holds very firm, however. We quote the following quotation: Canadian short cut pork, per brl. $23 to $24; Canada mess pork, per brl. $23 to $24.00; Hams, city cured, per lb. 13c. to 14c. Lard, Canadian in pails, 12 1/2 to 13 1/2c.; Bacon, per lb., 12 to 13c.; Lard, com. refined, per lb., 10 1/2 to 12c.

ST. JOHN, N. B., MARKETS.

ST. JOHN, N.B., March 2, 1893.

The week has been uneventful in the grocery line, prices have ruled steady and trade quiet, though a little more activity is noticed the last few days, as orders are coming in for spring trade. Sugars are firm. Oatmeal is quoted higher. Flour is steady. Molasses is somewhat easier. Collections are slow.

Sugars—Holders of stocks are firm in price, though buyers do not seem inclined to take more than for immediate wants. Quotations are granulated 4 3/4 to 4 3/4c., yellows 3 1/2 to 3 3/4c., extra C 3 3/4 to 4c.

Molasses—The market is some easier, and as crop prospects are good prices will likely rule low for some time. Barbadoes is selling at 31 to 33c., Porto Rico 31 to 33c., and Antigua 29 to 30c.

Provisions—Mess pork is selling at $21.50 to $23, as to quality. Smoked hams are selling at 14 to 15c.; do. rolls at 12 to 13 1/2c. Lard, compound, 12 to 12 1/2c.; pure, 13 to 14c. Tallow, 6c.

POINTS FOR CLERKS.

It was the saying of a wise man, long ago, that everything has two handles, by one of which it can be easily carried, while by the other it cannot be. This suggestive phrase might be often brought to mind by the perplexing problems which arise in the life of every young man and by the ways in which they must be met. A writer in the Golden Rule says that it might not take a sage to discover the truth and utter it, but a wise man indeed would he be who would always know just how to apply it.

A very unenviable gift it is that leads one always to take things by the wrong handle, and there is always opportunity for exercising it if one chooses to do so. When the sun is not shining, it is easy to notice the gloom; when the sun is shining, it is just as easy to complain that the light hurts the eyes. When a cloud is turned with the silver side out, no one can deny that it is only a cloud, after all. But skill in detecting the right handle, however it may be hidden, may become, also, almost a positive instinct; and there are just as many opportunities for exercising that. If the flower is bitter, it is delightful to have the bee's secret for finding honey in it somewhere. If one has only nettles to depend on, it is a fine thing to have the talent of the cook that boasted of the number of dishes that he could make from a nettle top. Happiness in life turns largely on the ability to take things by the right handle.

Men, as well as things, have two handles. It is possible always to stroke them the wrong way. An argument can be begun by stating either the points of agreement or the points of disagreement, by arousing antagonism or by conciliating prejudices. One may approach the other with a black flag or with a flag of truce; and the flag can be seen farther off than can its bearer. Much is said about "reaching" people, but it makes a great difference what one reaches with. Setting out on the most excellent of errands, with the best of intentions, is not enough. Success in winning men lies largely in the tact that grasps the right handle.

Discouragement over frequent failures in good causes might lead one to question whether success for him is possible; but a large part of education consists of training in recognizing the right handles, and in this training even failure has its part. There are two handles; if you have tried the wrong one first, take the other.

FLOUR AND FEED.

TORONTO.

Dulness is the predominating feature of the flour market. The feed market however is firm with demand good; bran is wanted on track at $15.50 with $16 asked and in ton lots it is quoted $1 higher at $17.

FLOUR.—City millers' and dealers' prices are: Manitoba patents, $4.50; strong bakers' $4 to $4.10; white wheat patents, $4.25; straight roller, $3.40; low grades, per bag, $1.00 to $1.25; Ontario family $3.35 to $3.85.

Car prices are: Toronto freights—Manitoba patents, $4.40 to $4.50; Manitoba strong bakers' $3.90 to $4.10; Ontario patents, $3.25 to $3.50; straight roller, $3.15 to $3.20; extra, $3.10; low grades, per bag, $1.10 to $1.25.

MEAL.—Oatmeal is $4.00. to $4.25 Cornmeal is $3.50.

FEED.—Bran (ton lots) $17, ditto (on track) $15.50 to $16., shorts (ton lots) $18; mixed feed $22, feeding corn 57 to 58c., oats 34 to 35c.

HAY.—Baled timothy, demand is good and supply fair at $9.25 to $9.50.

STRAW.—Plentiful and demand limited, at $5.50 to $6.

MONTREAL.

The flour market is dull and unchanged, buyers only taking enough to meet immediate requirements and wholesale prices are more or less nominal. We quote:—Winter wheat $4.00 to $4.25; spring patents $4.25 to $4.50; straight rollers $3.55 to $3.75; extra $3.20 to $3.25; superfine $2.60 to $2.90; city strong bakers' $4.15; strong bakers' $3.90 to $4.00.

ST. JOHN'S N. B.

Flour.—Market steady and prices are held firm. Manitoba is quoted at $5.20 to $5.25 high grade Ontario, $4.35 to $4.45; medium patents, $4.15 to $4.30.

Oatmeal.—Very firm in price and likely to advance is quoted $4.30 to $4.35.

Cornmeal.—Not much movement, market steady, price $2.70 to $2.80.

Feed.—Very firm, late advices are reported higher, is selling here at $22.50 to $23.50 per ton.

GREEN AND BLACK TEAS.

It is not my intention to enter into an account of the different processes of manufacturing black and green teas, but to find a reason for their chemical differences. By green tea I do not mean the highly colored article which is sold in this country, but the pure green teas of the Northern tea-growing districts of China, to the Namuna teas of India, very little of which, if any, are ever seen here.

To those who may not be acquainted with the term "Namuna" used in the above sentence, I wish to offer a few words of explanation. The word "Namuna" means in Hindustani "sample," and its application to the peculiar description of teas which now go by this name happened in the following manner:—A planter sent to England some boxes of this tea ticketed "Namuna," and the London brokers being unacquainted with the meaning of the term, have always since applied the name "Namuna" to this class of tea. They are made from the unfremented leaf, as is the case with Oolongs and Greens. The leaf is generally of a dark olive-green, though some incline to a greyish-black tinge. The liquor is very pale and slim looking, but its quality is stronger by far than ordinary Pekoe (Indian or Ceylon); in flavor, it is between a Flowery Pekoe and a green tea, quite distinct from Flowery Pekoe, possessing something of the rasping catching of the green tea class, with the flavor a little refined. The out-turn is generally green, sometimes with a brownish leaves mixed. These teas are often called "Indian Oolongs" or "Indian Mandami Pekoes." They are chiefly produced in the Darjeeling and Kumaon districts. The indigenous plant of India is unsuited for the production of Namunas, nor is the hybrid suitable, but the pure Chinese plants which have been transplanted to India make fine Namunas, and with this variety of the tea bush are the estates of Darjeeling and Kumaon chiefly planted the original, having been brought there by Messrs. Bruce and Fortune in "Fifties." These teas are invaluable for blending purposes.

I may also state that the finer grades of Formosa Oolongs are really green teas, and they are often spoken of in the trade as "a black tea with a green tea flavor." It is a curious fact that the tea bushes grown in the colder and higher altitudes produce the finest green teas. The word green, to the Chinese and tea growers of India, has no reference to color, but means "immature," "not of full growth," and is used in somewhat the same sense as we say "green corn."

The characteristic differences between green and black teas—the difference of color and flavor, and the effect produced on some constitutions by green tea, such as nervous irritability, sleeplessness, etc., which are distinct from those produced by black teas are so marked that they need no comment, but they possess peculiar chemical properties which have always been attributed to the effect of high heat in the process of manufacture.

From whence do these distinguishing peculiarities arise, and what are they to be attributed? It is found that many medical herbs, principally those of a nitrogenous nature, such as atrophebelladonna, hyoscyamus-niger, etc., when brought in fresh and cool by the grower or collector, dry a bright green color, but if they had been delayed in transit, or remain in a confined state for any length of time, they become heated from a species of spontaneous fermentation, and when loosened and spread open emit vapors and are sensibly warm to the hand. When such plants are dried, the whole of the green color is found to have been destroyed, and a red-brown, and sometimes a blackish brown, result is obtained. When a clear infusion of such leaves is evaporated to dryness, it is not all indissolved by water, but there is left a quantity of brown oxidized extractive matter, which is denominated apothene. A similar result is obtained by the evaporation of a clear infusion of black tea. The same action takes place in the infusions of other vegetable substances when exposed to the oxidizing influence of the atmosphere. They become darkened on the surface. This gradually spreads through the solution, and on evaporation an oxidized extractive matter remains which is insoluble in water. If green tea is wetted and redried with exposure to the air, it will be found to be nearly as dark in color to ordinary black tea. The conclusion then is, that the peculiar characteristics and chemical differences which distinguish black tea from green tea are to be attributed to a species of heating or fermentation, accompanied with oxidation by exposure to the air, and not to being submitted to a higher temperature in the process of manufacture, as has generally been thought. Those who have seen tea manufactured, I think, will agree that this is the rational result of the process. For the purpose of black tea the leaves are allowed to remain in bulk exposed to the air for some little time before being fired; whereas, for green tea, the freshly picked leaves are fired at once, without delay, at a high temperature, fired and rolled again and again, assisted sometimes by a fanning operation to drive off the moisture, and always with brisk agitation until the drying is completed. It is during this firing that the green powder is added that produces the green color of the so-called green teas sold in the European and American markets, about one pound of coloring matter being required for every hundred pounds of tea leaves. That the color of black tea is not owing to the fire is evident from the following facts:—When the leaves are dried in the sun the same color is obtained, and on the other side, if roasted by fire, without the process of fermentation or withering, and then finished in the Poy-long, a kind of green tea is produced.—Robert O. Fielding in American Grocer.

THE BANANA MARKET.

The New Orleans Picayune gives the following table of banana imports into the United States and Canada for each of the last two years. The figures show that the city near the mouths of the Mississippi leads all the rest, with New York a good second, Philadelphia racing with Boston for the honor of third place on the list, and Baltimore doing but about a third part as much as either of the two:

	1892.	1891.	Increase.
New Orleans	4,483,351	3,735,841	747,510
New York...	3,715,625	3,567,768	147,857
Philadelphia	1,818,328	1,019,234	799,094
Boston	1,840,519	1,710,005	130,514
Baltimore...	625,077	609,668	15,409
Savannah...	190,000	73,209	116,791
Mobile	150,000	130,000	20,000
Montreal...	30,019		30,019
Galveston...	3,000	92,515	*.....
Tampa		48,000	*.....

Total.... 12,855,919 10,986,240 2,007,194

*Decrease—Galveston, 89,515; Tampa, 48,000.

The total increase of about 18 per cent for last year is astonishing in view of the fact that fear of cholera tended to reduce the consumption of the fruit, and it is cited as a reason why the imports at New Orleans were not much larger as some cargoes which would otherwise have gone to that port went to Philadelphia. The wonder grows when we consider that the figures given above represent bunches, each of which contains from 70 to 150 bananas. A hundred for each would be a very moderate estimate, but gives more than one and a quarter billions of bananas for consumption in the United States last year, or nearly twenty per head for all the men, women and children in the country. As many do not touch the fruit from one year to another, and many others touch it but occasionally, there must be great numbers with whom the banana may also be described as a regular article of diet during several months in each year. It is used by them not simply as a relish but as a nourishing food, which it is well known to be. In the tropical countries where it grows most abundantly it constitutes a large part of the food of the people, and the nourishment is very great. The plant is so prolific that according to Humboldt the same area that produces 1,000 pounds of potatoes will produce 44,000 pounds of bananas, and a surface bearing wheat enough to feed one man will grow enough bananas to feed twenty-five. The principal sources of banana imports to the United States are Jamaica, Honduras, and Baracoa.—Ex.

PUSHING THE TEA TRADE.

There is no department in a grocer's business that needs to be more carefully looked after and intelligently worked than his tea trade. It is assailed from all quarters. Proprietary packet teas have made such serious inroads upon it that some grocers question the wisdom of stocking such goods. Great advertising houses have found the parcels post system so convenient that they have attracted even family trade to their own centres in the great cities, while the multiplication of agencies and canvassers in the rural districts have in that way attracted the tea trade from its legitimate channel—the grocer's shop. Worse, however, than these attacks is the outrageously misleading statements made by some of the largest advertisers who appeal to the public for support. Their advertisements deserve epithets more forcible than parliamentary, and have exerted a bad influence on the public mind. Passing over a form of announcement which we dealt with some months ago,—"the finest tea the world produces 1s. 6d. per lb.," when fine Pekoes were fetching 2s. 5d. per lb. in the public sale—we notice that to-day finest Ceylon tea is advertised to the public by one well-known house at 2s. per lb., whilst a reference to our market reports will show that this week Ceylon tea has been fetching prices which, with duty, make the price in public sale pence more per pound than that at which alleged finest tea is offered at retail. In the face of such statements it is not surprising to learn that some of the trade organizations are crying out for some way of stopping such advertisements, at any rate of producing a counterblast which they desire shall be more effective than the famous one King James promulgated against tobacco. Which is the best way to produce such an effect if, of course, a debatable question which should be very carefully considered before action is decided on, as we think it will be found that some retail grocers have been imitating the bad example set in the advertisements complained of. Not long ago we saw a handbill issued by a grocer in which he offered to give 24 ounces of finest Ceylon tea for 1s. 10d. Nor is this an isolated case. We have many times noticed very extravagant statements about tea, and prices in the windows of grocers who ought to have known better. Therefore it is important that we should see that this much complained of practice is cured at home before invoking the gods to smite and utterly destroy our outside foes. And this craze of trying to persuade the public not to pay more than eighteen pence per pound for tea is the more unreasonable because there is really a good demand for "a cup of tea," the cultivation of which should prove profitable. Those who have made the experiment say that when a high-class tea has been put before their customers it has been readily taken up, and though of course in poorer neighborhoods the cheapest article finds favor, the better classes are willing to pay fair price for a good article. And this proves what we have before held, that if a grocer gives care and study to his tea trade, learning the peculiar tastes of his own district, he cannot fail to do better for his clients, and enlarge his tea trade when he provides a suitable blend, than can the great advertising houses who manifestly cannot put on the market an article suitable for all districts. And it is just at this point that the prospects of the grocers' tea trade may be said to look hopeful. Let a grocer master for himself the art of tea tasting and tea blending, then study the tastes of his neighborhood, and give his customers a good article for their money, and we believe his tea trade will be almost invulnerable to the attacks of the outside firms whose advertising misstatements we all so much deplore.—Grocers' Chronicle.

PECAN CULTURE IN TEXAS.

As this branch of fruit industry has had very little attention paid to it, from the fact that it is a nut that is hardly known outside of the United States, and very little known of it outside of the States of Louisiana, Mississippi and Texas, where it grows in its natural state, I will endeavor to give an outline of my success and failure. This nut bids fair to outrival the English walnut, as it has a superior flavor and will withstand the reverses of the season better. The tree thrives best on alluvial valley lands. My orchard, which consists of nearly 600 acres, has 16,000 from 1 to four-year-old trees. I can safely say that the four-year-old trees will come into bearing in another five years.

They have in this section of Brown County, bordering on Pecan Bayou, been known to have begun bearing at from 7 to 8 years old. Very few embark in the enterprise from the fact that it takes so long for them to come into bearing. But this can be obviated by cultivating the land in corn and cotton until the trees begin bearing. And then it ought to be put into some orchard grass, which will if cut off before the nuts begin to fall, almost defray the cost of gathering. Now this gathering can be done by machinery on the order of street-sweepers, so that the nuts, when they begin to fall, which they do when the first heavy frost opens the burs, can be swept and thus be gathered off the ground. The trees will produce from one to fifteen bushels of nuts, according to age. There is a tree in our neighborhood which began bearing at 8 years, and at 16 it produced ten bushels; now the tree is 19 years old, and produced last year eleven bushels, for which the owner got $3 per bushel. I paid him three years ago $5 per bushel or $50 for the product of his tree. Now right in this connection let me state I have no nuts or trees for sale, now will I have any nuts from my orchard for market for four or five years. As the supply of nuts is scarce, I may assert that if there were 1,000 more orchards planted, as large as mine, during the coming year, the better it would be for the grower of the nuts, as then they would be better known, and the supply would be great enough to create a demand. I have known Pecans to sell at $1 per bushel years ago, but to-day choice nuts command from $4 to $5. Now figure the profit of an acre of nine-year-old trees, which will produce a bushel to the tree; that, at $4 per bushel, would be $108, as it takes twenty-seven trees to the acre, forty feet each way. Now, as I said before, the cost would be nominal for gathering, so that $8 would be more than enough to pay all expenses, which would leave a net profit of $100 per acre for the first year. Now, when the tree is 18 years old, and produces ten bushels to the tree, that will give $40 per tree, or $1,080 to the acre. Now deduct the cost of gathering, $80, which would leave a net profit of $1,000 per acre. But say just half of that, $500; now what investment can beat that? The editor of one of our Texan papers, after seeing my place, commented on it by stating that he would rather have my pecan farm than any national bank. First, because the returns would be greater, and secondly, the owner would have a clear conscience. Now, to plant an orchard one must begin by having the choicest nuts, as they will always command the highest market price, and be in demand when scrubby pecans will hardly bring any value.

My advice to those starting is to plant the seed and not young trees, for they are harder, and will withstand the reverses of the seasons better. Plant the nuts three in a hill and about 6 inches in the ground, then thin out to one and then protect from the ravages of rabbits and other rodents by crated boxes made of cypress wood tarred at the bottom.

Do not plant alfalfa or small grain between the rows. I lost the first year I planted nearly my entire crop of trees from rabbits, which are very fond of the young sprouts. To protect the trees from these ravages I put yellow pine stakes around them, but this was detrimental in that as soon as they began to rot at the bottom they harbored the wood house, which made its way to the nut and thus injured the tree. I then made crates out of cypress wood, and tarred bottom, and from that day to this I have not been bothered with the wood house or rabbit. After consulting the Agricultural Department I put 100 acres in alfalfa, clearing the ground around each tree about four feet, but I soon saw that would not do, for the alfalfa grew so thick and absorbed all the moisture that it killed out a good portion of the trees, and last year I cut up that 100 acres of alfalfa and the trees that are now set out on that patch are thriving and doing well. The balance of the trees, where corn and cotton have been planted, made rapid growth, some measuring from six to eight feet. It is true that all things have their disadvantages and enemies, and with the pecan the above enumerated pests are all I have to contend with. In some sections the squirrel will unearth the nuts before they come up, but we do not have them in this vicinity, nor field rats. It is important that these crates should be cleaned out every year, as rubbish and dirt from the plow accumulate so that it will breed insects and grass will grow within the boxes. The ground naturally forms a high place as the ploughs plough to the tree. This year I am beginning to plough from the trees, which will be quite an advantage to them.

Now, as to insects, the pecan tree has only three that I know of; the first two are in advantage, the third can easily be eradicated. They are as follows: First the bud worm, which deposits its eggs in the bud early in the spring, thus injuring the bud early in which it has been deposited. But this is nature's pruner and has a partial advantage, and can be got rid of by spraying the tree with Paris green. Second, the saw beetle comes along and saws off a twig here and there, which is no disadvantage. To get rid of them, burn the twigs that they saw off, as they deposit eggs on the same. Then the third insect is a caterpillar, which forms a web of eight to 12 inches long, deposits eggs in same, which can be burned out by applying a torchlight. They have never done any damage anywhere that I have heard of. Now, when the trees get to be three or four feet high, carefully tie some corn against the boxes. Do this every year and burn the old shucks so that it will keep from breeding insects. These are the only disadvantages I know of, except the complaint that in sections they don't bear any more than once in three years. That is probably caused from the excessive rains washing off the pollen so that it does not come in contact with the stamens and thus fructify.

Plant an ear of corn by itself and you will see nothing but a nubbin. This applies to all plants whose pollen is waited.

In this section which I have been living in for nearly ten years, I can safely say that we have never had a failure, although at seasons they do not bear as much as others.

I would not advise persons planting where the water stands on the ground for two or three days, as it is liable to drown out the trees.

The California orange groves have been the ideal of fruit-growers for profit. But a pecan grove, I venture to say, will be more profitable to its owner, from the fact that the commission man gets most of the profit out of oranges, as they cannot be kept any length of time, and when they come into bearing they come all at once, thus glutting the market. But not so with pecans, for if the market glutted they could be held for three or four years, and consequently the commission merchant could not regulate the market so as to get the cream out of the business. And now I will close with the following extract, and leave the reader to see what a profitable field is now open for the enterprise:

"Rivera produced in English walnuts alone, within a radius of three miles, $80,000, netting $200 to $500 per acre. In August, 1890, the Horticultural Commissioners in Los Angeles county counted the orange, lemon, olive, English walnut, in orchards and nurseries, over 10,000,000 trees, this in only one county. A 12-year old orange grove in Panama valley earned a net profit of $936 per acre, the groves of English walnuts and almonds from $300 to $500 per acre. All this on higher priced land than ours, and with higher wages than we pay. These are large profits, but they do not equal what Texas pecans can be made to earn by cultivation.—F. A. Swinden, in Brownwood, Texas, Bulletin.

A CARELESS YOUTH.

The doctor, the author, the farmer and I were talking of travel in far foreign lands, the most entrancing topic of conversation on earth, and the doctor told this story: In the Spanish American countries, it is customary for servants and young people to go about in the hot weather almost literally naked, although they usually wear hats on account of the glaring sun.

One day a Costa Rica grocer sent his boy to deliver some goods purchased by a family newly arrived from a more inclement latitude. The boy was wearing a sore toe and a brunette smile. When he returned he brought the grocer a note, vigorously objecting to his attire, or lack of it.

"Caramba!" said the grocer sternly. "You young villain, don't you ever go to that house again without putting on your hat."—Ex.

STICK TO HIGH-CLASS GOODS.

A prominent grocer in a great city—let us assume Washington, D.C.—sold a line of high-grade goods which carried a well-advertised label. His customers were pleased, no complaints came, and his trade in the article increased. There came along a persuasive salesman from a competing house and offered a similar line in equally attractive style, but at much lower prices. The assertion was made that the goods were of equal, if not better quality. The grocer yielded to the temptation, and bought a line of the new goods. Weeks rolled along, and his trade in the article did not grow, but still there were no complaints lodged against the article noted. It soon came to notice, however, that the account of one of his best customers—let us imagine the White House—had come to a standstill. No complaints from that quarter, but simply no more orders. Investigation proved that the favorite customer had received some of the newer goods, and, finding the quality inferior to that formerly provided, simply stopped the account, evidently believing that the grocer lacked reliability—the one element necessary to build up and retain a first-class trade.

Did it pay to yield to temptation and leave a reliable line of goods for an untried line?

Another grocer in—let us say Peekskill—built up a paying trade in the George Washington brand of flour from the mill, and which brand was his individual property. It was uniform in grade, always gave satisfaction, being like F. A. Ferris & Co.'s meats, "A little higher in price, but—" A glub-tongued agent of another mill induced this Peekskill grocer to buy fifty barrels of another brand, guaranteeing it equally as good as the George Washington, and fifty cents per barrel less. The grocer took the bait, was hooked, and landed. The flour was put under the grocer's private brand and distributed. Nearly every barrel came back, and in a month the reputation of the flour was so damaged that the brand had to be discontinued, and the labor of years in building it up sacrificed.

Did it pay to yield to temptation and leave a reliable line of goods for an untried line?

The above items of everyday history could be duplicated indefinitely. Grocers build up a trade on favorite brands of canned goods, baking powder, flavoring extracts, certain varieties of coffee, grades of tea, special or other brands of fine soaps, high grade flour, etc., and then risk the work and expense of years by trying some new competing brand, simply because of a lower price. There are other considerations than lower cost that are lost sight of, and which have a greater money-making power than is lodged in untried goods or inferior goods at lower prices. A grocer must live up to the standard of his best customers or else he cannot suit a first-class trade. He must be epicure enough to determine for himself which is the best article; be prepared to say which line of soups show the best seasoning or flavor, the best consistency and slightness; which brands of meat are the finest in texture and flavor; which canned peaches can be relied on for uniformity and excellence of syrup, flavor and appearance; which canned peas are the most uniform in size, color, and are the most tender and of the sweetest flavor. When convinced that the best is in stock, and the trade is satisfied and steadily grows, stick to that brand and let price be the last criticism.

Said a prominent merchant: "I always buy R. & R.'s peaches, and willingly pay more for them than any other sort, because I am certain there is no variability in quality—it's always the same, year in and year out." When customers talk like that, what good reason can be assigned for trying experiments with a satisfied trade?—American Grocer.

PISCATORIAL HISTORY.

This is the season when fish receives more attention than during any part of the year, and a little history regarding it may prove interesting. The information is gathered from a pamphlet recently issued by Leggett & Co., New York, a brief notice of which has already appeared in THE GROCER.

Among the ancients, fisheries were carried on extensively from a very early period, and formed a valuable branch of industry. Byzantine, a modern Constantinople, and Sinope on the Black Sea were especially valuable for their fisheries, and fishermen on the Mediterranean pursued their prey, not only on the coast, but in the open sea, making long voyages, and often passing the pillars of Hercules. The fisheries of Egypt, although justly celebrated, were restricted to the smaller confines of inland bodies of water, since the Egyptians regarded the sea with peculiar abhorrence. On the ninth day of the first month every Egyptian was obliged to eat a fried fish before the door of his house, except the priests, who burned instead of eat the fish. The revenues arising from the fisheries of Lake Moeris were given to the Queen of Egypt for pin money, and are stated to have amounted to something like $400,000 annually.

The Hebrews recognized fish as one of the divisions of the animal kingdom.

The Mosaic law pronounced unclean such fish as were devoid of fins and scales. The Hebrews doubtless became familiar with the remarkable fecundity of fish while in Egypt, where the abundance of fish on the Nile, the lakes and the canals rendered it one of the staple commodities of food. The destruction of the fish was on this account a most serious visitation to the Egyptians.

The most usual method of catching fish was by using the net. Angling was a favorite pursuit of the wealthy in Egypt and was followed by the poor who could not afford a net. The requisites were a hook and line.

The development of the fisheries during the middle ages was greatly promoted by the demand for fish that was created by the fasts of the Church, but the discovery at the end of the 15th century of Newfoundland, and its fisheries, which, to this day surpass all others in magnitude and value, gave a greater impulse to the business.

In 1548 Parliament to encourage the fisheries, passed an act laying heavy penalties on persons convicted of eating flesh on fish days. In 1563 another act was passed providing that "for the maintenance of shipping, the increase of fishermen and marines, and for the sparing of the fresh victuals of the realm, it shall not be lawful for anyone to eat flesh on Wednesdays and Saturdays, unless under the forfeiture of £3 for each offence."

In 1660 Charles II. issued a proclamation for the strict observance of Lent, signing as one reason, the good it produces in the employment of fishermen. In the same year Parliament passed an act remitting the duty on salt used in curing fish, and exempting all fishing materials from customs and excise.

Among other European nations the Dutch for centuries took the lead in the fisheries, and the herring fishery was one of the chief sources of their wealth. There is also a productive cod fishery carried on upon the Dogger bank which lies between Holland and England. The Norway cod fisheries are extremely valuable, and are carried on chiefly from the province of Finmark. There is also a salmon fishery carried on in the rivers of Norway. The inland fisheries of Russia are among the most productive in the world. The waters of China abound in fish, and it is said that one-eighth of the people of that empire derive their food from the water.

In addition to its sea fisheries the river and lake fisheries of the United States are of great importance. There are valuable shad fisheries on the Connecticut, Ohio and Potomac, and other rivers falling into the Atlantic. The great lakes, Erie, Huron and Superior, abound in white fish, which is the chief object of pursuit, though trout and pickerel are caught in large numbers. The fisheries of the Pacific coast are also important, and the rivers of that region abound in salmon of the finest quality as well as many other species of fish. The number of living species of fish may be set down at 10,000, of which more than 6,000 are described in ichthyology.

They are described as vertebrated animals, breathing through the medium of water by means of gills, cold blooded, they are little sensitive to changes of temperature, and the sexes care nothing for each other. There is not a color of the rainbow which may not be seen in the bands, spots, or scales of fishes. Their beauty, therefore, as well as their utility as food, early drew attention to these inhabitants of the water. Many tribes of men obtain their principal nourishment from the sea. Countless numbers of cod, mackerel, herring, and other migrating fishes give employment to thousands of men and prove important items of national wealth.

When we consider that more than two-thirds of the surface of the globe is covered by sea, and that a large part of the continents is occupied by lakes, rivers and marshes, we may understand the importance of this class of animals in the economy of nature.

Norwegian history shows that Mackerel was an article of commerce as early as the year 600, and how many thousand years before that no one knows.

The history of the Irish fishery for mackerel as followed on that coast by English, Dutch, French and Spanish fishermen, dates back over 600 years, and how long before this can only be a matter of conjecture.

As salt and its curative qualities were known to the ancients, the use of salt fish probably dates back to the first inhabitants.

A large proportion of the fish caught off the coast of Ireland, Norway and France are shipped to this market, while England and the provinces also consign a great many. The Norwegian fish are of good quality, while the bulk of the Irish mackerel show lack of care in handling, due to the fact that the fish, as a rule, lie too long before being cured. If the curers of Irish mackerel would exercise more care in packing, and leave out all soft fish, the goods would compare favorably with our native shore fish.

As early as 1652 the mackerel fisheries were carried on here in a small way by small boats off our shores, and there is no record of anything in that line until 1809, when the business increased, and our vessels began to catch them in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, and for ten years from 1809 to 1819, the total catch was only 18,000 barrels. In 1819 the catch amounted to over 100,000 barrels, and continued to grow until 1831, when there were packed in New England about 550,000 barrels, an amount which has never been reached in any one year since. From that time, for some cause which cannot be satisfactorily explained, the catch has gradually decreased.

The method of catching mackerel in former years was by hook and line from the deck of the vessel, each vessel carrying a crew of about twelve men, but in 1870 the purse seine or net was employed, and has continued in use up to the present time. In the past year the number of vessels employed in the United States was over 200, with a crew of 3,500 men, and representing a value of several million dollars.

The earliest mention of the herring fishery dates from A.D. 709.

The eastern coast of Scotland is the chief seat of the herring fishery, the annual production of which is computed at 700,000 barrels, worth several millions of dollars. Thousands of barrels of herring are also shipped to this market from Holland, Norway, Newfoundland and Labrador. The latter fish in point of flavor and quality being the finest of any.

Sardines are abundant in the Mediterranean and the Bay of Biscay, and are also found in the Atlantic ocean, although not so far north as England.

But a portion of the little fish that are sold as sardines are entitled to the name. Sprats, herrings and pilchards, all inferior in delicacy to the true sardine, are imposed upon the consumer under false colors. They are excellent and valuable articles of food, but they are not sardines. The excellence of so-called sardines depends first upon the genuineness of the fish itself; and next, upon the quality of the oil in which it is preserved. Pure olive oil is an essential; with any other the delicate flavor of the fish is destroyed. Adulterated and inferior oil is used to a great extent in the preservation of sardines, and a rank and coarse flavor results. The buyer should always select brands whose reputation is a guarantee of quality.

As early as 1504 the French fishermen were the pioneers in the cod fisheries of the western Atlantic, and within twenty-five years after the discovery of America by Columbus there were fifty vessels sailing from France, Spain and Portugal, engaged in the cod fisheries on the banks of Newfoundland, and as early as 1577 the French had no less than 150 vessels employed in this business. The fish were made hard dry cured, and most of the product was shipped direct from here to Bilbao, Spain, for a great many years. Eventually other fishing banks were discovered nearer home, and as the country grew the fishing increased, and now our catch is mostly used in home markets. About 1820 the "Georges Banks" were discovered, and on these grounds are caught the finest codfish found on the North American continent.

These fisheries have been carried on continually since then up to the present time, and they are gradually being worked out, the catch being less each year.

The principal grounds for the trawl or bank cod are known as the Grand Banks of Newfoundland.

These banks have been fished over for more than three centuries, and have seldom failed to furnish an abundance of codfish. They are fished over by French and Canadian fishermen and by the fleet from the United States not engaged in the shore fisheries. In 1892 there were 559 vessels employed in the cod fisheries in the United States, employing about 9,000 men. The total catch of codfish for that year was about 600,000 quintals.

THE SARDINE CATCH.

It was confidently predicted last year that the catch and pack of sardines on the French coast would be one of the smallest on record, with the probabilities very strongly in favor of high prices for this popular fish. During nearly the entire fishing season the reports of the catch were of the most gloomy character, the advices constantly received from the packers being that the fish were not to be found on the coast in the usual number, and that an actual scarcity threatened. The prospects were indeed so unfavorable that French packers hesitate to name firm prices at which they would contract for fall delivery, while on the other hand our importers were rather reluctant to open negotiations for a line that promised a high cost, when the chances were against getting back a corresponding increase in the value from consumers. As the season progressed, however, it became evident that Portuguese packers were doing much better than usual, as the offerings from that locality began to increase, and gradually the fears of the scarcity were dispelled. Purchases were made there of quantities for forward delivery upon about the same basis of values current the previous year, and subsequently with an improvement in the take on the French coast, the market finally assumed its normal condition, and the threatened material advance in the goods was not realized. The French fish are in every way superior to those taken off the Portuguese coast. The former are usually secured at a time when the fish are of a more desirable size, and, being taken within a very short distance of shore, the catch is handled quickly, retaining their flavor and sweetness, whereas the Portuguese fishermen are compelled to put well out to sea, and it is often found necessary to salt the fish to insure the keeping quality until the catch can be placed into the hands of packers. For several years past the French pack has shown a gradual falling off, the habits of the fish there having changed in a manner similar to the mackerel upon our own coast. Observing the drift of affairs, and the fact that more southern waters have been invaded by the sardine, many French packers have been compelled by the force of circumstances to remove their plants to Portugal, hence the industry there has increased to a remarkable extent, and will undoubtedly continue to grow in the future. Previous to the enactment of the McKinley law the goods packed in Portugal were put up under French labels and sold as such, but now the cases come branded as a product of the country in which they are packed, and discriminating buyers are placed in a position to obtain either the French or Portuguese as their trade requirements suggest. Importers find that the consumers of this country are running upon a better class of stock. When they want sardines they will not be satisfied with herring or other varieties of fish that are put up under the name of sardines, and when they desire a prime quality of oil, the substance that some packers in this country and Europe venture upon is promptly detected, and turned down as unfit for educated palates. The stock of sardines in this market today is fair, though not excessive. Prices appear to be well established upon a firm basis, and the indications point to a maintenance of same.—N.Y. Bulletin.

THE BUSINESS MAN'S MEMORY.

Such are the demands on the business man's memory that an easy way of cultivating it is a good thing to know, and if one tried and not found wanting, so much the better, says a contemporary. This description answers exactly to a mode of assisting the memory adopted by a good many railway postal clerks, who are engaged in a capacity rendering it highly desirable that they should know perfectly the routes on which post offices are located. The way they accomplish this apparently irksome and arduous task is probably as simple and as good a way as can be. It proceeds on the principle of the relation of ideas. But by means that, unlike some systems of mnemonics, are sufficient in themselves, without the intrusion of a medium foreign to the matter to be remembered.

A few words will make the plan plain enough. The clerk provides himself with cards, on each of which he writes on one side the name of an office, and on the other side of the same card, the name of the route by which that office is reached. Having accomplished this in as many instances as may be necessary, the clerk reads the back and front of each card with care. The next time he proceeds to do the same thing, he finds out to his great satisfaction, that the name of the office suggests the route in probably the majority of cases, if he is dealing with say fifty or sixty. It is not long before he knows all that he is wanting to know of places and connections concerning the entire area of the territory he is interested in serving with mail. Surprising examples are cited of the proficient use of this easy mode of assisting the memory, which commends itself to the judgment promptly, and without particular examination. Proofs of its great value are easily citable, and will become numerous as its efficiency shall be better known and more extensively tested, as surely will be the case. A postal railroad clerk learned the whole State of Ohio in four days, separating the mail without an error the fourth day after his adoption of the use of the cards, in the manner described, as an assistant to his memory. The mention of the railroad suggests that much might be done in training the memory, while travelling on the cars; and this, we submit, might be a better way of spending the time than looking out of the window, or reading the blinding type of the average newspaper, a continuous strain to which at least a partial let up would be a real advantage. Large writing on both sides of a supply of cards, that on the one side indicating the subject, and that on the other what is sought to be remembered relating to the subject, which make no serious demand on the strength of the eyesight, would, we feel sure, prove to be an interesting occupation, and would infallibly yield results not only gratifying in a high degree, but of substantial and permanent value.

CANNING IN THE SOUTH.

The numerous canning factories being erected throughout the whole of West Tennessee will, says Industrial South, to a great extent wean the farmer from producing cotton. To illustrate, factories of from 10,000 to 20,000 capacity are being erected at Milan, Jackson, McKenzie, Sharon, Union City, and other places. Over 1,000 acres will be set aside for truck farming in Gibson county alone, and the same will probably prove true as regards the other localities. The people have at last learned that to realize from their products they must market them nearer home. A leading truck farmer will undertake this season to cultivate celery on a large scale—that which has hitherto been imported from Michigan. He claims that from experiment he finds that this vegetable can be grown in Tennessee, and a quality equally as fine as the northern product. Many farmers from Iowa and Illinois have moved to West Tennessee in the last few months and purchased farms to engage in truck farming—an industry which will eventually solve the cotton question and convert the country from mortgage and poverty to peace and prosperity.

SUGAR FROM COTTON SEED.

The Louisiana Planter says that a process has been discovered for extracting sugar from cottonseed meal, and though the details of this process have not been disclosed, it is said that the product obtained is of a very superior quality, being fifteen times sweeter than cane sugar and twenty times more so than sugar made from beets. It cannot, however, enter into competition as an article of commerce with ordinary sugar, owing to its peculiar tendency to ferment and sour. This peculiarity may be due to some chemical conditions of its extraction, and a German chemist is at present engaged on a series of experiments with a view of discovering some means of neutralizing this tendency.

R. Hargreaves, Manager.

The Patrons of Industry have just concluded their annual session in this city. With great flare of trumpets they told of great things accomplished in the way of creating new lodges and augmenting of membership. But the strength of an army is not in its numbers. The right of the farmers or any other class to organize is denied by no one who believes in the liberty of the subject. Where the Patrons of Industry incur disapprobation is in regard to some of its objects. And simply because these objects are calculated to deprive the subject of the very liberty which the Patrons themselves profess to so highly prize. Live and let live is an axiom that is, in theory at least, universally believed in, but which in practice is often overlooked. The farmers of this as well as any other country have grievances, but none of them have been created by storekeepers as a class in that they should be made the victims of the spleen of the Patrons. The storekeepers of this country are not getting excessive profits. There may be perhaps an odd one here and there who enjoys a monopoly, and makes all he can out of it. But mercantile profits, as a rule, are not too large. Whatever may be the inclination, merchants are prevented from charging unduly high prices for their goods by the keenness of competition. The great trouble is that they are not receiving sufficient remuneration in proportion to capital invested and energy expended. We know the contrary is the opinion among a good many consumers. The bright young men, for instance, who forsake farm for mercantile life think so for a time. But they discover their mistake before long. The discovery to some comes simultaneously with the end of their business existence. Vide list of mercantile failures.

* * *

Any man in business will tell you that 12½ per cent. profit on invoice price is not sufficient upon which to successfully do business. There is freight, insurance, etc., not to mention loss from bad debts that should be taken into consideration. But throwing aside the contention that a merchant cannot successfully do business on a 12½ per cent. profit as per invoice, the Patrons are unjust when they compel a man to sell them on that basis or, in the event of his refusing to do so, transfer their patronage to his perhaps next door competitor who lacks the same stiffness of backbone. In the first place it is a well known fact that some of the patrons are not themselves just in keeping their part of the contract. For instance, there are numbers of storekeepers throughout the country who sell sugar at or even below cost. The Patrons know this, and some of them have no qualms of conscience about purchasing their sugar, and in fact all goods that they can buy cheaper at stores other than those with whom they have contracted with for all their supplies. Another unjust feature is that this agreement compels the storekeeper to establish two sets of rules—one for Patrons and another for those that are not. It is not doing unto others as they would have others do unto them when Patrons or any other class of the community demand privileges that are denied others.

* * *

Bitter is the fruit that the storekeepers generally gather as the result of selling themselves to the Patrons in the haste to get their custom. It is said that last year out of twenty-four storekeepers who entered into an agreement with the patrons to supply them with goods on the 12½ per cent. basis that no less than twenty became bankrupt. And what was the experience last year has been the experience all along the line. In a word this invidious agreement, breeds deception, dishonest practices, class privileges and, as a rule, commercial ruin to the party of the second part—the storekeeper.

Every spring and fall the wheels of commerce are more or less clogged owing to the bad condition of the country roads. The question of how best to remedy the evil has been a burning one, particularly during the past few years, in both Canada and in the United States. As yet, however, there does not appear to be any appreciable benefit. In the cities modern methods of laying permanent pavements have done much towards facilitating vehicular traffic, while in country districts much the same conditions prevail as did ten years ago. And so it will be to the end of the chapter so long as present methods are adhered to. The farmer, in performing his allotted statute labor, merely has in view the completion of his task. Much literature has been circulated regarding the matter, particularly during the last year or so. This has now been supplemented by a special bulletin issued by James A. Bell, C. E., under instructions from the Minister of Agriculture for the Province of Ontario. It looks at the question from a practical standpoint, as its title, "The Making of Roads," indicates. In its opening remarks it refers to the excellent railway facilities possessed for shipping farm produce and urges the necessity of the roads leading to these railways being placed in first-class condition. "Good roads," it says, "enable the farmer to market his produce at all times, to take advantage of changes in market prices, and to utilize time that cannot be given to other farm work; they enable him to market his produce and secure his supplies at less expense for hauling, with less wear and tear to vehicles, and with less injury to animals. The improvement of roads results in bringing more closely together the members of the agricultural community, and thereby increases the social intercourse of farmers." The writer then dives into the more practical side of the question, such as grades, foundations, width of road bed, material for surfaces, etc., adducing diagrams to illustrate how by carrying out his suggestions better roads can be secured. The bulletin is a valuable addition to the literature on this important subject, and it is to be hoped it will in time bear fruit. But much really cannot be expected in the way of better roads until either the Provincial Government or at least the county councils adopt more radical and aggressive measures. It is to the interest of country merchants to keep this idea ever before their agricultural customers as well as their own representatives in the county and provincial parliaments.

Exhibitions attract fakirs as well as the reputable and industrious. They are usually found in goodly numbers even at the country fall fair. In the natural order of things then it is only reasonable to expect that they will swoop down in flocks on the World's Fair to be held at Chicago. In fact some of them are already spreading their wings preparatory to doing so. One of them has been rather too previous and bold in his preliminary poise, and his expose is the result. The particular faker is a man signing himself the secretary of the darymen's department of the World's Fair, and it is the butter makers of Canada and the United States that he purposes making his tools. He has had the audacity to call, in his alleged official position, a meeting of butter-makers at the Dairy-men's Department, World's Fair grounds, on June 23-24 to organize a National Association, evidently to boom black pepsin for the making of butter. "Hundreds of farmers are using black pepsin," he explains in the circular which he has sent out, "a teaspoonful of which, added to each gallon of cream will more than double the yield of butter. Unfortunately for the man who is so anxious to bring into existence an association whose object shall be to promote the manufacture of butter a la black pepsin, one of the invitations fell into the hands of THE GROCER. From this office it was sent on to W. J. Buchanan, chief of the Department of Agriculture, Chicago, and he in turn informs us that "no person has been given authority to hold such a meeting, and the slip you sent me was the first information I had of the scheme; in a word, I know nothing about it whatever."

American money has never found grace in the eyes of Canadian bankers. Those in this city take the American bills over their counters on consideration of a small discount to cover cost of transporting them to the land of their nativity, it being the custom for each bank to send to the United States all the bills it has on hand when a certain amount has been reached. Silver they will have nothing whatever to do with. The entry wicket is closed against it. In the border towns and cities and in the western and newer provinces the antipathy has not been so pronounced. In fact in some places business men took it as readily as they did the legal tender of the country. Since the drop in the silver market and the attending unsettled condition of the American financial situation, not only have the Canadian banks exercised a closer scrutiny regarding the currency from across the border circulating here, but merchants who hitherto were not much concerned in the matter have developed a decided aversion to it. Some of them went to the extreme of refusing to have anything to do with it. This anti-American silverware has now reached the Pacific coast. In Vancouver, B.C., it seems that the chartered banks have not heretofore made any discrimination between Canadian and American silver, now they impose a discount of 20 per cent. on the American coin. The new regulations went into force March 1, and the bankers at Westminster will charge a similar discount after to-day. The merchants out there do not, however, seem to be in sympathy with the attitude taken by the banks. In fact they have taken a position practically in direct opposition to the banks, having, according to a despatch, decided to continue to take American silver at par and ship it to the United States. If the banks persevere in the position they have taken it seems little likely that the merchants will for long persevere in theirs. People soon get tired of doing unnecessary work. Not only is American silver not legal tender in Canada, but there is 2½ per cent. more alloy in its composition than has the Canadian coin.

When children we wrangle over the sugar stick; when we reach man's estate, it is the sugar without the stick that we fight wordy warfares over. At least this is the condition of affairs in Canada. Editors of newspapers are the the most persistent combatants, but members of Parliament, in the House and on the stump join in the "squabble" with zest when an opportunity is afforded. One of these periodical harmless little tilts took placelast week in the House between Messrs. Langelier and Kenney. Mr. Langelier introduced the debateable question by moving "that it is expedient and to the interest of the great bulk of consumers to admit free of duty all foreign sugars, whether raw or refined." But what most incurred the ire of Mr. Kenny was the remark that the duty enabled the sugar combine to unnecessarily take $3,000,000 a year out of the pockets of the consumers. Mr. Kenny is understood to have an interest in the sugar combine, and during his reply he used as strong language as parliamentary rules and regulations would permit in order to intimate that Mr. Langelier was not telling the truth. He also ventured the information that his refinery last year only made 1½ per cent. on its invested capital. Then the matter dropped and peace once more reigned.

If the Patrons of Industry succeed in driving out of politics proportionately as many as they have from storekeeping they will be conferring upon the country a benefit as great as is the injury they are now doing the mercantile community.

Statisticians, qualified and unqualified, occasionally turn their attention to figures regarding the proportion of successes to failures in business. One learned in the lore has just given the world the result of his investigations in the city of New York. Of every one hundred attempts in that city he says ninety-five fail absolutely. Of the other five three are so so, one excellent, and one exceptionally fine.

The Baltimore Trade proposes as a solution of the difficulty relative to the duty on tin, that a rebate be made on all food cans. "There is absolutely no use for them," it explains, "after they have been used as wrappers, and on such an article, which is for the benefit of the masses, it is working directly against their pockets, for to have any kind of a consumption of canned goods, you must be able to sell them cheap."

THE SMALL FISH TRADE.

The Toronto market has had a somewhat unusual experience this winter in the matter of small fish. Both salt and fresh water fish have been scarce commodities, and different reasons are assigned for the cause in each instance.

The heavy and almost continuous storms that have prevailed along the Atlantic coast are responsible for the falling off in the supply of small fish. On an average probable ten or a dozen car loads of frozen sea herring are brought into this market every winter, while this season one car is the sum total. All efforts made by local dealers to secure supplies met with practically the same reply: "Weather too stormy; no fish."

The light supplies of fresh water fish is due to quite another cause. A good many have been caught, but the trouble, if such it can be termed, has been in that the greater portion of them have been appropriated by the consumers in the vicinity of the fishing points. Two reasons are in turn advanced for this increase in the consumption in the north and north-western parts of the province. One of them is last fall's scarcity of white fish and trout prevented people salting down their usual supply of these fish, thus causing them to draw on the small fish now being caught for their supplies. Then the high price of pork is also credited with having something to do in the premises. As most people are probably aware, the farmers, particularly those in the settled portions of the country, depend largely upon the hog for their winter's supply of meat. This winter the unusually high prices ruling induced many of the farmers to sell their hogs, and to turn the attention of those of them living in the vicinity of the lakes more to fish than they have hitherto done. The influence of the hog is great. Who can tell where it ends? One thing at least is evident: Everything into the manufacture of which there enters fatty substances is becoming firmer in price.

Complaints regarding the short supply of small fish are not likely to be heard much longer, however. The members of the finny tribe are beginning to run, and during the last few days fairly good quantities of black bass and perch have arrived on this market.

The method of catching fish at this season is to cut a hole in the ice. Over this the fisherman places a hut. His fishing paraphernalia consists of a sort of harpoon, line, pulley and coal oil stove. The harpoon and line are attached to the pulley, which is fastened to the roof. The purpose of the coal oil stove is both to attract the fish and to warm the fisherman. All ready, the lone fisherman sits over the aperture in the ice. When an inquisitive fish pokes his nose up to learn the cause of the light, the harpoon, which has been previously weighted, is allowed to drop upon its unsuspecting victim. Thus is the performance repeated until the fisherman is either satisfied or tired.

THE MONTREAL BOARD OF TRADE.

The Montreal Board of Trade at its last meeting on Tuesday, 28th ult., disposed of some important business. A report of the committee on the Government insurance of registered letters was read as follows:

Your committee on Government insurance of registered letters, having fully considered the evidence before it, and taking into account the great and increasing necessity for additional security being given to the business community of all registered matter, beg to report as follows:

That the revenue derived by the Government from the sale of registration stamps amounts to a considerable sum during the course of a year—while the proportion of loss is, comparatively speaking, very small.

That a guarantee by the Government of the safe delivery of all registered matter, or failing that, the reimbursement of the amount lost, would be of great value to all who use that means of conveying valuables, etc., and that in the opinion of your committee, the Government should be urged to adopt some means whereby the desired security could be given, provided such could be done without the imposition of any extra charge in the cost of registration.

Signed, James A. Cantlie, F. J. Hart, A. A. Thibaudeau and Thos. J. Drummond.

In response to a request from Comptroller of Customs Wallace for a conference with the Board in reference to the want of uniformity of the appraisement of goods at various ports, it was decided to arrange a conference with the Hon. Mr. Wallace in Montreal at an early date.

The following Boards of Examiners were appointed:

Flour and meal—A. E. Gagnon, O. E. Goulet, W. A. Hastings, James S. Norris and David Robertson.

Wheat and other grains—Auguste Girard, A. G. McBreen, Hugh MacLennan, Robert Peddie and A. G. Thompson.

Leather and raw hides—Thomas Ecroyd, Z. Lapierre, F. C. A. McIndoe, Thaxter Shaw, John Stephens.

Beef and pork—James Allan, Peter Laing, Stewart Munn, T. S. Vibond, M. J. McGrail.

Pot ashes and pearl ashes—D. T. Tees, Chas. H. Cunningham, Henry Dobell, John E. Kirkpatrick, James C. Sinton.

Pickled fish and fish oil—John Baird, Charles Chaput, J. Rendell, R. P. McLea, T. S. Vipond.

Butter—A. McKay, Cowie, J. A. Vaillancourt, D. A. McPherson, Thomas Shaw, Geo. Wait.

The resolution adopted at a recent meeting of the Toronto Board of Trade about a necessary subsidy to a fast Atlantic service caused considerable discussion and the matter was referred to the following committee: Messrs. Jas. A. Cantlie, (convener), Edgar, Judge, J. B. McLea, J. D. Rolland and Jas. Williamson, who are to report at the meeting this week.

CANNED FRUITS.

Canned fruit has, for some time past, been the one particular line of goods with which receivers, commission merchants and brokers have had very trying experience during the past two months. Jobbers experience no difficulty whatever in filing orders promptly. As a matter of fact, not a few concerns in this and other cities have latterly carried a surplus for which cost price would not be refused, while receivers of California products have offered in a manner indicating some anxiety to exchange their goods for cash at comparatively low rates. In short, it looks as though that tired feeling has become chronic among the large holders. That the market has not utterly collapsed is, however, more than probable. In any event bargain hunters have manifested a little more interest the past few days and seem to be on the alert for anything cheap in the line of full standard goods at concessions from prices quoted of late. Pacific Coast goods, it is admitted, are pretty well out of packers' hands. In other words, the bulk of supply is in distributor's hands or held under advances made by banks, whose officials are well informed as to the general situation. That the demand for green fruit the coming season will be unusually large, particularly in Chicago and vicinity, is generally admitted, and it is almost a foregone conclusion that quarter will rival, if not exceed, the phenomenal shipments of eggs to Philadelphia during the Centennial year, when some merchants of the Quaker City had unenviable experience with the "hen fruit." This aside, the fact stands out boldly that most lines of canned fruit are cheap at present prices; that anything in the nature of crop failure would doubtless alien buying interest and that the trade would be likely to repeat the act of flocking together. For the present it can safely be said that the more popular lines of canned fruit are apparently the cheapest thing on the list.—N. Y. Bulletin.

BUYERS AND SELLERS IN TOWN.

Among the buyers and sellers in town during the week were noticed:

Mr. Kirkpatrick, of Kirkpatrick & Gilpin, Lefroy.

Mr. P. Rieder, of Rieder & Ruby, New Hamburg.

Mr. G. Hagarman, Zephyr.

Mr. J. N. Borsbery, eastern representative of Eby, Blain & Co., is in the city replacing his samples.

BUSINESS PEN SPLASHES.

It appears to me when a man starts business nowadays that he is like a bird with a loaf of bread. He chuckles and twitters to himself. Everything is lovely. He rejoices and is happy in the thought that it is all his own. But presently some other birds have been fluttering in the neighborhood, and they think he has got too much, so they close down and alight on his idol and begin to peck at it until it is all gone.

In the case of a merchant (I wont say grocer, for a grocer could not do such a thing) advertising 22 pounds of sugar for a dollar and only giving 20, should not steps be taken to have him punished for selling goods under false pretences.

* * *

Quite a bit depends upon how a man is fed. If you want good solid work done you must feed a man upon that which will produce good bone, muscle, brain and tissue. You cannot expect a man to work long unless you give him good food. If people would pay more attention to the quality instead of quantity, and pay the price for quality there would be better work done. The men who are expected to do the best work are the men who sometimes are the worst fed, hence the premature mental and physical wrecks.

ASSOCIATION GOSSIP.

At the half yearly meeting of the National Wholesale Tea Supply Association held in Manchester, it was shown that although the state of trade has been somewhat unsettled, particularly in the Lancashire manufacturing districts where the Association has numerous members, yet the result of the six month's business showed continuous development and progress, the increased output of the blended and packet tea departments alone amounting to nearly £20,000 more in value during 1892 than in 1891.

The grocers of Cardiff have organized an association. This seems to have antagonised the local press, and it is trying to impress the public with the idea that the grocers are organizing with a view to getting better prices.

The nineteenth annual report of the Birmingham Retail Grocers' Association shows an excess of income over expenditure of over £28. The benevolent fund now amounts to £1,451. During the year many of the members availed themselves of the assistance of the Association in settling matters of dispute in the trade, and in most instances an amicable settlement has been affected without recourse to law proceedings.

The retail grocers of New York, are wrestling with the question of the classification of eggs, and the members talk of compelling the wholesale dealers to mark the boxes in order to show whether the eggs are cold storage or fresh.

OF INTEREST TO GRAPE GROWERS.

Mr. McNaughton, the chief executive officer of the World's Fair Board, says it is intended to make a fine exhibit of grapes and wines at Chicago. The total acreage of bearing vines in the State of New York is 43,320, of which Chautauqua County, with a little portion of Erie County, Pa., has 9,850 acres. But one other district has a greater acreage than Chautauqua—Keuka, with 12,325 acres. The other districts are Canandaigua, 2,720; Ontario and Wayne, 1,020; Seneca, 4,250; Hudson River district, 11,050; and other counties, 2,805 acres. The market value of grapes per ton, sold in New York State, exceeds that of any other State except Georgia, which has only 1,938 acres, and Tennessee, which has 1,500 acres. Mr. McNaughton says the general managers of the State exhibit are impressed with the idea that this State produces a superior quality of grapes and sparkling and still wines, and confident the judges will so award at the Columbian Exposition. The value of the plant in the State of New York in grape and wine culture is $20,400,000, and 25,500 persons are employed in connection with this industry.—N. Y. Bulletin.

CHICORY AND COFFEE.

Many persons who talk learnedly about coffee and its making have seldom, if ever, tasted pure coffee. All they know is a more or less strong infusion of chicory, adulterated with a portion of coffee. I heard of a connoisseur the other day who made the lives of his wife and his cook a burden to them by reason of the coffee brought to him in his own house. In spite of the most careful making and the most absolute purity his Mocha was never right. At last, in desperation, his wife asked him if he ever got his coffee to his taste. "Oh, yes; at the club. They make it there right enough," was the answer. Driven to her wits' end, the lady consulted with her cook and finally sent the latter to the club to learn the "proper way to make coffee." As the absolute purity of the coffee was one of the points insisted on as essential by her master, the cook studied the coffee used in preparing her master's infusion, and her sense of smell speedily taught her that his so-called "pure coffee" was largely mixed with chicory. The chief confirmed her opinion, and she went home. The coffee was made and for the first time gave perfect satisfaction. She was sent for by her master and congratulated on the change in the preparation, whereupon she answered quietly: "Please, sir, it is not the making I have changed, but the coffee. You require chicory with your coffee, that's all!" I believe nothing short of ocular demonstration satisfied her master that it was actually the purity of his home made coffee that disgusted him.—London Queen.

PHILADELPHIA'S SUGAR TRADE.

Shipping men have kept a close watch on the imports of sugar here since the Sugar Trust secured possession of all the Philadelphia refineries, and are determined that no discrimination shall deprive this city of her rightful proportion of the trade. Last year Philadelphia showed a handsome gain, but so far this year there has been a falling off in her percentage, owing largely, it is believed, to the partial blockade of the port by the ice for quite a time. The following tables give the imports for the four ports for 1891 and 1892 and for 1892 and 1893 during the period from January 1 to February 23:

Port	1891.		1892.
	Tons.	Per ct.	Tons.	Per ct.
New York.	824,081	53.69	727,190	51.87

Philadelphia	491,396	32.01	484,986	34.60
Baltimore .	25,849	1.68

Total.... 1,534,987 100.00 1,401,779 100.00

Port	1892.		1893.
	Tons.	Per ct.	Tons.	Per ct.
New York.	84,814	50.96	102,784	55.24
Boston.....	21,952	13.19	22,824	12.27
Philadelphia	59,662	35.85	60,456	32.49
Baltimore...

Total.... 166,428 100.00 186,066 100.00

It will be noticed that, while the imports for Philadelphia are slightly greater this year than last for the same period, the city's percentage is smaller. With the opening next summer of the McCahan refinery, which will have a capacity of not far from 2,000 barrels daily, it is expected that this city's share of the sugar receipts of the Atlantic coast will be fully 40 per cent.—Philadelphia "Record."

THE SHERRY WINE TRADE.

Writing to the Leeds Mercury, a correspondent says: For some years past the sale of sherry wines has fallen off to an alarming extent in Great Britain, and therefore anything which may be reported with respect to these wines, by an able authority, ought to receive the fullest consideration and study. Mr. Consul Hall, of Jerez de la Frontera, who, to the present writer's knowledge, possesses an intimate acquaintance with the cellars of all the principal shipping houses in Jerez, certifies in an official report to the United States Government that to none of the principal shippers can be imputed the charge of adulteration or falsification in the preparation of either their wines or brandies. In view of the great falling off which has taken place in the sales of sherry wines in England of late years, I take the opportunity of quoting Consul Hall's report freely, for the information of the members of the English wine trade.

Consul Hall states that it is notorious that the true and reputed wines produced in the district of Jerez de la Frontera require a long and most careful breeding, with the object of bringing them to that state of perfection which prepares them for use and exportation, and gives them those peculiar qualities so esteemed by connoisseurs, which qualities are enhanced by time. During the time of such breeding, sherries suffer certain ullages, principally in their watery component, thereby concentrating their chief attributes, which constitute their essence or extract, and increasing the alcoholic strength as the result of nature's phenomena, the desiderata of which is as yet ignored even by the most intelligent in the matter. Hence a must which, after fermentation, would be found to contain not more than two grammes of sulphate of potash per litre, would shortly after exceed such limit, and more than duplicate—even triplicate—it when from must it has reached the state when considered as old wine. Again, even though, as an object of discussion it be admitted that the sulphate of potash be in any way noxious as existent in sherry wines, it must be borne in mind that, as the juice of the grape is passing from must to wine, and increasing in age develops its alcoholic strength, in like manner are developed its characteristic strength as well as aromatic and spirituous principles. Hence it is impossible to consume such wines in the quantities and with such freedom as occurs with new and light wines; and, as regards the physiological effects which may be attributed to the sulphate of potash, such are decidedly modified, if not completely neutralized, by the tonical action of the other principles of sherry wines.

It may be mentioned that while in Spain the ordinary consumption of light wines is quite one bottle per person per day, the consumption of mature sherries does not reach per day one quarter of that quantity. Hence we may take it that the amount of sulphate of potash imbibed by those drinking mature sherry would be insignificant, and if insignificant, comparatively harmless.

Consul Hall asserts that to all those who are truly cognisant of what they see, it is an established and undeniable fact that, among other wines, pure, mature sherries have that attribute of absolute individuality which pre-eminently distinguishes them from wines produced in other countries, which, open to adulteration, inundate all the markets of the world, to the prejudice of sherry, "fiat lux profecta;" and he stoutly asserts that all charges or accusations against sherries will of their own instability fall to the ground.

In view of the extensive use which was made of sherry in England up to within a few years ago, it is surprising to see the smallness of present sales; and the more so inasmuch as it is universally admitted that the sherries which have been placed upon the English market for some time past are both excellent in quality and exceedingly cheap in price. Fashion goes for much—in wines as in everything else. Ports are more in vogue, and there is no reason why sherries should not also gain a sudden popularity. In any case, the sherries now being offered are excellent value; and it is astonishing in the highest degree that people should be prepared to pay the most extortionate prices for champagnes, while some other wines, which are admitted by all connoisseurs to be exceedingly fine, and at the same time distinctly moderate in quotation, should be practically left entirely on one side.

NORTH ESSEX WINE INDUSTRY.

The manufacturers of grape wines in North Essex are interested in the provisions of the recent commercial treaty between France and Canada, as it is expected that wines will come in at a nominal sum. It is said that the duty will not amount to fifty cents per case, and it may be less. The London Free Press says that if such proves to be the case it will practically ruin the wine industry in Essex and Pelee Island, as when people recognize that they can get the genuine French article at the same price as native, they will not use anything but the imported article. The provisions of the treaty have not been ratified, and a deputation will likely go down to Ottawa from Essex. The grape-wine industry of the county is something enormous, hundreds of thousands of gallons being manufactured every year and having a ready sale all over the Dominion.
